CARDINGTON AIRDROME, Aug. 16.—Britain hailed the R-100 on her return home today from her successful voyage to Canada. When the dirigible was moored at 12:02 P. M., British Summer Time (7:02 A. M., New York Time), she had been in the air for 57 hours and 5 minutes.

Wing Commander R. B. B. Colmore, Director of Airship Development, who piloted the airship, had hoped to complete the 3,200-mile journey in fifty hours, but adverse winds and rain over the Atlantic delayed the progress of the R-100, so that what had seemed a likely chance of bettering the record for the eastward crossing was unfortunately lost. The fastest Atlantic crossing by a lighter-than-air craft was made by the Graf Zeppelin in August, 1929, when she flew from Lakehurst, N. J., to Friedrichshafen, Germany, a distance of 4,200 miles, in 55 hours and 24 minutes.

Lookout Man Sights Ship.

In addition to officials and the airdrome staff, many others had kept a night long vigil because yesterday it was believed the airship might be in sight of her home port by midnight. Later reports of the delay, when the airship encountered depressions, put the probable time of her arrival ahead to 9 A. M., British Summer Time.

An increasing sense of expectancy was felt from the time the R-100 reported herself safely across the ocean at Fastnet Light, off the southwest Irish coast, just before 4 A. M. Subsequent reports that the dirigible was over Lundy Island, the Bristol Channel and Bristol itself, flying direct to Cardington, kept all intently scanning the horizon.

The first to sight the airship was the lookout man, with a telescope, in the crow's nest at the top of the mooring mast. When the cry of "There she is!" went up, every one about the airdrome below began to cheer. For there, above the westward horizon, the small silvery form could just be made out against the background of low-lying clouds. It was then 10:45 A. M., British Summer Time (5:45 A. M., New York Time).

With her nose picked out by the brilliant sunshine of a perfect Summer day and pointing slightly downward, the R-100 moved slowly on her course towards Bedford, still keeping the position which had been taken because of the manoeuvering in the headwind. Instead of proceeding directly to the mooring mast, the airship intended to take a wide circle around it and then to return, heading directly into the wind.

Two Planes Act as Escorts.

On she came, appearing gradually to increase in size, and presently the faint hum of her engines was heard. She flew gracefully and steadily over the town of Bedford and eastward beyond the airdrome. Then she turned about and was seen as a silver disk coming back to the mooring mast.

As the vessel again took the form of an airship, cloud shadows could be seen across the shimmering surface of the envelope. Two airplanes, which had kept a lookout for the R-100 since 10 A. M., escorted her to the mast.

As the dirigible came nearer, the drone of her motors, which at first suggested the rumbling of far-away thunder, filled the air. The crowds, which had grown steadily from an early hour, laughed at the sight of a rabbit, frightened by the unexpected roar from above, scampering across the wide meadow about the mooring tower.

A strong breeze helped the descending airship to come slowly up to her mooring. At 11:35 A. M., British Summer Time (6:35 A. M. New York Time) a long cable was dropped from the nose of the R-100 and was taken by the ground crew and secured to the steel hawser of the mast.

The crowds cheered and waved their handkerchiefs as the work of mooring was begun, and in just under half an hour the task was completed.

With the giant craft riding on an even keel at the tower, the first aboard her were customs officers to

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Aug. 16.—The Belgrade-Zagreb express crashed at full speed into a crowd of people watching a fireworks display in connection with a religious festival just outside Zagreb tonight. Twelve men and women were killed and forty-five so seriously injured that they may die.

To get a better view of the unusual spectacle hundreds of peasants had clambered on to the railroad tracks and were so absorbed in watching the set pieces and exploding rockets that they did not hear the train approaching around a curve. In a mad panic to escape some actually ran into the engine.

BELGRADE, Aug. 16.—It is reported from Sofia that the Orient express train en route to Istanbul struck a number of empty freight cars last night near Sofia. The train was derailed and two freight cars smashed.

HOOVER KEEN TO HELP COMMERCIAL FLYING

IMPRESSED BY AIR TRAVEL

LURAY, Va., Aug. 16.—Desiring to extend all the government aid possible to the airplane industry to maintain the United States in the foremost position in that field, President Hoover heard today at his Rapidan Camp suggestions with that end in view from Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, F. Trubee Davison, Assistant Secretary of War for Aviation; David S. Ingalls, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics; Major Clarence M. Young, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Aeronautics, and Warren I. Glover, Second Assistant Postmaster General, in charge of air mail.

Told of Industry's Growth.

The President was told that commercial aviation in this country has been developed far beyond that of any other nation and that in it more miles are flown commercially every year than in the rest of the world combined. He was informed that 200,000 passengers are carried annually and that aircraft manufacturers can produce 7,000 planes yearly, although the present output is only about one-half that quantity.

A feature of the conference was understood to have been the relation of commercial aviation to national defense and the utilization of commercial planes in times of national emergency, just as passenger and freight ships are used an auxiliaries of the navy. Captain Charles Russell Train, the President's naval aide, and Colonel Campbell Hodges, his military aide, were guests at the camp and were said to have listened to this part of the discussion.

Another subject was said to have been the extension of government aid, through increased mail contracts, to air routes planned for this country and between the United States and Latin America.

Figures Impress President.

The reduction of the annual output to approximately 3,500 planes was said to have impressed the President, who expressed the wish to have the government do what it could to restore the industry to its normal status, even though it is still ahead of that of other countries.

Close studies were made of the condition of commercial aviation and particular emphasis was laid on the government's policy toward this part of the industry. Concrete suggestions as to the best means of government cooperation were made and notes were made by the President with a view to further inquiry.

STIMSON IS SLATED AS CONVENTION HEAD BY STATE LEADERS

Secretary Favored by the Wets and Drys as Keynoter and Permanent Chairman.

ACCEPTANCE HELD LIKELY

Republicans Weigh Presence of Hoover Aide as Bearing on Prohibition Fight.

SPLIT APPEARS IN KINGS

Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, who holds the highest official position of any New York State Republican, has been suggested for chairman of the Republican State Convention, it was learned yesterday. His selection is expected and he may be named as both temporary and permanent chairman of the convention.

The selection of Secretary Stimson, it is believed, will be satisfactory to both wets and drys and enable the convention to hurdle prohibition at the outset and leave the fight over the question in the committee on resolutions and on the floor of the convention after its organization. Mr. Stimson, if picked to make the "keynote" speech, will be in a position to refrain from more than passing reference to prohibition, if he wishes, and to discuss international and national as well as State issues.

Republicans in the State organization also see an advantage in naming the leading member of the Hoover Cabinet to preside over the convention, which will meet in Albany on Sept. 25 and 26. The convention undoubtedly will be conducted with an eye to the Presidential election of 1932. The fight over prohibition, which certainly will be carried to the floor of the convention, may be decided in Washington, it was said, and a request from the President not to adopt a plank declaring for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment probably would be the determining factor in the contest.

Estimates on Net Strength.

Delegates to the convention, 991 in number, have been picked in the sixty-two counties, although not all have been designated formally, and the contests for election as delegate are so few that it has been possible for persons interested to get a line on how the convention will stand on prohibition, if subjected to no pressure from the outside.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, one of the leading advocates of a repeal plank, has estimated the probable repeal strength in the convention at from 60 to 70 per cent. A canvass by another Republican of prominence has indicated that the wet strength in the convention will be less than Dr. Butler's estimate and that the convention will be nearly evenly divided, with the wets having a slight preponderance. This estimate of a small wet majority for a repeal plank has taken into account the influence of State Chairman William J. Maier, who has been working to prevent the adoption of a repeal plank, but has not taken account of intervention from Washington. It is the belief that a request from the President would upset this apparently small wet majority, now indicated, and prevent the adoption of a declaration for repeal.

Republican advocates of repeal have seen this Washington influence in the recent reported reversal of his position on prohibition on the part of Meier Steinbrink, Brooklyn leader. Mr. Steinbrink was formerly a director of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, but resigned this position upon his election as a party leader. He directed a poll of the members of the Brooklyn Republican organization, which showed the members of the county committee in

Britain Calls on Bulgaria to Curb the Imro And End Its Reign of Terror in Macedonia

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SOFIA, Aug. 16.—The British Minister here, Sydney Waterlow, received by King Boris in special audience, expressed in friendly but firm language Great Britain's anxiety concerning the continued activities of Imro [the Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Organization], particularly its attempts to conduct "a State within a State" by ruling Bulgarian Macedonia through terrorist decrees in defiance of the Bulgarian Government.

Mr. Waterlow expressed in Britain's name a hope to see energetic and determined measures taken to suppress the activities of the Komitajis.

A similar démarche was made officially by Mr. Waterlow to Foreign Minister Buroff, calling upon the government to suppress Macedonian terrorism.

The knowledge that this demand was pending probably was responsible for the issue this week, at the behest of Professor Tsankoff, Minister of the Interior, of a warrant for the arrest of the Macedonian leader, Ivan Mihailoff, on a charge of murdering Professor Tsankoff's old friend, General Protogeroff, some years ago. General Protogeroff himself was a Macedonian revolutionary, but of a more moderate complexion.

Yesterday's Results in Sports

Jim Dandy, a 100-to-1 shot, owned by Chaffee Earl, scored the biggest turf upset of the year yesterday at the Saratoga race track, defeating Gallant Fox and Whichone in the historic Travers Stakes, worth $27,050. Gallant Fox, hailed as the 3-year-old champion, went to the post the favorite at 1 to 2, with Whichone the second choice. It had been considered a two-horse race. Governor Roosevelt was among the 30,000 persons at the track.

Victor Kliesrath of Port Washington, L. I., won the twenty-eighth annual Gold Cup speed boat race at Red Bank, N. J., driving his Hotsy Totsy at an average of better than fifty-two miles an hour in three heats of thirty miles each.

England captured two first places at the opening of the British Empire Games at Hamilton, Ont., with a crowd of 15,000 present. Messages were read from King George and the Prince of Wales wishing success for the games.

The Giants defeated the Reds twice, 9 to 1 and 3 to 2, drawing within one percentage point of the second-place Robins, who divided a double-header with the Pirates, winning the opener 7 to 5 and losing the night-cap, 6 to 2. The Cubs beat the Phils, 10 to 9, and then played to a 3-3 tie in eleven innings in their second game, which was called on account of darkness. The Cubs' margin is now two and one-half games. The Yankees-White Sox game was called off in the fourth inning on account of rain.

A PATIENT THERE 8 MONTHS

William E. Swift, 35 years old, son of Louis F. Swift, president of Swift & Co., Chicago meat packers, shot and killed himself at 10:15 o'clock last night in the private sanitarium of Dr. Edward S. Cowles at 591 Park Avenue. He had been a patient there for the past eight months, according to the police, and had been under treatment for brain inflammation, alcoholism and pneumonia.

A few minutes before he shot himself in the chest with a .38 calibre Colt revolver, he had attempted to jump out of the window of his private ward on the top floor of the five-story building but was restrained forcibly by his nurse, Rudolph Heitmanek of 207 West Seventy-eighth Street.

Detectives Cornelius Connolly and Howard O'Shaughnessy of the East Sixty-seventh Street station, who investigated the case, said Heitmanek forced Mr. Swift back into bed and then resumed his seat in a chair in the room. Mr. Swift suddenly drew the pistol he had hidden in his bedclothes and fired the shot that ended his life. Assistant Medical Examiner Fisher officially pronounced the case a suicide.

Husband of Former Helen Morton.

Mr. Swift was the husband of the former Helen Morton, daughter of Mark Morton, the salt magnate. Known in society as "Billy," he quit the packing business in 1924, when his father set him and his brother, Louis, up in the brokerage business in Chicago. His home was on Ridge Road, Lake Forest, Ill., but the address he gave upon being admitted to the sanitarium here was "care of Swift & Co., Chicago."

The police were at a loss to discover in what manner the patient obtained the pistol, which had been fully loaded.

Examination showed that the bullet had gone through the heart. The body was later removed to the Morgue.

It was explained at the hospital that Mr. Swift was permitted to come and go at will. He last went outdoors two days ago and the police think that he may have obtained the weapon at that time.

Last night, before he retired, a nurse named Miss Engel saw the bistol butt protruding from what appeared to be a holster under his armpit. She informed Dr. Cowles and he directed the male nurse to be on the look-out and to take the weapon away from the patient after he had fallen asleep.

A prepared statement was read to newspaper men at the sanitarium by a member of Dr. Cowles's staff. This statement was similar to one issued by the Swift family in Chicago, except that it contained the additional information that Mr. Swift's recovery from the attack of pneumonia, with which he was stricken a few weeks ago, was slow "and this is believed to have caused his depression."

It was on the same floor of this sanitarium that Jeanne Eagels, star of "Rain" and other theatrical and motion picture successes, died on the night of Oct. 3, 1929. Miss Eagels was seized with a convulsion just as she was preparing for one of her regular examinations.

Ill Two Years, Family Says.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—The family of William E. Swift, youngest son of Louis F. Swift, president of Swift & Co., Chicago packers, issued the following statement here tonight:

"William E. Swift, youngest son of Louis F. Swift, president of Swift & Co., shot and killed himself in a private hospital at 591 Park Avenue, New York.

"Despondency from a long period of ill health was the cause. He had been ill for two years. Last October he went to the hospital where he committed suicide.

"Recently he was making progress toward recovery, when stricken several weeks ago with pneumonia.

"He is survived by one son, William, 5 years old; his father, who is now in Europe; two brothers, Alden, who is now in Chicago, and Louis F. Jr., and a sister, Mrs. James Minotto.

CITY HAILS LIPTON, HERE FOR CUP RACE

SALUTES DROWN HIS VOICE

So He Speaks on Radio Again as He Reaches Battery, Where He Landed as Immigrant in 1867.

Trim and erect, slightly tanned and full of witty sallies, the world's most inveterate yachtsman arrived here yesterday on the United States liner Leviathan to try for the fifth time in thirty-one years to "take that old mug back where it belongs."

That was Sir Thomas Lipton's way of saying he hopes to win the America's Cup, but yesterday, amid the blast of whistles, the shriek of sirens and the cheers of welcomers who went down the harbor on the yacht Macom to extend to him the city's official greeting, he avoided any expression of certainty that he would capture the classic trophy.

His contender, the Shamrock V., now in New London, is a "good boat," he told a radio audience stretching around the globe; he "hopes that she will be successful"; but, he concluded with the sportsmanship of a man who has remained undaunted after seeing yacht after yacht defeated, "May the best boat win." And if the Shamrock V fails, neither five defeats nor his eighty years of age would bring discouragement, he said, declaring "If I lose, I'll come back again as soon as possible."

Macom Reaches Liner in Fog.

The Macom drew alongside the Leviathan in a fog at 8:30 A. M. Passengers lined the rails overhead and the sirens of the yacht and of police boats mingled with the brassy strains of the Fire Department Band aboard the Macom as a gangplank was lowered. Four members of the reception committee boarded the liner, followed a few minutes later by Grover Whalen, the committee chairman, who had been delayed and arrived in a police launch.

After a delay incident to greetings and the formalities of customs inspectors, cheers arose as the yachtsman appeared on the gangplank. He paused there at the request of a battery of cameramen, saluted them, lifted a frayed blue yachting cap, nodded and smiled. He wore, as usual, a blue suit, wing collar and broad blue polka dot tie.

Unsuccessful efforts of Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, who went down on the Macom to greet his sons, Leo, James and Paul, to take their baggage off on the yacht, occasioned ten minutes' delay, during which Sir Thomas stood and chatted on the foredeck. When Miss Mary Curley, daughter of the Mayor, who had accompanied her father, was introduced to Sir Thomas, he said:

"I have always believed that Boston has the most intelligent people—they threw the tea overboard when they found it wasn't Lipton's."

"We are waiting here for Mr. Whalen, so that the photographers can take you together," a member of the reception committee told him.

Mr. Whalen was helping Mayor Curley.

"Where is he?" asked Sir Thomas. "Is he swimming here?"

Someone offered him a chair, but he declined it. Someone else suggested that he go below and rest.

"I don't want to hide," said the yachtsman.

Assured by another that Mr. Whalen "would be here any minute," he asked:

"Is he walking or coming by bus?"

From the decks overhead came the repeated shout, "We hope you win." Sir Thomas beamed upon the crowd of reporters, cameramen and committeemen. "This as a different reception than when I landed here as an immigrant 17 years old," he said. "Now I'm getting to be a devil of a fellow."

Told that he would land near the site of Castle Gardens, where he first

FREAK HAIL STORM HITS CITY, BATTERS NEW ENGLAND CROPS

$1,000,000 TOBACCO RUINED

STREETS IN CITY FLOODED

Sun Shines at Battery During Midtown Storm—Two Feet of Water in Worcester.

A severe electrical storm which swept down the Connecticut River Valley, leaving death and ruin behind it, struck upper Manhattan and the Bronx late yesterday afternoon, killing one man, drenching thousands and all but sending the bow of the Albert Ballin, which was docking, into the hull of the Leviathan at her North River Pier.

The storm was a freakish one. Severe as it was, the Government Weather Bureau had no data upon it, for, although in midtown a torrential rain fell and a gale blew, the sun was shining at the Battery, where the meteorological station is located on top of the Whitehall Building.

The storm showed the same characteristics in Southwestern Massachusetts and Central Connecticut, where four men were killed by lightning and damage of more than $1,000,000 was done to the ripening tobacco crop and to merchandise stored in cellars in Worcester, Mass., where the sewers backed up and shot manhole covers five feet into the air. Sweeping toward New York it cut a swath down the Connecticut River Valley, leaving fields and towns outside its sharply defined boundaries untouched.

Huge Hailstones Fall in Midtown.

In the midtown section of Manhattan rain fell in sheets and was lashed into spindrift by a gale which dashed hailstones the size of marbles against windows with sufficient force to break one in a drugstore at Forty-second Street and Vanderbilt Avenue. Further downtown the downpour tapered off into a drizzle at Fourteenth Street and overcast skies as far south as Worth Street, below which the sun was shining feebly.

Farmers in the Cape May section of New Jersey plodded through hailstones that were nearly ankle deep this morning after a local storm hit there. Crops which had been threatened by the prolonged drought were ruined in many cases by the hailstones, some of which were as big as walnuts.

Fishing boats caught off the Rockaways in the rain and hail and wind reported some difficulty in making port, but at Coney Island 250,000 bathers knew nothing of the storm. East New York reported light rains and downtown Brooklyn had a little sprinkle, but clear weather prevailed elsewhere in the borough.

In West New York, N. J., the steeple of St. John's Lutheran Church was struck by lighting, which pierced the slate roof, but in Jersey City, near by, the sun was shining through a cloud. Rye, Pelham and City Island were in the storm's path, but towns across the Sound were not touched.

Severe as it was, the storm was short-lived. It was all over within fifteen minutes after it started, but in those few minutes it is likely that more rain fell per square inch than has fallen in the last month and a half. The loss of life and damage were unusually heavy.

Three men who had taken refuge in a tobacco-drying shed near Windsor, Conn., and a carpenter working on a house near Framingham, Mass.,

City Police Alarm System To Be Extended to Suburbs

The telegraph writing system maintained by the police here to broadcast alarms will soon be extended to include points outside the five boroughs but within the metropolitan area, it was announced yesterday by Police Commissioner Mulrooney. Within a few days important alarms emanating from Manhattan headquarters will go out simultaneously to the New Jersey State Police Headquarters in Newark, to police stations in Nassau County and to Mount Vernon, Yonkers and Mamaroneck in Westchester County, he said.

Widening of the territory reached by the New York police alarms had been requested by the police of outlying communities, he said. The change is expected to be of benefit in apprehending criminals seeking to escape from New York. Eventually, he declared, the system will be extended to either Stamford or Greenwich, Conn., whence the alarms can be rebroadcast to other Connecticut points.

ALLOTS $121,875,000 AS DROUGHT RELIEF

Hyde Makes Federal Roads Fund Available to States to Provide Employment.

GOVERNORS NAME BOARDS

President and Agricultural Secretary Now Concerned Over Saving Montana Cattle.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—The Federal Government took its first major step in carrying out its part of the nine-point program for drought relief today when Secretary Hyde authorized the immediate apportionment of $121,875,000 of Federal funds for highway improvement in the several States and Hawaii for the next fiscal year.

This will enable the States to advance their road-building programs and provide employment for farmers who have been or may be left destitute by the destruction of their crops. Under the usual procedure the funds would not have been allocated until Jan. 1, 1931. Each State must appropriate for the same work an amount equal to that received from Washington. Congress appropriated $125,000,000 for road aid, but Secretary Hyde deducted 2½ per cent for administrative expenses.

Conditions of Allotments.

The Secretary made it plain that his department would "use its own discretion" as to approval of the various State projects, so that the sections most heavily affected by the drought will be benefited, and laid down the following conditions:

"That the State has obtained and has under construction all or practically all of the Federal aid funds previously allotted.

"That State funds be required for each project in an amount sufficient to meet the Federal aid funds on the legally established basis. This would not exclude the voluntary contribution of additional county or local funds, but would require the State itself to provide a minimum amount equal to the Federal pro-rate required, basically 50 per cent Federal funds.

"That the State Highway Department submit with each project a statement showing that the project, if expedited, would assist in providing employment in the drought areas or would directly contribute to the relief of unemployment in a substantial way."

Although emergency road work is expected to be done in only those States suffering from unemployment and from the drought, the apportionment included all the States, with the

BAR ASKS GOVERNOR TO ACT ON CHARGES JUDGESHIPS ARE SOLD

THOMAS ISSUES APPEAL

Says Crain Inquiry Has Proved That Local Agencies to Curb Graft Have Broken Down.

PROSECUTOR DENIES LAXITY

Says Investigation Could Not Have Been More Thorough—Speeds Records to Roosevelt.

A sweeping investigation by Governor Roosevelt of "charges so frequently made" of a widespread system of corruption in appointments of magistrates was urged yesterday by officials of the Association of the Bar, as District Attorney Crain moved to comply with the Governor's request that he send him all papers and records in the Ewald case. United States Attorney Tuttle pressed his own investigation in the matter by issuing a large number of subpoenas. He said, however, that he would be glad to cooperate with the Governor.

Governor Roosevelt himself made no further move pending receipt of the papers from Mr. Crain. It was expected these will be in the Governor's hands by tomorrow evening.

When it was pointed out that the demand of the Bar Association for a general inquiry into the system of appointments of magistrates goes beyond the situation involved in the Ewald case, the Governor sent word that the two problems were linked and that for this reason he would venture no statement until he has an opportunity to study the Ewald records.

The bar officials who urged the sweeping inquiry upon the Governor were Charles C. Burlingham, president of the bar association, and Kenneth M. Spence, chairman of the association's committee on criminal law and procedure.

Special Grand Jury Asked.

They suggested that the Governor call a special grand jury and appoint special counsel to conduct his investigation. The Association of the Bar, they declared, would be glad to aid in such an inquiry.

Both Mr. Burlingham and Mr. Spence declared that the investigation conducted by District Attorney Crain and which resulted in the county grand jury's refusal to find an indictment in the allegations that Ewald purchased his appointment "has not been sufficiently thorough."

The charge that widespread corruption prevails in judicial and other law appointments was repeated last night by Dr. Stephen S. Wise of the Free Synagogue, whose demand for an investigation of the Ewald case preceded the action of the Governor.

From Lake Placid, where he is spending his vacation, Rabbi Wise greeted with enthusiasm the action of the Governor in calling for the records in the case. Dr. Wise said that in calling for action by the Governor he was actuated by motives of public interest involved not only in the Ewald matter but also in "many more instances, in recent months, of polluting control of officers of the law by political partisanship."

"The public believes, and reasonably so, that judicial and other law appointments are dictated almost uniformly, not on the basis of merit, but by the financial greed of appointive powers, which are secret and, therefore, without responsibility," he declared.

Thomas Demands Wide Inquiry.

At the same time a wide investigation of New York City affairs, involving not only the minor judiciary but all city departments, was demanded also by Norman Thomas and Louis Waldman, co-chairman of the Socialist party's committee on public affairs. Mr. Thomas is the Socialist candidate for Representative in the Sixth Congressional District in Brooklyn, while Mr. Waldman is his party's Gubernatorial candidate.

In a letter to the Governor they declared that his action in the Ewald case "has been long overdue" and that this case only serves to emphasize the need for a comprehensive investigation.

The suggestion by Mr. Burlingham, later concurred in by Mr. Spence, was made in commenting upon a telegram received by the former from Bernard Deutsch, former president of the Bronx Bar Association, declaring that "outraged public opinion demands that an impartial inquiry into the facts concerning the appointment of Magistrate Ewald be forthwith conducted" and urging the bar association and the New York County Lawyers Association to begin such an inquiry.

"I feel that the investigation by the grand jury of the county and the District Attorney has not been sufficiently thorough," said Mr. Burlingham. "The question is not whether

Endurance Plane, 641 Hours Aloft, Goes On; Fliers Complain of Lack of Monetary Reward

By The Associated Press.

ST. LOUIS, Sunday, Aug. 17.—The endurance plane Greater St. Louis, piloted by Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brine, completed 641 hours in the air at 12:11 A. M., Central Time [2:11 New York Time] and continued to circle Lambert-St. Louis Field with the former world's refueling flight record of the Hunter brothers exceeded by ninety hours.

If they are still up early tomorrow morning, the airmen will have rounded out four weeks of their projected flight of 1,000 hours. Though they had reported both themselves and their motor unwearied, the question of finances was beginning to worry them as they rode into their twenty-eighth day aloft.

During the night both fliers dropped notes complaining of the small monetary returns from the flight to date. O'Brine's note suggested that "we are just flying for our health," adding "we had just as well land and give some one else a chance."

Jackson expressed the fear that he "might stick to flying and starve to death," but was more hopeful that after the thirty-day mark had been passed "the big dough would roll in."

Officials at the airport responded with notes urging the team to stay in the air. Four contracts, amounting to $23,000, have been signed for appearances of the fliers at State fairs in Iowa, Minnesota, Ohio and Indiana.

Jackson showed interest in the contracts by upbraiding the ground crew for turning down an offer of $1,000 to endorse a cigarette brand, which neither flier smokes.

"We could use them for that much money," Jackson said.

"Have you guys gone crazy? Get that dough and never mind whether we smoke them or not. Let us know what's going on down there and don't turn down any money. If any stage or movie contracts come in let us see them or know about it. Never mind about sticking to flying."

a particular person is guilty of the violation of the statute, but whether there is, as is so frequently charged, an established system of contributions made by candidates for the magistracy. This calls for a very searching inquiry.

"The bar association not having the powers of subpoena would not be able to carry an investigation through successfully, but it stands ready to aid the Governor in any such investigation. It seems to me that the situation calls for the appointment of a special grand jury and special counsel by the Governor to undertake such an inquiry and carry it through to the end."

"I am entirely in agreement with Mr. Burlingham," said Mr. Spence. "Such an investigation should take place. Only a special grand jury could undertake such an investigation."

Socialist's Letter to Governor.

The letter addressed by Mr. Thomas and Mr. Waldman to Governor Roosevelt follows:

Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt,
Albany, N. Y.

Your action on the Ewald-Healy matter in response to the request of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise is to be commended. Intervention by you as Governor has been long overdue. The procedure of District Attorney Crain in the Ewald matter has served to strengthen our conviction, shared by masses of New York citizens, that any investigation by a Tammany official into Tammany corruption must be in the nature of a whitewash. If the procedure of the New York County District Attorney's office is any indication, all the inquiries now being conducted by the Commissioner of Accounts into various city departments will also result in a whitewash.

Some time ago, in a letter to you, the Socialist party pointed out the need for a thoroughgoing State investigation, multi-partisan, and with far-reaching powers and adequate investigating staff, into the wholesale corruption of New York City Government, of which the scandals in the magistrates' courts, the Board of Standards, the Dock Department, the Department of Markets, the Bureau of Weights and Measures and the probation office of the Court of Special Sessions are examples.

Your answer to our request was that the Governor of the State had no right to investigate local affairs unless it had been demonstrated that the "local inquisitorial machinery had broken down." We submit that the result of the District Attorney's handling of the Ewald matter has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that this has happened. It is therefore more imperative now than ever that you take the initiative in launching a State investigation which will root out the corruption in New York City public life.

NORMAN THOMAS,
LOUIS WALDMAN,
Chairmen, Committee on Public Affairs of the Socialist Party.

Crain Speeds Papers to Governor.

Governor Roosevelt's request for all papers and records in the Ewald case was telephoned to Mr. Crain at his home in West Hampton, L. I., by Assistant District Attorney Unger, who was instructed by Mr. Crain to telegraph immediately to the Governor that his request would be complied with some time on Monday. All testimony and photostatic copies of bank records will be forwarded to the Governor.

At the same time Mr. Crain let it be known that he will go before Judge William Allen in General Sessions on Monday and ask for permission to send copies of the grand jury minutes to the Governor and to United States Attorney Tuttle, who has also asked for them. A third copy of the minutes may be requested, Mr. Crain said, to be given to the press. He added, however, that he had not definitely made up his mind on the last procedure, but would decide Monday. Mr. Crain said he was inclined to believe that public interest in the matter warranted publication of the minutes.

Defends Handling of Case.

In making these plans known, Mr. Crain took occasion to defend his conduct of the Ewald investigation and to reply to the attack of Rabbi Wise upon the conduct of the inquiry in his demand upon the Governor for a State inquiry. It was upon receipt of a telegram from Dr. Wise embodying his demand that the Governor addressed his request to Mr. Crain.

"Rabbi Wise's telegram is well worded, prepared by a skillful writer, who very likely is sincere, but is entirely mistaken in his outlook," said Mr. Crain.

"Of course, as I prepared the Ewald case, it hardly lies with me to praise myself, but it could not have been presented by any one with greater clarity, with more completeness or with more honesty. Perusal of the record will convince any sincere doubter."

Tuttle Offers to Aid Governor.

Mr. Crain declared that he stands ready to cooperate with the Governor in any further inquiry. A similar pledge of cooperation was made by Mr. Tuttle, who, in a message from Lake George, where he is spending the week-end, declared that copies of the Federal grand jury minutes in the investigation preceding that of Mr. Crain will be submitted to the Governor, if he so desires.

William J. Maier, chairman of the New York State Republican Committee, when reached by telephone last night at Seneca Falls, N. Y., indicated that the Republicans were still willing to confer upon the Governor whatever powers he would require for a New York City investigation if he would call a special session of the Legislature.

Mr. Maier said:

"The leaders of the Legislature, of course, would themselves have to determine what course they would pursue. My private opinion is that they would still be glad to confer upon the Governor all the power he might need to clean up the situation in New York City, if he chooses to avail himself of their previous offer to act, if he will convoke the Legislature. I do not believe, however, that the Republican majority of the Legislature would consider restricting their action to an isolated case such as the Governor now seems to be interested in."

Alvin McKinley Sylvester, Assistant United States Attorney, announced that a large number of subpoenas have been issued by Mr. Tuttle for the principals in the Ewald case. Neither Mr. Tuttle nor Mr. Sylvester would reveal off the persons summoned. He announced, however, that the list included Mrs. Ewald, Peter Eckert, her father; Martin J. Healy, Tammany leader of the Nineteenth Assembly District and suspended Deputy Commissioner of Plant and Structures, and Thomas T. Tommaney, chief clerk in the office of Sheriff Farley. The subpoenas are returnable on Wednesday. All four will be taken before the Federal grand jury and questioned again concerning the $10,000 loan made by Mrs. Ewald through Tommaney to Healy on the eve of Ewald's appointment as a magistrate on April 30, 1927.

On their previous appearance before the Federal Grand Jury, Mrs. Ewald, Healy and Tommaney refused to testify on the ground that it might tend to degrade or incriminate them. On Wednesday they will be asked to explain why they fell back upon this plea, when shortly thereafter they revealed to Mr. Crain and to the county grand jury what outwardly appears as an innocuous deal.

Silence of Mrs. Ewald Attacked.

Mrs. Ewald in particular will be asked by Mr. Tuttle, it was learned, why she invoked the State law forbidding barter of offices when refusing to testify. She will be asked to explain the contradiction between this plea and her contention, backed by Healy and Tommaney in Mr. Crain's investigation, that no violation of the law occurred in the making of the loan. Neither Mr. Tuttle nor Mr. Sylvester would say yesterday whether he had in mind possible prosecution for perjury or contempt of court.

Mr. Tuttle also will have before him on Wednesday the subpoenaed bank records of Mrs. Ewald, her husband, Healy, Tommaney and others, which he intends to use in his effort to establish the authenticity of the alleged loan.

More Healy Deposits Found.

An examination of Healy's deposits in the Corn Exchange Bank for the first five months of 1927 has thus far revealed deposits of $20,000.

It has also been found that between April and August, 1927, Healy deposited $21,000, including one deposit of $5,000 in August. It has not yet been established, however, to what extent the $20,000 and $21,000 totals overlap. It has been ascertained, however, that included in these deposits is the $10,000 loan from Mrs. Ewald, made in two instalments, $5,000 on April 27 and $5,000 on May 4. The bank records are said to show that at the time Healy made the $10,000 loan for the purchase, as he claimed, of his Summer home in Blue Point, L. I., the price of which was $8,500, he had $10,000 of his own money in the bank. The records are also said to show that Healy was depositing money at the rate of $51,000 a year. His home was not paid for until October, 1927.

Asked yesterday whether Mr. Crain had had at his disposal, together with the Federal grand jury minutes, copies of bank deposit slips relating to Healy and the Ewalds, Mr. Sylvester said:

Says Crain Had Bank Records.

"When I saw Mr. Crain the day Emmerich Boczor was examined Judge Crain asked for Healy's deposit slips and a transcript of his account; also for those of Mrs. Ewald. First he asked for photostats, then for the originals, which were accordingly in his possession when he conducted his grand jury investigation."

Boczor, former confidential secretary to Ewald, told both the Federal and county grand juries that he had heard Ewald say that he paid $12,000 for his appointment—$10,000 to Healy and $2,000 to Dr. Francis M. Schirp, a member of the Steuben Society. He also testified that Dr. Schirp had boasted that he "made Ewald a judge." Dr. Schirp, it was learned, may be one of the witnesses summoned before the Federal grand jury for Wednesday. His bank account has also been subpoenaed. According to a statement made by him to newspaper men, he was not asked by the county grand jury about the money Ewald was supposed to have paid him.

Rabbi Wise's Comment.

Rabbi Wise's comment on Mr. Crain's conduct of the Ewald inquiry and the Governor's action in the matter from Lake Placid was as follows:

"I rejoice to note that Governor Roosevelt has acted without a moment's delay. The question has been asked why I urged the Governor to intervene in the Crain-Ewald-Healy-Walker-Olvany matter. My reasons were as follows:

"I felt that I owed it to the Governor of the State to make clear to him that great numbers of citizens were, like myself, aghast over the way in which the judicial processes of the State, including the office of the District Attorney of New York, were being abused to the abetment, concealment and extenuation, as circumstances seem to require, of civic corruption and crime.

"The farce of the Crain-Ewald grand jury proceedings seems to call for no less sternness and promptness than characterized the action of Theodore Roosevelt with respect to another District Attorney of New York thirty years ago. As a friend and earnest supporter of the Governor in 1928, I felt that it was owing to him to invite such action as he has seen fit to initiate. It seemed well to intimate that what Governor Theodore Roosevelt had found it relatively easy to do regarding a District Attorney of the opposite political party might confidently be expected of Franklin Roosevelt to do respecting law officials, even though nominally of his own political party. Membership in the same political organization should not insure complete immunity from the ordinary consequences of official misconduct so vitally affecting the interests of the people.

Feels "Deepening Shame."

"My chief reason for appealing to the Governor was my sense of helplessness, as a citizen of New York, as I look upon its deepening shame, including the tragi-comic Mayoralty radio performances and rehearsal in the District Attorney's office during the past few days; and I find these coupled with many more instances in recent months of polluting control of officers of the law by political partisanship.

"Stated specifically, it is my conviction that the public believes, and reasonably so, that judicial and other law appointments are dictated almost uniformly not on the basis of merit but by the financial greed of appointive powers, which are secret and, therefore, without responsibility. Furthermore, it is the almost inevitable public belief that such appointees too often conduct themselves not as impartial and unfettered servants of the law but as controlled agents of these selfsame ultimate appointive powers.

"I appealed to the Governor because I knew that no help could come to New York save through his intervention. That intervention was, I felt, made inevitable by the inaction rather than action of the District Attorney in the Ewald case, which bears all the stigmata of this blighting control. To me it has been sickening to find the United States Attorney for New York compelled to attempt to do by indirection what a decently effective and independent District Attorney could and should have done long before this. The citizens of New York, deeply discouraged over the Vitale-Vause-Ewald ad nauseam exposures, look confidently to Governor Roosevelt to continue to act in prompt and fearless fashion, to do what may be most difficult but is imperatively necessary."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PANAMA, Aug. 16.—The baffling prohibition laws of the Canal Zone enmeshed two more victims today when Captain Romolo Chiesa and Bartender Giorgio Imperiale of the Italian liner Virgilio were found guilty of selling liquor aboard the vessel when she was docked at Cristobal, June 25, 1925. Sentence will be imposed, in the absence of the defendants, at the Monday session of the District Court.

The case had been continued many times. It was finally taken under advisement by Judge James J. Lenihan of the Canal Zone District Court when the defense attorney, J. P. Fairman, moved for dismissal on the ground that the "government of the Canal Zone" was not the proper plaintiff.

In a 167-page opinion, Judge Lenihan asserted that, since the laws for the Canal Zone were made by the President and Congress, the "government of the Canal Zone" was non-existant. He added, however, that the code of procedure for the Zone specified that informations must be made out in the name of the "government of the Canal Zone," and, calling the situation "an anomaly," overruled the motion of dismissal.

Judge Lenihan considered the case as a misdemeanor because the Canal Zone code does not specify that violators of the prohibition law shall be imprisoned in a penitentiary and it states that, unless so specified, defendants shall not be tried for felonies.

He also said he would be lenient in his sentence because the case was in the nature of a test and by reason of the baffling status of the Zone prohibition laws, although he issued a warning that future violators would be severely punished.

The Italians were arrested after two plainclothesmen had boarded the liner on its arrival from Genoa and ordered drinks of cognac, which were served to them by the bartender. The captain was held on the ground that the liquor was sold with his knowledge and consent.

The arrests were made despite the fact that previously ships had not been raided while docked at Cristobal.

FREAK HAIL STORM DOES GREAT DAMAGE

were killed by lightning. In the tobacco-growing area between Westfield, Mass., and Thompsonville, Conn., the heaviest damage to crops in fifty years was caused by the storm, which was classed as a cloudburst there.

The crop at the American Sumatra Tobacco Company's forty-acre farm near Westfield was said to have been ruined. Near Thompsonville a barn, in which three and a half acres of harvested tobacco was stored, was blown down.

Streets were turned into rivers two feet deep in Worcester, where a girl swept off her feet by the torrent was carried beneath a stalled automobile and nearly drowned before she was rescued by four men. Some power and telephone lines were rendered useless, according to The Associated Press, which said also that fire apparatus rushing to put out a blaze started by lightning was stalled in the flooded streets.

Bolt Kills Man on Roof Here.

In New York City one man was killed by lightning while he was engaged in cleaning out a water tank on the roof of the thirteen-story building at 1,020 Fifth Avenue, near Eighty-third Street. The victim of the storm was Haakin Martinson, 21, of 155 East Eighty-fourth Street, employed as a fireman at the Fifth Avenue address.

Martinson was standing on the ledge of the tank, which had been emptied of water, waiting for Henry Van Vliet, another fireman, to come up the ladder and join him, when he was struck. The bolt which killed Martinson knocked a pail of water from Van Vliet's hand but did not injure him. An effort was made by members of Police Emergency Squad 5 to revive Martinson, but it was fruitless.

As the wind, rain, hail and lightning let loose over the city the Hamburg-American liner Albert Ballin was easing into her dock on the north side of Pier 84 at the foot of West Forty-fourth Street. The United States liner Leviathan was moored on the other side of the pier.

The wind caught the bow of the German liner and would have sent it crashing into the Leviathan but for the quick action and bravery of the two tugboat captains who were trying to manoeuvre the ship into her slip. Although there was danger that the little tugboats might be crushed between the two giant liners, their commanders quickly jockeyed their craft between the two ships, and with much puffing and snorting kept them apart.

Lightning struck a roof aerial attached to a radio set in Martin Gross's apartment on the sixth floor of 201 West 117th Street, causing a small fire. Gross ran to the street and gave the alarm to a policeman of the West 123d Street station, who called fire apparatus. The blaze was extinguished quickly.

Police of the Arsenal station in Central Park said the storm was the worst in many years. The tunnel under the Sixty-fifth Street transverse road became a pond three feet deep, and more than thirty persons seeking shelter from the storm climbed from the road to the benches and thence to the backs of the benches to escape the rising tide.

A game between the New York Yankees and the Chicago White Sox was called in the fourth inning because of the downpour, but the fans left without confusion or disorder. In the Fort Washington Park section police received reports of flooded cellars, but in the east side of Harlem the storm was described as just an ordinary shower.

The Weather Bureau had predicted showers, but although the weather looked ominous in the forenoon there was nothing to indicate the approach of a storm of the intensity of the one that came. For nearly an hour in mid-morning a mixture of fog and smoke, which the light breezes were not strong enough to carry away from the city, hung over lower Manhattan and the harbor.

The fog blanket was so dense that the sun could not shine through. It was not unlike the eerie twilight that accompanies an eclipse of the sun. For nearly an hour lights in office buildings were turned on and automobiles ran with their headlights shining.

BOLT KILLS THREE IN SHED.

WINDSOR, Conn., Aug. 16 (AP).—Three men were killed an a fourth badly injured at noon today when struck by lightning.

The dead are Fred Dibble, 51 years old; George Nolan, 42, and Alfred Seam, 50, all of Poquonock. Philip Wolf was injured.

The men were employed on Harry C. Griswold's tobacco plantation and took refuge from the storm in a tobacco shed, which was struck by lightning. There were ten persons in the shed, all of whom felt the shock.

LIGHTNING KILLS 1, STUNS 20.

Strikes Among Workers Eating in House at Framingham, Mass.

FRAMINGHAM, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—Charles Bowse, 30 years old, a carpenter, of West Concord was killed by lightning today as he was seated with a score of fellow-workers at a table eating his lunch.

All the men, who were engaged in renovating a house, were stunned. Ernest McGrath, 28, and his brother, Walter, 20, were rendered unconscious, but will recover. The lightning came through the ceiling, directly over the table. Two other houses were struck in this district, but not seriously damaged.

$250,000 BEER PLANT RAIDED IN BROOKLYN

BIG STILLS ALSO SEIZED

A $250,000 beer manufacturing and liquor bottling plant, complete with a testing laboratory, two fast trucks for deliveries, a secret stair passage, and a staff of eighteen employes, was raided by Federal agents in Brooklyn last night.

A dozen agents, under Deputy Administrators William Nolan and James E. Healy, entered the buildings at 1,707-09 St. Mark's Avenue, Brooklyn, shortly after 7 o'clock last night. One employe escaped through a secret passage leading to a neighboring roof but eighteen men, one of whom is said to be the owner, were arrested.

One of the buildings, a wide stucco storehouse, appeared from the street to be a dwelling. The other is a 250-foot brick garage. In the doorway of the garage a few dozen cases of soda water were piled, a "front" for several thousand bottles which were marked "Canadian Ale." Near these were two trucks bearing signs which read "H. Folb & Sons, Soda Water Manufacture." At the rear of the garage was a complete bottling plant where seven men were working.

On the ground floor of the two-story garage extension the agents found five 5,000-gallon vats and two of 3,000 gallons capacity, filled with mash, two stills of 3,000 gallons' capacity and one of 2,500 also, 1,000 bags of sugar and 1,000 empty five-gallon cans. Upstairs was a laboratory for testing alcohol, eight 5,000-gallon vats and one 1,000-gallon vat.

As the agents entered the laboratory one of the five men surprised at work there opened a concealed door in the wall and escaped. Leveled pistols halted a rush of the other four to the secret door.

The agents later found that a second door off the secret passage opened on a small office where there was a safe containing a variety of bottle labels and what appeared to be a customers' book.

The men arrested, all of whom were charged with manufacture and possession of beer, are as follows:

Herman Folb, 45 years old, 597 Montgomery Street; alleged owner of the plant, William Folb, 37, 873 Saratoga Avenue; Harry Stein, 33, 509 Chester Street; Leo Greenberg, 19, 1,567 St. Mark's Avenue; Gus Greenberg, 18, 1,567 St. Mark's Avenue; Joseph Cohen, 37, 1,484 Eastern Parkway; Guy Fusher, 44, 2,847 Coney Island Avenue; Michael Morelli, 63, 1,589 East New York Avenue; Jerry Carluca, 39, 134 St. Felix Street; James Mosco, 40, 975 Washington Avenue; Harry Klein, 42, 1,909 Coney Island Avenue; Joseph Katz, 40, 404 Howard Avenue; Charles Carlucci, 42, 1,046 Bergen Street, all of Brooklyn; Joseph Adorno, 35, 924 East 226th Street, the Bronx; Joseph Grande, 27, 215 East Seventeenth Street; John Bruno, 19, 1,930 First Avenue; Gaspar Montenagro, 39, 83 East 111th Street; Tony Parracho, 43, 312 Avenue A, all of Manhattan.

All will be arraigned in Federal Court in Brooklyn today.

EX-JUDGE ANDREWS EXPLAINS WET STAND

In Reply to Chancellor Flint, He Denies "Leaving It to States" Is Evasion of Problem.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 26 (AP).—Increase in crime, corruption of officials and disrespect for law are charged to prohibition by William S. Andrews, former Judge of the Court of Appeals, in an open letter replying to the challenge of Chancellor Charles W. Flint of Syracuse University to clarify the program of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment.

Asserting that "it is a serious matter that the States should be stripped of their police power," former Judge Andrews maintained that "leaving it to the States" to handle the liquor problem was not an evasion, as was charged by Chancellor Flint in his letter last month to Mr. Andrews and former Senator Wadsworth. The original letter drew a reply from Mr. Wadsworth, which was followed by a second letter from Dr. Flint.

Citing historic examples of resistance to laws, including the early Christians' refusal to offer incense to the Emperor's image, the New England colonists' revolt against British taxation and disregard in the North for the fugitive slave law, Mr. Andrews said some statutes could not be enforced.

Regarding personal law observance by members of the anti-prohibition association, a matter which drew a challenge from Dr. Flint, Mr. Andrews said the directors of the association could no more pledge its members to obey the Volstead Act than the Chancellor could give such a pledge for every student of his university.

WESTCHESTER DRYS CLAIM EASY VICTORY

Anti-Saloon Leader Predicts Patteson and Witwer Will Be Sent to Congress.

ROCKLAND FOR HOLZWORTH

Dry Paper Booms Wet Candidate, Resenting "Orders" for Millard—Convention List Announced.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Claiming an easy victory for Robert A. Patteson, dry candidate for the Repubican nomination for Congress from the Twenty-fifth District, Fred A. Victor, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, today announced that Mr. Patteson's petitions would bear more than 3,000 signatures before they are filed Tuesday night.

The primary fight in the Twenty-fifth District is for a Republican candidate to run for the office now held by Representative J. Mayhew Wainwright of Rye, militant dry. Mr. Patteson opposes Charles D. Millard, organization wet, and John M. Holzworth, insurgent "dripping wet" and anti-organization candidate.

Mr. Victor said he believed many of the votes received in 1928 by Mr. Wainwright would go to Mr. Patteson because of their similar position on the prohibition question. He did not see, he said, why organization Republicans who voted for Mr. Wainwright in 1928 should vote for Mr. Millard, organization candidate, unless they should be misled. Mr. Millard has pledged himself to work for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, whereas Mr. Patteson has taken a position similar to that of Mr. Wainwright, Mr. Victor declared.

Charles S. Witwer, former assistant corporation counsel of Yonkers, started his campaign today as the dry candidate for the Republican nomination in the Twenty-fourth District, which includes the upper Bronx and lower Westchester.

"America can not be half drunk and half sober any more than it could have been half free and half slave in Lincoln's time," he declared. He said that in a recent tour to the West he had encountered on every hand people who believed that prohibition was a national problem and should be dealt with in a permanent way by the Federal Government.

Mr. Victor says that in Mr. Witwer's district, where he is opposed by Benjamin Fairchild of Pelham as the organization wet candidate, about 10,000 ballots in the 1928 election carried votes for President Hoover but none for Representatives. The Congressional candidates were both wet, he said. Mr. Victor declared the blank ballots indicated that about 10,000 organization Republicans in the Twenty-fourth District did not vote for a Representative because they "believed dry" and would not vote wet.

Mr. Holzworth, the anti-organization wet in the Twenty-fifth District primary fight, received assurance of support this week in editorials printed in The Rockland County Evening Journal, ordinarily a dry newspaper, which said Rockland was "sick and tired" of receiving orders from Westchester.

"The Westchester crowd got together," the editorial says, "and without so much as sending a postal card over here went into a huddle and emerged with Millard as their candidate. The little fact that there are full-fledged Republicans over on this side of the stream did not worry their heads in the least."

The executive committee of the Rockland County Republican Committee endorsed Mr. Millard, but the county committee, refusing to act on the executive committee's instructions, bolted and refused to endorse either Mr. Millard or Mr. Holzworth. Patteson was not then in the fight.

"What is the explanation?" the editorial asks. "It lies in the personal merit of Holzworth himself, but also lies in the fact that the rank and file of the Republican party here are simply sick and tired of receiving their orders from Westchester. That's all. And on primary day Holzworth will be the choice of Rockland Republicans for exactly the same reason."

The completed list of delegates to oppose the Republican organization delegation to the State convention from Westchester County, which has been prepared by the Association Against the Eighteenth Amendment, with Mr. Holzworth's backing, was announced today as follows:

SECOND ASSEMBLY DISTRICT—Lee Parsons Davis, New Rochelle; Joseph C. Baldwin Jr., Bedford; Beatrice Renwick, Mount Kisco; Alexander M. Crane, Scarsdale; John M. Holzworth, Port Chester; David Berman, Port Chester; Sherwood D. Johnston, White Plains; Alfred J. Hook, Larchmont; Daniel Barber, Scarsdale; John J. Dooley, Larchmont; Katie Adler, Port Chester; Kenneth Watkins, Larchmont.

THIRD ASSEMBLY DISTRICT—Henry T. Price, Ossining; A. Robert Kunkler, Ossining; Blanche F. Lounsbery, Pleasantville; Spencer A. Studwell, Pleasantville; Robert J. Williams, Pleasantville; John E. D. Coffey, Tarrytown.

FOURTH ASSEMBLY DISTRICT—John C. Ten Eyck, Yonkers; Edith M. Lopez, Dobbs Ferry; James B. Henney, Hastings; James R. Guthrie, Tarrytown; Gustav A. Bernat, Elmsford; Frank A. Carr, Hastings; Marion G. Weick, Yonkers; Frank Colace-Mottola, Dobbs Ferry.

APPEALS FOR 15,000 MINERS.

Kentucky Delegation Tells Governor Their Families Are Starving.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Aug. 16 (AP).—Fifteen thousand coal miners and their families are in need of help as a result of the prolonged labor trouble in the Western Kentucky coal fields, Governor Sampson was informed today.

Differences over wage scales and working conditions caused a shutdown last April 1 and the reopening of some of the mines within recent weeks has been followed by a series of dynamitings that culminated Monday in an airplane raid on Webster County in which nine bombs were dropped.

Today a delegation, said to include both workers and strikers, appealed to the Chief Executive for aid. Their spokesman, W. O. Smith, County Attorney of Muhlenburg County, told the Governor:

"An intolerable and unprecedented condition exists. Thousands of men, women and children are hungry and many of them are actually starving. I fear that these unfortunate people may be overlooked on account of the national calamity brought about by the worst drought in history."

Toledo Girl Escapes Octopus By Kicking Off Her Slipper

By The Associated Press.

Miss Caris E. Mills of Toledo and Princeton, a Russian relief worker and representative of the American women's hospitals in Istanbul, was swimming alone in this Marmora Sea suburb when a giant octopus, brought near shore by heavy windstorms, wrapped a tentacle round her foot.

She was seized by panic and would have gone under had she not suddenly unbuttoned her bathing slipper, around which the octopus had wound the tentacle. Kicking off the slipper before the tentacles could reach her leg, she swam clear and reached shore.

J. H. LEWIS SOUNDS ILLINOIS WET PLEA

He Announces Platform Built Around State Option Plank to Fight With Mrs. McCormick.

STRESSES STATE RIGHTS

Democratic Senatorial Candidate Will Give Views to Party Convention This Week.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16 (AP).—James Hamilton Lewis, Democratic nominee for United States Senator, who has announced that he would oppose Ruth Hanna McCormick, Republican, in the Senatorship race chiefly on the prohibition issue, placed that issue in the forefront of the platform he made public tonight and which he asked the State convention to adopt next week.

Mr. Lewis said he would introduce to the convention planks dealing with prohibition, unemployment relief, jury service for women, soldier compensation, a national pension system, waterways and taxation.

The Democratic candidate reasserted his opinion that repeal of the Volstead act and the Eighteenth Amendment was unnecessary to permit State legislation in prohibition enforcement and temperance administration.

He proposed as a first declaration of the party platform a demand that this government be brought back to the principle on which our States are established, of legislative home rule in any sumptuary law.

He opposed "control of the private life of the citizen by a system of spies, watchers and agents."

"We should demand," he recommended, "upon the question of prohibition, that the second section of the Eighteenth Amendment, giving to the States the concurrent power of executing and carrying out the purposes of the amendment, authorize the State to declare by its legislated act the content of alcohol of any beverage that shall be the need or wish of the people of the State; that any amendment of the Constitution or any act of Congress that obstructs this privilege of the State be repealed or modified so as to allow the State full authority."

The State law, he proposed, should authorize local officials to administer or distribute beverages under a system prescribed by the Legislature as best befitting the need of the people and the spirit of temperance, preventing saloons and avoiding drunkenness.

"Whatever law exists," he said, "must be enforced until it is repealed or superseded." He asked protection of State rights through enforcement of the Webb-Kenyon law, prohibiting any State from sending its beverage into another State in violation of the laws of the latter.

COLOMBIANS TABLE TAX ON IMPORTED LUXURIES

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOGOTA, Colombia, Aug. 16.—The House of Representatives today overwhelminly voted to suspend indefinitely the discussion and second reading of a bill imposing a prohibitive luxury sales tax on imported goods, including specifically automobiles, furniture, phonographs, phonograph records and radio apparatus. The vote is tantamount to defeat of the measure, which a House committee reported unfavorably.

President Olaya today signed a decree naming the Governors of each of the fourteen departments, giving practically equal representation to Liberals and Conservatives, as he did in his Cabinet appointments.

The Valenciasta and Vahquista factions composing the Conservative majorities in both houses of Congress are experiencing much difficulty in agreeing upon the personnel of the proposed interparliamentary committee, whose function will be to formulate and direct the political policies and action of the Conservative party, in view of the Liberals' control of the executive branch of the government since President Olaya's inauguration.

El Tiempa today reports that the Archbishop Primate has been approached by individual Conservatives for advice on the formation of the committee but refused to intervene, stating it to be his irrevocable purpose not to participate further in politics, which decision is believed to be due to the failure of Señor Vasquez Cobo's candidacy, which the Primate launched and supported in the last campaigning, causing serious conflicts among clergy and laymen.

AUGUSTA, Me., Aug. 16 (AP).—Sheriff Chester W. Getchell of Kennebec County, who has been under fire since he admitted borrowing $1,500 from a convicted bootlegger and paid a fine in Federal court for permitting a Federal prisoner liberty from jail, resigned today.

SAY HE IS 'WICKERSHAMING'

Open Letter Demands Amendment to Conventions as Step to the Removal of Dry Law.

Eberly Hutchinson, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the Assembly, who came out last week for modification of the prohibition law but not for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, was criticized yesterday in an open letter to him from the Women's Committee for Repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, of which Miss M. Louise Gross of Harrison, N. Y., is chairman. The letter was signed by Mrs. David Holmes Morton of Brooklyn, the secretary.

Mr. Hutchinson in his statement declared that as a delegate to the Republican State Convention he would support a proposal for a referendum. The letter asked why he had not supported a resolution for such a referendum which was introduced in the Assembly at its last session by Assemblyman Louis A. Cuvillier.

"The Legislature did not adjourn till three months after Mr. Cuvillier had introduced his resolution," the letter continued. "During all these three months you were a member of the Assembly and in a prominent and influential position in the dominant party. During all that time you did exactly nothing to facilitate the passage of the Cuvillier resolution, in spite of the fact that Mr. Cuvillier was willing to accept an amendment offered by members of your party to ascertain the wishes of the voters on the very proposition of a State dispensary which you now advocate.

"It needed but ten Republican votes to pass this resolution to insure a referendum this year, and yet for three whole months, during which your vote would have counted more than it ever will again, you deliberately refused your vote for exactly the proposition for which you are so keen now, when it is entirely too late to submit the question to the voters this year.

"The time for Wickershaming or any other kind of shamming is past. You now admit that the Eighteenth Amendment is a failure. The voters have known it for a good many years, and what they demand is the opportunity without any further delay to remove the Eighteenth Amendment from the Constitution. If you want to get on a bandwagon, get on the right one, and if you wish to have the Republican party get into step with the prevailing public opinion you can do nothing better than to propose the following plank:

"'We favor the removal of the Eighteenth Amendment from the Federal Constitution, and to that end we favor the submission by Congress of an amendment to conventions elected by the people of the States, as provided in Article V of the Constitution.'

"By submitting to conventions you obtain your referendum, which will be not only informative, but immediately effective as soon as the required number of States vote for repeal."

RENDT'S FOES OPEN CAMPAIGN TOMORROW

Lynch Faction Ready to Send Out Speakers for a Lively Political Fight.

Borough President John A. Lynch, who is seeking to wrest the Richmond Democratic leadership from County Chairman David S. Rendt and who unexpectedly placed an anti-Rendt ticket in the field on Friday, announced yesterday that the speaking campaign against Mr. Rendt would be opened tomorrow night. Mr. Lynch indicated that the contest would developed into one of the liveliest political fights that ever took place in Richmond. The Rendt faction will open its campaign Tuesday night.

The Lynch faction opened headquarters in each of Richmond's five wards and began circulating designating petitions for its candidates. The petitions for the Rendt candidates have been filed.

The supporters of Mr. Lynch asserted that a victory at the primary election would compel Mayor Walker and John F. Curry, leader of Tammany, to recognize Mr. Lynch as the county leader and that the Borough President, if his candidates were successful, would ask for the resignation of Mr. Rendt as Commissioner of Public Works, a $12,000-a-year place. Mr. Rendt said he was confident of victory and added that he intended to hold on to his place unless removed by the Borough President.

CALL FOR RUFFU DEBTS.

Proctors of Former Atlantic City Mayor's Estate Urge Patience.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 16.—Lee F. Washington and Rocco F. Delesantro, newly appointed proctors of the estate of Mayor Anthony M. Ruffu Jr., issued a call today to creditors to file sworn claims and to exercise patience. It is considered likely that it will take three years or more to liquidate all assets.

The proctors hope to be ready with a definite financial statement of the estate in about a month. Mr. Washington said he was confident that with the proper cooperation from the creditors all claims would be met and the estate made to show "more than solvency."

PARTY CHIEFS CLASH ON DEPRESSION ISSUE

Lucas, in Debut as Republican Director, Charges Democrats Misuse "Tragic Situation."

SEES PRESIDENT HINDERED

He Calls on Country to Rely on Hoover as 'Family Physician' in 'Crisis' Instead of 'Quacks.'

KING HITS HOOVER PLEDGES

Senator, Denying Unfair Tactics, Points to How Democrats Would Have Fared in Market Slump.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Robert H. Lucas, who as executive director is the chief working assistant of Chairman Fess of the Republican National Committee, made his début in national politics and opened his party's Congressional campaign today with a statement to the country, charging that the Democrats were seeking to use the current serious business depression, a "tragic situation," for political purposes.

He accused the Democrats of carrying on a campaign of "misrepresentation and confusing propaganda" in the hope that "this national misfortune" would lead to the defeat of the Republican party.

But his maiden effort had hardly emerged from the mimeographing machines at Republican headquarters when Senator King, Democrat, of Utah, replied with a sharp counter-attack, issued through the Democratic National Committee.

Senator King vigorously denied that the Democratic party had in any way sought to oppose the efforts of President Hoover to restore business normality or had unfairly made political capital out of the present economic conditions. And he added that had the Democrats been in power when the slump came in the stock market last Fall the Republicans would not have been so "forbearing" as the Democrats were.

Bitter Fight Now Looked For.

This clash, marking the very entry of Mr. Lucas as active director of the Republican cause in the Congressional campaign, was generally accepted in political circles here as foreshadowing an unusually bitter fight as the elections approach.

Mr. Lucas, who recently resigned as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, took up today his new duties as the active directing head of the Republican committee in the campaign, practically his first venture in the national political field, his previous activities having been largely confined to his native State of Kentucky. Incidentally, Jowett Shouse, who directs activities of the Democratic National Committee, is also a Kentuckian.

In his statement Mr. Lucas said:

"I believe we all realize the past year has brought our party in the nation face to face with a new situation. Following eight years of unusual prosperity we are now confronted with a business depression, temporary, perhaps, but nevertheless serious, resulting in considerable unemployment.

"While this tragic situation is world-wide and far more critical in all other countries than in the United States, the Democratic party managers are taking advantage of it for political purposes.

"They speak today with great political satisfaction of the stock market crash, the business depression and the unemployment. They fervently hope that through this national misfortune their party may be returned to power. In a campaign of misrepresentation and confusing propaganda they expect to gain a political victory through the misery and misfortune of their fellow-men.

Charges Hindering of Hoover.

"As early as January of this year, the Democratic spokesmen announced their campaign issues for the November election. They said the business depression would be an issue; that unemployment would be an issue. And, of course, having selected and announced their issues, the Democratic leaders thereby attempted to make the present business depression and unemployment a political matter and put their party in direct opposition to every effort made by the nation's Chief Executive and his administration to restore business and provide employment for all the people.

"Having selected the natural misfortune of the nation—the suffering of the unemployed—as a campaign issue for 1930, the Democratic leaders could not lend their support to any corrective measure without depriving their party of a battle cry for the campaign.

"And the country has continued to suffer—business is slow to recover—workers walk the streets looking for work while the Democratic strategists confer and consult and issue statements, all the while fearing an improvement in business before the election. They hold to the fallacious idea that if things will just remain as they are until eelction day, the Democrats will secure control of Congress.

Sees "Starving of Non-Combatants."

"Politics may be just a game to some people, but when it is the strategy of party leaders to discourage the revival of business, to continue unemployment, then those party leaders are apt to find themselves without any enthusiastic following.

"'Country first, party next' is the first rule of politics. No party or party leader can ignore that rule and survive. You can't starve the non-combatants to win a political fight.

"Months before the tariff bill became a law, long before they knew what its rates would be, and even while Democratic Senators were voting for increased rates on many schedules, the Democratic spokesmen proclaimed the tariff as a campaign issue for 1930.

"Never before have leaders of a political party attempted so deliberate a campaign of misrepresentation and false propaganda. The campaign has had a demoralizing effect upon business. That misrepresentation has made its impression. That propaganda has taken hold. It is well there is yet time to get the truth to the public.

"The Republican party organization has served the country well in the past. No greater public service was ever performed for any people than the service rendered by the Republican party in the Presidential election of 1928.

Warns Against Democrats in 'Crisis.'

"An even greater service is to be rendered in the coming election. The country is facing a crisis. We are in the midst of a temporary but serious economic depression.

"If, by reason of this situation, the Democratic party—traditionally known as 'the free trade party' and 'the party of unrestricted immigration'—should gain control of the legislative branch of the Federal Government, what chance would there be for a restoration of normal business? What chance would there be to create employment for all our people? What chance to make a market for the products of the farm? Elect a Democratic Congress in 1930 and this country will not see normal business again for some years to come.

"I know it is freely stated by Democratic leaders that the business depression, the unemployment, the low price of wheat will react against the Republican Administration. I know the Democratic party is relying on that belief alone for its hope of electing a Democratic Congress. But isn't that placing a low estimate on the intelligence of the American people?

Likens Hoover to Physician.

"When a man gets a serious illness, he doesn't call in a quack. That's just the time he puts his faith and hope in the old family physician.

"I have confidence in the power of reason of the American people, and before our campaign has far progressed, when the Democratic propaganda has been cleared away, the men and women of this nation will realize a sense of security that we have, as our Chief Executive, in this crisis a man of the experience and ability and of the heart and mind of Herbert Hoover.

"And they will elect a Congress to support him. An enthusiastic, patriotic Republican organization throughout the land will rise to the occasion, and again the sound judgment of an intelligent people shall prevail."

King Retorts on Hoover Pledges.

Senator King's statement, as issued through the Democratic National Committee, follows:

"It is unfortunate that economic questions cannot be discussed without partisanship and bitterness. The new executive director of the Republican National Committee, Mr. Lucas, began his work by charging the Democratic party with attempting to demoralize business and to oppose the efforts of the President to restore business to normalcy.

"This charge is made because some Democratic Senators and Representatives called attention to the disparity between the President's campaign promises of continued prosperity and the existing situation in industry and employment.

"Mr. Lucas complains that even before the last tariff measure was enacted some Democratic Senators proclaimed that the tariff would be the issue in the coming election. Not only some Democratic Senators but progressive leaders, economists of repute and many business men, without regard to party affiliations, expressed the same thought.

Wide Range of Tariff Opposition.

"When it became evident, from the position taken by representatives and agents of monopolies, trusts and highly protected industries, that a tariff was to be inflicted upon the country containing exorbitant rates there were Democrats and representatives of progressive and liberal thought who voiced their opposition thereto.

"When a measure was reported to the House and steamrolled through the House without opportunity for debate, attention was called by Democrats, as well as by the best progressive thought of the country, including many enlightened and patriotic business men, to the unjust provisions of the bill and the serious consequences which would result from its enactment, and to its flagrant disregard of the word of the President, who specifically asked for a revision of industrial schedules only as they appertained to farm relief and to business that showed a definite depreciation because of foreign competition.

Charges Misleading by Executive.

"There has been no Democratic criticism of or opposition to any effort the President may have made to correct or improve the economic state of the country, but there has been criticism, not only by Democrats and by progressive and liberal Republicans, of statements emanating from the Executive and leading Republicans—statements which were not warranted by conditions and which were based in part upon unfounded, optimistic prophecies and misleading statistics, the inaccuracy of which the executive department reports ultimately showed to be misleading.

"The fact is that the Democratic party has sought to promote the welfare of the people to bring prosperity to all classes and to preserve Democratic institutions under which liberty and justice may be the inheritance of all.

"If the Democrats had been in power when the stock crash came and the distress of the country dragged on, it is certain the Republicans would not have been as forbearing. They would have pointed to the conditions as justifying their favorite campaign slogan that the Democrats are unfit for government and that Republican rule is synonomous with prosperity."

MRS. MOODY RESENTS QUESTION OVER LEGACY

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16 (AP).—Helen Wills Moody today branded as "perfectly absurd" the suggestion that she would jeopardize her amateur tennis standing by accepting a $20,000 legacy bequeathed to her in the will of James D. Phelan, former United States Senator, "in appreciation of her winning the tennis championship for California."

"It couldn't possibly have anything to do with my amateur standing, and I think the suggestion is in extremely bad taste," said Mrs. Moody.

"I am very sorry that any such controversy should arise. There should be nothing said about it whatever. I do not wish it, and I am sure Senator Phelan would not have liked it."

TYDINGS PREDICTS GAIN OF 6 SENATORS

Democrats Have Even Chance to Control Chamber in Next Congress, He Asserts.

SAYS CONDITIONS AID PARTY

Summarizes Senatorial Election Outlook by States—Views of Republican Governor Dubious.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Senator Tydings of Maryland, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, asserted today, following a survey of the political situation in the doubtful States, that the chances were even that the Democrats would control the Senate of the Seventy-second Congress.

The slump in the stock market, public opposition to the Hawley-Smoot tariff law, unemployment and slack business conditions were among the reasons Senator Tydings advanced for the change which he saw taking place in the country.

That the Democrats may make notable gains is not denied by many prominent Republicans; and it was said that, after the President's drought conference, several Republican Governors attending the conference told the President that the political situation in their respective States was not any too favorable when viewed from the Republican standpoint.

While conditions do not necessarily mean a Democratic sweep, they do indicate, these Governors are reported to have said, that substantial gains by the Democrats will not be surprising if economic conditions continue as at present.

He Lists "Doubtful States."

In his forecast Senator Tydings listed as doubtful Colorado, Massachusetts, Kentucky, West Virginia, Rhode Island, Wyoming and South Dakota, in all of which Republican Senate vacancies occur this year. While not over-optimistic, Senator Tydings contended that the Democrats also have a fighting chance to elect Senators in Kansas, Iowa, New Hampshire and even Ohio and Illinois. Anything might happen in Pennsylvania, where the wet and dry question has split the Republican party wide open, according to Senator Tydings.

"The chances are at least even for the Democrats to control the Senate in the next Congress," Mr. Tydings said. "At this time there are fifty-six Republicans, thirty-nine Democrats and one Farmer-Laborite in the Senate.

"The crash in the stock market, the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot tariff law carrying its many harsh, unfair and outrageous schedules, unemployment, which has steadily increased since the present Administration came into power; slack business conditions throughout the country, and corruption in Republican administrations, seem to have impressed the American people that the time has come for a change.

"Reports are coming to us from all sections. The Democrats in the States concerned feel they can win, and they are working together in better unison than ever before. We do not look for the loss of any States in which Democratic seats in this Congress are involved.

"There are thirty-five Senatorial contests and the winning of ten of them by the Democrats means control of the Senate. Conceding everything doubtful to the opposition, and we do not, there would still be a Democratic gain of six."

His Summary of Conditions.

Eliminating the eleven Southern States, which he regarded as certain to return Democrats, Senator Tydings summed up the situation in the rest of the country, from which twenty-four Senators will be elected, as follows:

"In Colorado, Senator Phipps, Republican, owing to party discord in that State, retired rather than go through with an election squabble.

"In Massachusetts, Senator Gillett, Republican, retired apparently because of the slim chances of Republican success in the approaching election.

"In Kentucky, Senator Sackett, Republican, has retired to an Ambassadorship in the face of Republican discord in that State.

"In West Virginia, Senator Goff, Republican, declined to face a divided party and has retired from the field, with M. M. Neeley, former Democratic Senator, conceded by both parties to have an even chance of winning.

"Democratic prospects in each of these four States are better than they have been for fifteen years.

"In Rhode Island, former Senator Peter G. Gerry, who was twice elected to the Senate from that State and who two years ago was defeated by a very few votes, is a very strong contender, with every promise of success.

"In Montana, Thomas J. Walsh, Democrat and veteran United States Senator, is expected to win by a greater majority than formerly.

Sees Prospect in Wyoming.

"In Wyoming the death of Senator Warren, Republican, brings new candidates into the field. Wyoming already has one Democratic United States Senator, in Senator Kendrick. The party is united in that State and the spirit of optimism surrounds the candidacy of Harry H. Schwartz, who is the Democratic nominee.

"In New Mexico, Senator Bratton, Democrat, who has already served one term in the Senate, is expected to win.

"In Ohio, the party is more enthusiastic than at any time since 1918 and local conditions in Ohio offer our party an excellent chance of victory.

"Illinois, with its great urban centres, although normally overwhelmingly Republican, seems to be with the liberal platform of James Hamilton Lewis, former United States Senator from that State. It is conceded that Mr. Lewis has a splendid chance of victory and that the cities will in the main support him far beyond the number of registered Democrats appearing on the poll books, while down-State Illinois, already Democratic, is enthusiastically back of him.

"In South Dakota W. J. Bulow, present Democratic Governor, is the Democratic nominee. He has twice been elected to the Governorship in this Republican State. He has united support and an unusual chance of success in the November election.

"In Minnesota Senator Thomas D. Schall has just been nominated after a bitter Republican primary in which he defeated Governor Christensen. Due to farming conditions, reaction to the administration's farm policies and other circumstances, Democratic prospects are brighter here than they have been in years.

Admits Kansas Is Different.

"In Kansas, Senators Capper and Allen, both Republicans, are up for re-election. Kansas is usually a Republican State. However, former Governor Jonathan N. Davis, Democrat, is opposing Senator Capper. It is within the realm of possibility that at least one Democratic Senator may be elected from Kansas this Fall, although, frankly, this is a very difficult State for Democratic success.

"In Delaware, the Democrats are making a determined fight to unseat Senator Daniel O. Hastings, who was appointed by the Governor to fill out the unexpired term of Senator du Pont, who resigned. One of these candidates is Senator Thomas F. Bayard, Democrat, who was once previously elected to a full term in the Senate. Local conditions give the Democratic party an excellent chance to win this seat.

"In Idaho, Senator Borah is up for re-election. It is only fair to state that, while the Democratic party will do its best to win, the chances of unseating Senator Borah are not promising.

"In Iowa, Senator Daniel F. Steck, Democrat, is running for re-election. When Senator Steck defeated Senator Brookhart six years ago, he accomplished what was thought to be impossible. The Republican party is not united in Iowa and Senator Steck is much stronger than the party affiliation. Men in both parties concede he may duplicate his feat of six years ago.

"In New Hampshire, Senator Harry W. Keyes, Republican, is a candidate for re-election. There is more than the usual chance of Democratic success in New Hampshire this Fall.

"In New Jersey, a determined effort is being made by the Democrats to win, but it must be conceded that nominee Dwight W. Morrow, Republican, is at present a favorite of observers, although his close connection with the President, who, it is thought, has lost much of his popularity of two years ago, may prove a greater handicap to Mr. Morrow than is anticipated.

Norris Versus Hitchcock.

"The present situation in Nebraska leads one to conclude that one guess is as good as another. Conditions there, where Senator George W. Norris, Republican, is a candidate and former Senator Gilbert W. Hitchcock, Democrat, is opposing him, are such that a correct line upon it cannot at this time be given.

"In Oregon, former Representative Elton Watkins, Democrat, is opposing Senator Charles L. McNary, Republican, who is running for re-election. Senator McNary has party difficulties and his vote on one or two questions, namely, Philippine independence and some phases of the tariff, together with the unsatisfactory workings of farm relief, put this State in the doubtful column. It is normally Republican, but this is not a normal year in Oregon.

"In Pennsylvania Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, Republican, is seeking the Senatorial place and he is opposed by Sedgwick Kistler, Democrat. Pennsylvania is so normally Republican that one is apt to expect the result even before the vote is cast. However, there are many independent movements supporting the Democratic nominee on foot in that State. Indeed, so bitter is the strife in the Republican party and so popular is the Democratic platform there that the very least to be expected is the largest Democratic vote in its recent history. Anything may happen in Pennsylvania.

"Of course, the Democratic committee will make a strong fight in every State where there is a contest. We look for victory in many hitherto Republican strongholds."

STIMSON IS SLATED CONVENTION HEAD

Recently Mr. Steinbrink was reported to have changed from an advocate of repeal to an advocate of modification of the Volstead act, and the State affairs committee of his advisory committee is now engaged in drafting a report, recommending that the Brooklyn organization take a less extreme position than advocacy of repeal on the ground that adoption of a repeal resolution by the State convention might split the party, endanger the election of the Republican candidate for Governor and imperil Republican candidates in many counties up-State.

Mr. Steinbrink was put in his position of Brooklyn leader to succeed Jacob A. Livingston by the President's failure to reappoint Warren G. Price, a Livingston adherent, as Collector of Internal Revenue, and by a combination of a group of Assembly district leaders, of whom Tax Commissioner John R. Crews, leader of the Sixth District, was one.

Mr. Crews refused yesterday to follow Mr. Steinbrink on prohibition.

"I still favor straight repeal despite Mr. Steinbrink's plan for a compromise through modification," Mr. Crews said. "The County Committee placed itself on record in favor of repeal, and I stand with the County Committee. My candidates for Congress and the Assembly will stand for repeal. I think standing for modification when the County Committee voted for repeal is a great mistake. My vote in the executive committee will be cast for repeal."

Former State Senator Charles F. Murphy, leader of the Tenth District, who also supported Mr. Steinbrink for leader, said he still favored a repeal declaration but wished to talk with Mr. Steinbrink before deciding how he would vote in the executive committee.

"I have a high regard for Mr. Steinbrink's ability and wisdom," Mr. Murphy said, "but it certainly seems to me that the only cure for the prohibition evil is to cut out the entire sore by repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment."

With a division in the executive committee indicated, Mr. Steinbrink also faces a fight in the advisory committee, for former County Judge Reuben L. Haskell will return tomorrow from Saratoga Springs to oppose any compromise recommendation and to urge the organization to stick by repeal.

The opposition to Mr. Steinbrink's proposed change of position by those who are regarded as his friends and supporters reflects the position of Republican wets all through the State, who have refused consistently all attempts of State Chairman Maier to get an agreement on a compromise plank. The extreme wets are following the lead of former Senator James W. Wadsworth, head of the New York State branch of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, and Dr. Butler, and will fight for a repeal plank.

The leaders of the drys, it is reported, have been much more reasonable. Fred A. Victor, State Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, is understood to have told Chairman Maier that the dry organizations would not insist upon any declaration for a State enforcement act, or even any mention of prohibition in the State platform. A plank reaffirming the Republican national platform of 1928, as suggested by William H. Hill of Binghamton, leader of the Hoover forces in this State that year, or a plank declaring for support of the Federal Constitution would satisfy the drys, according to their statements to Mr. Maier.

The drys, however, have remained firm in their assertion that they would name an independent Republican dry candidate for Governor if either the Republican platform or candidate should be wet.

DOMINICANS INDUCT PRESIDENT TRUJILLO

Former United States Marine Takes Oath—Oratory and Champagne Flow Freely.

NEW CABINET IS ANNOUNCED

Vice President Urena Also Becomes Foreign Secretary—Hoover Sends Congratulations.

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic, Aug. 16 (AP).—Dressed in the uniform he had put aside while running for office, Brig. Gen. Rafael Leonidas Trujillo today took the oath of President.

The 37-year-old soldier who began his career in the United States Marine Corps, is the youngest President of a sovereign State. He is to be Chief Executive for four years in the nation which has grown from a colony planted by Christopher Columbus.

Rafael Estrella Ureña, who had been Provisional President since February, became Vice President today. General Trujillo also appointed him Secretary of Foreign Relations.

Thus the three most important offices in the country are in the hands of two men whose abilities complement each other. General Trujillo, the soldier, calls himself "a man of action and few words," while his "good companion"—as he speaks of Señor Ureña, the lawyer, orator and diplomat—is a master of words in more than one language. He was formerly Minister to France, Italy and Belgium.

Army Officers Drink Toasts.

Oratory and champagne flowed profusely in the capital today as numerous toasts were given to the health of the new President and the success of the government. All officers of the army throughout the republic drank a toast to their Commander-in-Chief at 4 o'clock this afternoon. Bands in the various parks played martial airs from sunrise until late tonight. There were parades of school children as well as soldiers. The new government was hailed by a Te Deum in the oldest cathedral in the New World and by a salute of twenty-one guns in the fort in which Christopher Columbus once was a prisoner.

The United States was represented at the inaugural ceremony by Charles B. Curtis, United States Minister, and Governor Theodore Roosevelt of Porto Rico was represented by Felix Cordova Davila, Porto Rican Commissioner in Washington, and Carlos E. Chardon, Commissioner of Agriculture.

President Trujillo, surrounded by his staff and many notable political figures, delivered his address of inauguration from the roof of the Bastion, cradle of Dominican independence. He was followed by Vice President Urena. Both received tremendous ovations by thousands assembled in the Plaza Independencia.

New Cabinet Formed.

Presidential Secretary—RAFAEL VIDAL.
Interior and Police—JACINTO B. PEYNADO.
Foreign Relations—RAFAEL ESTRELLA UREÑA.
Treasury—ROBERTO DESPRADEL.
Justice, Public Instruction and Fine Arts—ELIAS BRACHE Jr.
War and Navy—ANTONIO JORGE.
Public Works—JOSE JIMENES.
Agriculture and Commerce—CESAR TOLENTINO.
Health and Welfare—ARISTIDES FIALLO CABRAL.
Labor and Communications—TEODULO CHEVALIER.

Hoover Sends Congratulations.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—President Hoover today sent a message of congratulations to Rafael Leonidas Trujillo, President of the Dominican Republic, on the occasion of his induction into office. The text of the message follows:

"I extend my cordial congratulations to your Excellency on this auspicious occasion of your elevation to the high office of President of the Dominican Republic and best wishes for a most successful term of office and the happiness of the people of the republic under your wise administration."

LEADER'S ACQUITTAL CHEERS ANTI-SEMITES

Rumanian Outrages Flare Up With Increasing Violence in Two Cities.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 16.—The acquittal of the notorious anti-Semitic commander of the Iron Guard, Zelea Codreanu, is having the effect here which might be expected. Throughout Rumania anti-Semitic agitators and demonstrators have been encouraged to fresh outrages.

In Galatz yesterday a battle against Jews occurred in the streets. Many were held up and beaten for no reason but their Semitic appearance by Iron Guardsmen. One student was arrested, but was released later. In Kischineff many Jews were cornered in the streets and brutally beaten. But after taking their names and addresses the police released all of the students responsible.

It has been learned that two anti-Semitic leaders who fled their homes to avoid arrest, or perhaps to save the local police from accusations of failing to arrest them, have recommenced their activities in Bessarabia, the most fruitful province for their propaganda owing to the acute peasant distress, which the anti-Semites lay to the Jews. The Bessarabian police say they are seeking two leaders.

Today a deputation of the Union of Rumanian Jews appeared to protest to Dr. Vayda-Voevod, Minister of the Interior, against the burning of a synagogue in Marmarosh, concerning which an allegedly misleading statement minimizing the damage was semi-officially issued yesterday. The deputation was received by Secretary of State Victor Cadere. They requested him to order an honest and thorough investigation into the incident and to punish the guilty with the fullest severity of the law.

M. Cadere said he would do all in his power to bring the guilty to justice.

FOREIGN AIR PILOTS ARRIVE FOR RACES

First Group to Come Here With Diplomatic Sanction Greeted by Mayor's Committee.

WILL SEE THE PRESIDENT

Then Will Go to Chicago for Meet —Atcherley of England and Loose of Germany Among Visitors.

Hailed by leaders in American aeronautics as the greatest assemblage of international pilots ever seen here, representative fliers of England, France, Germany and Italy arrived in New York yesterday on the Leviathan. They were paraded through the city as guests of Mayor Walker's Aviation Committee and taken to the Hotel Ambassador pending their departure to meet President Hoover. They will go to Chicago later in the week to attend the national air races, which start next Saturday.

Picked from the leading racing squadrons of their respective governments, the fliers were brought here by Alford J. Williams, former speed flier and air expert of the United States Navy. The aces of the foreign powers in the group were Flying Officer R. L. Atcherley of the British Schneider Cup team, Lieutenant Hubert Preston of the Coldstream Guards and pilot of the royal family of England, Marshal Pietro Columbo, chosen by Premier Mussolini as the outstanding pilot of Italy; Marcel Doret of France and Friedrich Loose of Germany.

Stowed below decks on the ship were two favorite airplanes of the visiting pilots. They were a special Blackburn Lincock pursuit plane for Flying Officer Atcherley, in which he hopes to demonstrate a series of daring manoeuvres, and a Dewoitine single-seat fighting monoplane, in which Doret will go through the French school of flight evolutions. The machines were rushed to the freight yards of the Pennsylvania Railroad so that they might arrive in Chicago to be assembled and tuned for the opening of the race meet.

Williams said the men would not compete in any of the races this year despite authorization from their governments to do so. They did not bring their racing-type planes. But in view of their appearance, the first foreign fliers with diplomatic sanction, aviation officials who met them predicted the beginnings of international racing here in a few years.

The planes to be used by the other pilots are either en route here on other vessels or are to be models of their own favorite types which have been manufactured here under American license. Loose of Germany will fly a Junkers, a special Breda pursuit plane is due to arrive for Columbo on the Olympic, and Lieutenant Preston will use a fast plane of American manufacture. Williams will use a Curtiss Hawk, which is being built for him and which will be powered with a Bliss-Jupiter engine, giving it 100 more horsepower than the one in which he staged his spectacular demonstrations of inverted flying for the navy. In the plane he hopes to exceed in daring some of his intricate manoeuvres of inverted flight.

The men will be guests of the Curtiss-Wright Flying Service today at the Valley Stream airport. They will be taken for a tour of the other airports in the metropolitan area and a flight over New York. On the scheduled trip to Washington to be greeted by the President they will be piloted by Charles S. (Casey) Jones, head of that service.

On the reception committee which escorted the visiting delegation about the city yesterday were Peter J. Brady, chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Aviation; James A. Talbot, chairman of the directorate of the Richfield Oil Corporation; Cliff W. Henderson, field manager of the National Air Races, and many of the leading pilots of the United States.

The automobile parade was escorted by motorcycle policemen down Broadway to Fourteenth Street, up Fifth Avenue and through the Grand Central zone to the hotel at Fifty-first Street and Park Avenue. Throughout the afternoon a constant stream of aeronautical leaders visited the fliers, all of whom have figured in the outstanding accomplishments in aeronautics abroad since the war. Speed and intricate air stunts were the main topics of discussion and the leaders of domestic aviation agreed that much would be learned here by the interchange of ideas.

MEXICAN CABINET BACKS DEBT PACT

Ortiz Rubio Outlines Broad Reconstruction Plans to Speed National Recovery.

ROADS TO UNIFY COUNTRY

Schools, Irrigation Projects, Seaports and Agrarian Program Will Be Pushed Next Year.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 16.—At a Cabinet meeting yesterday at Cuautla, in the State of Morelos, where President Ortiz Rubio is on vacation, Montes de Oca, Minister of Finance, reported to the Chief Executive on the financial agreement concluded with international bankers in New York, and a statement issued by the President today announces the Mexican Government's approval of the agreement and outlines the government's financial and economic plans for 1931.

According to the President's statement, road construction will be intensified in order to establish contact among all points of the Republic and insure the exchange of commodities necessary for the execution of the plan for economic and financial rehabilitation. Improvement of Mexican seaports on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts also will be intensified, and great irrigation projects will be pushed.

Special attention will be paid to colonization of newly irrigated lands and agricultural credit institutions will receive major opportunities for financing small holders to be benefited under the country's agrarian program, the President says.

Public education will be further aided, while pacification of the country will probably result in smaller appropriations for the War and Marine Departments.

As regards the international financial agreement the President's statement says:

"Now that Montes de Oca has made a pact agreeable to the government, and if Congress approves it, we should be able to face all indebtedness conjointly."

"The progress of all our national activities and the prosperity of our business in general depends to a large extent on the reconstruction of our credit and the fulfilment of our obligations both to internal and external creditors," it continues. "This must be the basis for our future and permanent reconstruction."

President Ortiz Rubio says the rehabilitation program will extend over his full Presidential term of office. The national income for 1931 cannot be expected to exceed that of the current year, he says, and hints that government departments in 1931 will have to get along under the strict economy now prevailing.

Railways Start Reductions.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 16 (AP).—The reduction of personnel and the abandonment of some unnecessary shops have already been started by the Mexican National Railways to meet the terms of the debt settlement concluded in New York in July.

Announcement of this beginning was made to the press today by Xavier Sanchez Mejorada, president of the railways. The reduction in personnel will be carried out gradually so as to reduce hardships of the workers.

The president said that within a few days the railway plants at Durango and Piedras Negras would be closed, and a number of unprofitable branch lines would be returned to private owners or abandoned.

As soon as money is available, the railways will purchase new equipment. Freight rates will be lowered to increase business.

BRITAIN IS STIRRED BY BISHOPS' VIEWS

Anglo-Catholic Group in Church of England Calls Birth Control Stand Revolutionary.

LONDON, Aug. 16 (AP).—The attitude of the Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops toward religious questions and such modern social problems as birth control and divorce has provoked a great stir of comment and controversy throughout Great Britain. The suggestions of the Bishops were published Thursday.

The attitudes on birth control and divorce have roused the greatest amount of controversy. The Bishops condemned birth control inspired by motives of "selfishness, luxury or mere convenience," but agreed that methods of control might be used in cases where there was "a clearly felt moral obligation to limit or avoid parenthood."

The Church Times, organ of the Anglo-Catholic movement in the Church of England, asserts that "the admission of the principle of artificial control of conception constitutes a positive revolution in Christian morality."

The Sunday Observer remarks that limitation of offspring seems everywhere to follow the spread of present-day civilization, and that like other gifts of science, it contains pitfalls for the world. The attitude of the Bishops "indicates that churchmen realize they must learn and think if they are to reach and rule."

In the opinion of The Sunday Times, London's other leading Sunday newspaper, the Bishops' statement will "dispel much facile pessimism as to the alleged decay of Christianity."

Dr. Marie Stokes, celebrated birth-control advocate, considered the Bishops' statement "a great victory for Mother England."

In regard to divorce, James Douglas, editor of The Sunday Express, takes the Bishops severely to task for "their medieval attitude" in recommending that the marriage of one whose former partner is still living should not be celebrated according to the rights of the Church. He held that this imposed on faith a theological dogma "contrary to reason and common sense."

He vigorously attacked the conference's position on birth control, which he described as "a far more dangerous problem."

"Lambeth has delivered a fatal blow to marriage, to motherhood, to fatherhood, to the family and to morality," he said. It has paved the way to race suicide."

The failure of the conference to recommend women for the priesthood greatly disappointed the Society of the Ministry of Women.

Miss Ivy Pryka, honorary secretary of the society, said that "no justification can be found in the life and teachings of Christ for the exclusion of women from any spiritual office."

"The only answer," she said, "is that there are theological principles which constitute an insuperable obstacle. What those theological principles are we are not told. If Christ were in our midst today, would the Bishops dare submit them to him?"

IN TREE 667 HOURS, FALLS.

Boy Seriously Injured at Oaklyn, N. J.—Companion Stays Aloft.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMDEN, N. J., Aug. 16.—Kenneth Driesbach, 13 years old, of Oaklyn passed his 667th hour as a tree-sitter today, but hardly had he done so before he slipped and fell twenty feet to the ground, suffering a severe injury to his spine.

The boy was unconscious when he was taken to the Kennedy Hospital at Oaklyn, where his condition became so critical that he was brought here to the Cooper Hospital. He regained consciousness, and physicians declared he would recover. They feared at first that his back had been broken. His companion, Raymond Kershaw, 12, remained in the perch.

CHIANG NOW PLANS A WINNING THRUST

Nanking Leaders, Cheered by Recapture of Tsinan, See Turning Point in War.

REDS QUIT HANKOW AREA

Cantonese Authorities Are Unable to Get Word of Americans Trapped in Kanchow by Red Attack.

By HALLETT ABEND.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 16.—The recapture of Tsinan, the capital of Shantung Province, by Nanking Government forces fifty days after the fall of that city to the Northerners is greatly stiffening the morale of Nanking adherents, and it is thought the territorial status in the North is now practically the same as in April.

His successes in Shantung are held justification for Chiang Kai-shek's strategy of wearing down the North, which is now said to be considerably weakened, and the government plans to push northward toward Tientsin while also launching crashing counter-attacks on Feng Yu-hsiang's army along the Lunghai Railway front. The loss of Tsinan probably will delay the formal launching of a Peking Government and may even sway the attitude of Chang Hsueh-liang, Manchurian chief, toward Nanking.

Chang Fa-kwei and Li Tsung-jen, Far Southern adherents of the Northern coalition, today cabled to Wang Ching-wei, Yen Hsi-shan and Feng Yu-hsiang denouncing Nanking's charge that its southern foes are leaving Hunan, Hupeh and Kiangsi Provinces a prey to the Communists and pledging a joint northward drive to suppress the Reds and attack Nanking's southern lines, but the forces of Chang Fa-kwei and Li are believed to be badly demoralized.

The whole situation, political and military, tonight appears the most favorable for Nanking in three months. Foreign sources report that nearly two-thirds of the Shansi forces in Shantung were killed or captured owing to their inability to cross the Yellow River.

The Hankow commandant reports the Communists are retreating further toward the interior.

A rumor of the assassination of Chang Hsueh-liang at Peitaiho has been officially denied by all factions.

Nanking Leaders See Turning Point.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 16 (AP).—Nanking Government leaders, encouraged by a series of successes against rebel armies and Communists seeking to overthrow the régime, said today the turning point in China's civil war had been reached.

President Chiang, announcing that Northern rebels had been driven from Tsinan, predicted speedy evacuation by rebels of Honan Province as well, and forecast the quick capture by his troops of the strategic cities of Kaifeng and Chengchow.

Military headquarters at Nanking announced the government troops entered Tsinan at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon and that a division was patrolling the city.

Additional reports from Tsinan said sharp disorders occurred when the Nationalists entered the city, but were short lived. Riflemen attacked the retreating Northerners, which resulted in street fighting in which many bullets penetrated Japanese residences near by. As far as is known, no Japanese were injured. Women and children were not evacuated, but were concentrated in safer locations.

The situation in Kiangsi Province was not so favorable to the government. Rebels and Communists in that province were said to be continuing their depredations of months past.

No Word from Kanchow Missioners.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (AP).—The American consulate at Canton advised the State Department today that Cantonese authorities had received no replies to their messages to Chinese authorities at Kanchow in regard to the safety of Americans and other foreigners there.

Bishop J. A. O'Shea of the Kanchow Catholic Mission, whose home is in Deepwater, Conn., and other foreigners are still believed to be in Kanchow.

The consulate reported it felt that Communists possibly had taken the city.

A delayed dispatch from the United States gunboat Palos off Changsha reported the departure of five Americans from Changteh for Hankow on the steamship Tungwo. Those departing were the Rev. W. H. Lingle of Salisbury, N. C.; Mrs. Ulmer and Miss Wolf, whose full names and addresses were not given, and V. L. Farnham and G. T. Tootell, whose addresses were not given.

Those remaining were A. N. Cameron, F. B. Talbott, W. P. Ulmer, A. T. Parker, E. Tocowen, R. M. Morley, Dr. Louise Farnan and a Mr. Rushucj.

The Palos reported it had not heard from three women whose names were not given and Miss Boone, Miss Woods and Mrs. Gelwicks, who were reported to have left Siangtan for Sian Siang. Changteh was reported to be undisturbed despite the departure of some foreigners.

RAIDS IN MANCHURIA.

Trouble Again Stirs Around the Chinese Eastern Railway.

MUKDEN, Manchuria, Aug. 16 (AP).—Travelers on the Chinese Eastern Railway report that there have been raids against the railway by what appeared to be regular Mongolian and Russian cavalry between Khailar and Tsitsihar.

They also said that there had been increased activity by the Red army in the vicinity of Manchuli, a border point of the railway.

DIES ON PRINCETON LINKS.

Visitor From Illinois Collapses During Foursome With Trenton Party.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Charles L. Greaves, 34 years old, of Winnetka, Ill., collapsed late yesterday on the Princeton golf links while preparing to play a foursome with friends, and died shortly afterward. Death was ascribed to heart trouble. Because of complications in reporting the case to the authorities, the incident did not become known until this morning.

According to the story told today at the golf links, Mr. Greaves, with Neil Bowman, president of the Pocono Rubber Company of Trenton, who lives at 6 Newlin Road, Princeton, came to the clubhouse late yesterday afternoon. There were two other friends in the party. Mr Greaves was preparing to tee up for the first hole when he collapsed. He died before assistance could be obtained.

LONDON FORESEES WAR WITH TRIBES IN INDIA

LONDON, Aug. 16 (AP).—Considerable uneasiness has been aroused here by admissions in official announcements at Simla, the Indian Summer capital, that a serious situation exists on the northwest frontier.

There is a fairly general expectation here that a frontier war on a large scale will develop as a result of efforts to crush the Afridi and other marauding tribesmen who recently have threatened Peshawar.

Since Parliament is not in session, the usual method of eliciting information, by questions to the Ministers concerned, is unavailable. The government itself is making no statements, so that the public has become dependent for news on Indian official communiqués and the censored dispatches of Indian correspondents, who, it is believed, are not allowed to tell all they know of the situation.

The anti-government papers today took a gloomy view and inferred from the Simla announcements that the position justified anxiety.

Lull in Border Situation.

PESHAWAR, Aug. 16 (AP).—A lull in the border situation has developed just now while the tribesmen await reinforcements. The Afridis on the Khajuri plain are expecting more men from the Kohat district. Their Orakzai allies similarly are waiting in the Khanki valley.

The Haji of Turangzai, perennial anglophobist, is trying to raise a lashkar [military force] in Bajur to help the Afridis. "Red Shirt" bands have been busy in the Charsadda district, north of Peshawar. All sections of the Afridis are now regarded as implicated in the revolt, but the Mohmands hitherto have shown themselves averse to fighting.

APPEALS TO CANADA ON PROBLEM OF INDIA

Sir John Simon, in Address to Dominion Bar, Says Its Concern Is Vital.

TORONTO, Aug. 16 (Canadian Press).—The Indian problem is a world problem, the responsibilities of Canada are now world-wide, and the people of this Dominion should give the affairs of India more interest and consideration, Sir John Simon, chairman of the Indian Statutory Commission and author of the Simon report, said in addressing the Canadian Bar Association at luncheon today.

Sir John said Canada's entry into world politics threw upon the political leaders and citizens of the Dominion the responsibility of taking the widest view of public affairs.

"There is a large immigrant Indian populationin South Africa, and the trade between India and Africa is very considerable," he said. "Australia and New Zealand are more closely connected with India through ocean transport, and the problem of the external defense of India has a particular importance to them. But here in the New World the Dominion of Canada seems remote from the Indian problem and naturally tends to be chiefly absorbed in the events of the North American Continent. My appeal to you is that you should devote yourselves as careful and sympathetic students to this Indian question."

TREVIRANUS ROUSES OLD FRENCH FEARS

Paris Sees in His Tone a German Threat of Force to Compel Polish Corridor Revision.

BRIAND ATTACKED ON ISSUE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—As each day marks the accentuation of the French resentment, it cannot be denied that the several recent statements of the German Minister for the Occupied Areas, Dr. Gottfried R. Treviranus, regarding the acute necessity of reopening the Polish corridor question, have placed a great strain on Franco-German relations. The old suspicion of German designs which the advocates of direct rapprochement have been striving to lay is being raked up again, and the advanced evacuation of the Rhineland, to which public opinion consented only in the hope of promoting closer friendship with the former enemy country, almost begins to appear to have been in vain.

The more moderate sections of French opinion have now joined the Nationalists in their denunciation of the "treaty revision campaign." The government is called upon to follow the example of its Polish ally and to present an energetic protest to Berlin.

It is not without significance, therefore, that this evening's semi-official Le Temps displays prominently the announcement of Herr Von Hoesch, the German Ambassador to France, that he is leaving for Berlin Tuesday to confer with Dr. Curtius, the Foreign Minister. Well-placed observers see in this another effort of the French Foreign Minister, M. Briand, to influence the Germans to abandon their treaty revision talk at this stage.

Speeches Awaken Old Fears.

Three speeches by Dr. Treviranus have the effect of awakening the old fears that Germany, in spite of all her smooth explanations, is preparing to back her demands for treaty revision with a threat of force. Those who give voice to these fears support them with quotations from the recent writings of General Von Seeckt and other German military leaders regarding the necessity of Germany arming herself for the inevitable struggle to come.

The controversy has also played directly into the hands of those influential Frenchmen who have been declaring that armaments and not treaties must be France's only security. The effect of the appeal by Minister of War Maginot for greater military expenditures by France, which occupied one-half of the front page of this morning's Le Journal, has been considerable. It is needless to say that the interview was timed to impress the widest public. The War Minister, who was a hero of the World War, gave the interview at Vittel, where he is spending a vacation. Briefly summarized, it was an appeal for approval for the increased war budget to be demanded next year and for a reduction of compulsory military service to one year mentioned as the chief justification. By those who are following the treaty revision controversy, however, M. Maginot's remarks are interpreted as an energetic reply to Germany's revision manoeuvres.

Poland's Position Clear.

For the average Frenchman, it is explained here, it is not difficult to understand Germany's dissatisfaction with the territorial situation in Europe; but a settlement of the Polish corridor matter in a sense favorable to Germany could be effected only by an injustice to Poland, and thus a new grievance would replace the old one. It would appear to be the accepted view here, therefore, that any attempt on the part of Germany to start a movement at this time for the return of the Polish corridor, either through the League covenant or by direct diplomatic means, would be an entire waste of time.

Ardent French Nationalists are using the present developments as an excuse to attack M. Briand, and Pertinax, writing in this morning's Echo de Paris, asserts that when Dr. Treviranus stated on Aug. 14 that a number of European politicians, even in Paris, shared the German view with reference to treaty revision, he meant the French Foreign Minister.

"We are able to explain the meaning of that sentence, thanks to very certain information which reached us yesterday morning from Berlin," explains Pertinax. "Dr. Treviranus alluded to M. Briand. Dr. Treviranus was informed of the rash opinions expressed by the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, among them one to the effect that changes might be made in the present status quo of Europe, and in which the unquestionably peaceful temper of our people was abused. It proved sufficient to inspire insane hopes in Dr. Treviranus's German head."

Pertinax then discloses that Poland is actively engaged in colonizing both Upper Silesia and the Polish corridor.

"Every night that passes adds to the numerical preponderance of Poles," says Pertinax. "It is this peril which inspired the Berlin Government system of 'Osthilfe,' that is to say, Eastern financial help for the so-called persecuted Germans of the corridor and Upper Silesia.

"The occupation of the Rhineland kept Germany in check and gave Poland the necessary time to consolidate her work.

"The Rhine is being evacuated now, and Germany proceeds to launch her offensive five years in advance."

MOVE TO END STRIKES IN NORTHERN FRANCE

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Both the government and textile employers moved today in an effort to end the strike which for nearly two weeks has seriously crippled the industry in Northern France.

In a communication to the workers the textile employers of Roubaix and Tourcoing adopted a conciliatory tone urging the men to return. They did not promise wage increases, but said that increased living costs would be taken into consideration. They also made clear that the bonus offered workmen as a good service award, which has been injected as a grievance by the strikers, was not obligatory and would only be put into effect where the men desired it.

The communication asserted that losses in wages thus far incurred in the strike amounted to more than the total for the year's premium of social insurance, the issue on which the strike was originally called.

To this communication, the workers have not yet replied, but meetings have been called for tomorrow.

Pierre Laval, the Minister of Labor, on the other hand, addressed a plea to employers and workers in the Lille metallurgical conflict to meet under his mediation. To this the employers replied that they would be unable to discuss wage increases, because if they were to resume operations at all it would have to be with pay cuts.

BARTER DEMANDED BY SOVIET PEASANTS

Goods for Grain Is Their Aim, but They Are Ready to Exchange at Fixed Prices.

MOSCOW PRESS GLOOMY

"Self-Criticism" Finds Fault on Wholesale Scale—Kremlin Likely to Ease Burden of People.

By WALTER DURANTY.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, Aug. 16.—Although "free speech" and a "free press" in the western sense are unknown in Soviet Russia, Moscow newspapers are now indulging in such a loud chorus of complaints, rebukes and pessimism that it has probably not been equalled since Jeremiah was the "official spokesman" of Israel.

To read the newspapers one would suppose the country was headed straight to perdition. "The July and August grain collections are only 40 per cent of the estimate"—"the battle for grain is our gravest problem"—"transport deficiencies"—"traffic jams threaten the five-year plan" or "14,000 accidents in six months"—"underproduction in the coal mines"—"chaos in cooperative distribution"—"shortage of building materials"—"meat shortage, fish shortage, commodity shortage"—"squabbles over the harvest distribution in the collectives"—"bureaucracy, red tape, inefficiency, indiscipline, drunkenness, loafing."

Some Real Alarm Caused.

It is a dark and gloomy picture. This the Russians call "self-criticism," and they have mobilized a whole army of worker and village correspondents whose special duty is to expose weaknesses, abuses and shortcomings without fear or favor. The Bolsheviki assert, no doubt with justice, that this is a healthy sign, but its effect is somewhat alarming under the present conditions, when the life of the ordinary Soviet citizen is rather difficult.

Any one who is now in Russia knows this and finds it hard to believe the Bolsheviki are really worried about the situation. This "self-criticism" is perhaps reaction from the flood of optimism which was poured out during the recent party convention. It is also a convenient way of letting off steam. But the fact remains that there are one or two ominous phenomena.

For instance, there is a growing tendency, especially on the part of the peasants but noticeable even in Moscow itself, to prefer the straight barter of goods to their sale or purchase with money. It is a natural result of the commodity shortage. People find they cannot buy goods with money, and remembering the terrific inflation of earlier days (the rouble was ultimately stabilized at 50,000,000,000 paper rubles to one of gold) they are inclined to imagine that history is repeating itself, and the paper currency is losing its value.

This technically is untrue because, despite heavy issues of currency during the last year to correspond with he development of business and industry the proportion of the gold cover has been successfully maintained. But the public does not understand that, and instead of realizing that it cannot buy goods because the demand far outstrips the supply it imagines the money is growing worthless, as it did before.

That is the basis of the whole trouble over the grain collections. Most of the collective farms have bumper crops and with few exceptions are well disposed toward the State, which has aided them with credit and equipment. But they are run by Russian peasants, who are far shrewder creatures than their low standard of living and culture might lead one to suppose.

Peasants Demand Goods.

Most of them are willing to sell their grain to the State collectors at fixed prices, although the latter are considerably lower than the "open market," but not unless the State in return will guarantee them a certain amount of manufactured goods. As they say, simply, "A bushel of grain or a boot or a table or a knife is gold, but paper is only paper." So these simple peasants distribute their collective crop in such a way as to leave only a small "marketable surplus."

Despite the outcry of the press it is only a temporary difficulty which already is being remedied by the shipment of manufactured goods to the villages. Your correspondent can report positively that the Soviet is exporting new-crop grain from Black Sea ports as fast as the ships can be loaded. If necessary the Soviet can and will buy manufactured goods, meat or fats abroad.

The government does not want to do this and will not if it can help it, but the Kremlin has its ear mighty close to the ground nowadays and the percentage of Communists, which runs as high as 45 per cent in "key" factories in Moscow, enables the Kremlin to gauge popular sentiment and take whatever steps are required in plenty of time.

That is to say, it is not just a question of how long the masses will or can stand the burden imposed from above by the five-year program. The masses today, especially the Moscow workers, understand what the Kremlin is trying to do and address the Kremlin directly through their Communist spokesmen, and the burden will be lightened before it becomes intolerable.

PERSIA FIGHTS KURDS.

Now Cooperates With Turkish Troops—Angora Envoy to Return.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ISTANBUL, Aug. 16.—The Turkish Government has been informed that Persian troops are now cooperating in the suppression of the Kurdish revolt.

They have fought a severe battle, in which 300 Kurds were killed.

ISTANBUL, Aug. 16 (AP).—It was reported in official circles today that the Turkish Ambassador to Persia, Chavket Bey, who was recalled yesterday, will return to Teheran within a fortnight or that another envoy will go in his place.

3 AMERICAN SENATORS SEE RUSSIAN JEWELS

Wheeler, Cutting and Barkley Will Visit a Soviet State Farm Today—Silent on Views.

MOSCOW, Aug. 16 (AP).—Three United States Senators—Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, Bronson Cutting of New Moxico and Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky—today viewed the Russian crown jewels, the world's greatest single collection of gems, valued at between $250,000,000 and $300,000,000.

The American officials and a special party of American tourists saw the magnificent stones in their royal settings at the State Bank repository. The gems were strewn about on tables with not a single armed sentry in sight.

Several apparently unarmed English-speaking attendants mingled with the visitors. To all appearances the safety of the jewels, seized from the Romanoffs in the revolution, was in the keeping as much of the visitors themselves as of the Russian guides.

The three Senators were allowed to examine the jewels for a half hour alone. Then the others, twenty-seven in all, of the Sherwood Eddy tourist party were admitted.

The Senators will leave tonight for a two days' visit to a Soviet State farm, after which Senators Wheeler and Cutting will return to Berlin, Paris and home, while Senator Barkley, with the rest of the party, will return by way of Leningrad. The Senators have tried to see everything possible and apparently are greatly interested in what is going on in Russia, but have declined to make any statement of their views on the Soviet experiment.

PUSHES PASSAIC BRIDGES.

New Jersey Highway Commission Will Receive Bids on Sept. 3.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 16.—The State Highway Commission will receive bids on Sept. 3 for the construction of bridges to carry Route 4 across the Passaic River between Paterson and East Paterson and adjacent streets.

The structures will be two-fifths of a mile long and will necessitate the building of a temporary bridge over the Passaic while the new span is under way. In addition to the structure over the Passaic, bridges also will be built over River Road in East Paterson and over the new Route 3 which will be constructed along the bank of the Passaic River at that point. Ramps will permit vehicles to pass from Route 4 to Route 3.

The new work will be on the line of Broadway and will extend from Forty-third Street in Paterson to Parkinson Avenue, East Paterson. Route 4 is to be one of the main arteries to the new Fort Lee bridge and now is paved between East Paterson and Arcola.

2. Velvet, treated simply, falls naturally along Grecian lines. Add a strapped neckline, flowers the color of the Aegean sea — and anybody becomes a goddess! Black, blue, $150.00

3. The lacy foundation of this "shawl frock" bears a design that might have been copied from a molding on the Acropolis and the fringe cascades in tiers. Red, black, white, 135.00.

4. In true Grecian manner, the fullness begins above the waist, falls to peplum length—then falls to tunic length—then falls to the ground. Black or white lace with sequins. 235.00

5. Chanel achieves the classic by a careful, rhythmical use of diagonal lines in the bodice and a skirt that hangs full—in a petal effect. Satin in white, green, petal pink, 75.00.

Goddesses on Mount Olympus might have worn such sandals. Above, the Artemis sandal: corn or scarlet suede with gold. Green or pink with silver, 25.00. Below, the Aphrodite sandal. White moire with silver, black moire with gold, 18.50.

"It's a Phrygian helmet!" No, eager ladies, it's Bruyere's latest little velvet cap from Paris and quite the most bewitchingly silly thing we've seen. It starts way back on the forehead, acquires a jagged crest, and then ends calmly in a feminine bow in back, 15.00.

GRECIAN women understood the art of leaving a good thing alone. They took an abundance of rich material, fastened it loosely on their shoulders, molded it firmly above their waists — and let it fall. The result was a rhythmic simplicity which has charmed the ages. Paris — faced with a season of simple elegance — turns instinctively to the Greeks. In sophisticated ways Patou, Vionnet, Molyneux achieve Grecian effects. Rich materials falling of their own weight . . . unbroken lines . . . deep folds . . . utter harmony. Majestic femininity lives again! Best's, always alert to the beauty in fashion, is the first to present the Greek influence on modern dress in its most important phases.

ZUTA RECORDS SPUR DENIALS IN CHICAGO

Judge Schulman and Others Named in Dead Gangster's Books Offer Explanations.

'DOCTORED' ACCOUNTS SEEN

Prosecutor's Aides Press Study of Widespread Graft Revealed by Lingle Murder Inquiry.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Officialdom and gangdom in Chicago were shaken to the depths and law abiding citizens were stunned today as revelation of the contents of two safety deposit boxes left by Jack Zuta, slain manager of the Moran-Aiello North Side gang, tended to involve scores of politicians and policemen in dubious financial dealings with the underworld.

Judge Joseph B. Schulman of the municipal court and Louis I. Fisher, brother of Circuit Judge Harry Fisher, were among the first to appear at the State's Attorney's office to explain the transactions back of checks made out to them found in Zuta's effects. Many others were to be called, the prosecutors said, and each item in the Zuta records will be carefully scrutinized.

Zuta was suspected of ordering the assassination of Alfred J. Lingle, crime reporter for The Chicago Tribune, who was shot to death in a crowded subway passage June 1. Zuta was slain by five gunmen Aug. 1 at Delafield, Wis., because, it is believed, fellow members of the North Side gang feared he would "squeal" about the Lingle murder.

With the finding of Zuta's safety deposit boxes yesterday the gangster in death has furnished more concrete evidence of the alleged alliance between politics and crime, the prosecutors assert, than they could have hoped to obtain from him alive.

Indication of "Doctored" Books.

Evidence appeared also to indicate that Zuta may have "doctored" accounts of race track and gambling enterprises in which he and the gang were interested.

Patrick Roche, chief investigator for State's Attorney John A. Swanson, disclosed that one of Zuta's balance sheets showed that for a period ended Nov. 12, presumably of 1929, the gang receipts were $429,046, with profits of $75,137.

Another paper found seemed to be a penciled version, possibly the original of the same sheet, but showing a discrepancy of $20,000.

A further revelation concerned entries of payments aggregating $108,469 to "M. K." The indication from the entries was that "M. K." was Zuta's pay-off man or go-between in the matter of protection money to county and city officials.

It was reported that Matt Kolb, North Side ward worker who has been linked with gambling and beer-running operations, would be questioned by the investigators.

Prosecutions under the evidence disclosed in Zuta's records may be difficult, it was sadi, because almost all found are dated prior to 1927, bringing the statute of limitations into effect.

The investigators are seeking two trunks which belonged to Zuta and believed to contain further graft and racketeering records, while preparing photostatic copies of those found.

With the information that these new masses of data existed, a race between gangland and the State's Attorney's office developed. It was understood that if the investigators came into possession of the trunks the most detailed and damning information against every judge, police official and public officer who might be protecting gangland's criminal commerce would be available.

Judge Schulman's Explanation.

Checks and notes bearing Judge Schulman's name totaled $5,500. After talking to Roche for an hour and a half, Judge Schulman made his explanation to newspaper men.

"I was elected judge in 1921 and had no further use for my law offices," he said. "An attorney named Morris I. Green (frequently counsel for Zuta) was looking for an office, and he took over mine. About that time I was building or remodeling my home, and I needed money and told Green so.

"Green said he would be able to discount my note and get me money that way. I gave him a note for $1,000 and later another one for $500. I didn't know he was getting the money from Zuta.

"I was in financial difficulties and I had to 'kite' some checks. Green would get me a check and I would write one of my own for the same amount and date it a month ahead and give it to Green. I didn't pay any attention to the names on the checks or the notes."

Judge Schulman said he knew Zuta only casually and never had any dealings with him.

Mr. Fisher, who was counsel for the dog racing track enterprise operated by Zuta, visited the office of Assistant State's Attorney Rathburn after Judge Schulman.

"I can't remember ever receiving any checks from Zuta," Mr. Fisher told newspaper men. "If there are two checks payable to me and signed by him, I can't remember what they were for. They may have come to me from friends for legal services. I have known Zuta for some years and was friendly with him."

Denials by Republican Leaders.

Homer Galpin, formerly chairman of the Cook County Republican Committee and whose name was on a membership card made out to Zuta, said he did not know Zuta and that, if Zuta made any campaign contributions to the Republican organization, he did not know anything about them.

Charles V. Barrett, member of the Board of Review and formerly treasurer of the Republican County Central Committee, said he had no personal knowledge of a check that bore his rubber-stamp indorsements as treasurer of the organization and that he did not know Zuta.

Former State Senator George Van Lent, whose name appeared as the recipient of some of Zuta's money, could not be located for an explanation.

Emanuel Eller, former judge of the Superior, Criminal and Municipal Courts, and son of City Collector Morris Eller, boss of the Twentieth Ward, was out of town and no explanation of the purpose of a $250 check drawn in his favor by Zuta on April 4, 1922, was available.

Mr. Roche said the records contained many other names that may be made public later after he and his aides had a chance to investigate them. Unquestionably they are records of graft payments, Roche said, and he was making an inquiry regarding the notation under disbursements, "East Chicago, $3,500," which was supected to have been a record of protection money paid to the police of the East Chicago station.

CHICAGO INVESTIGATES LEGISLATOR'S DEATH

State Senator Called by Grand Jury to Tell of Armed Men at Polls Was Poisoned, Brother Says

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Mysterious circumstances surrounding the cause of State Senator John T. Joyce's sudden death today prompted Coroner Bundesen to order an analysis of the body fluids and tissues and to set an inquest Monday morning.

Senator Joyce, who was 36 years old, was found dead in bed in his apartment at 207 East Chestnut Street by his wife. He was a near-North Side Republican leader.

A post mortem examination revealed, Coroner Bundesen said, that Joyce came to his death "by cerebral anemia brought about by toxic causes." The brain was entirely anemic, according to Dr. Paul Schmidt, who performed the autopsy.

Senator Joyce returned home late last night from a tour of his ward, his wife told police. She was unable to state the exact places he had visited because he had simply told her he had been about the ward, she said.

Joyce recently created a stir when he charged in the courtroom of County Judge Jarecki that State's Attorney's men, armed with machine guns, invaded a polling place in the Forty-second Ward and intimidated voters last primary day.

Asked by Assistant State's Attorney Charles C. Case to name the men, Joyce replied:

"You may not value your life, but I am not going to put myself on the spot."

He was subpoenaed by the grand jury Friday, made his appearance and was due to reappear Monday morning.

It was said that Edward Joyce, a brother of the Senator, expressed the belief that he had been poisoned.

WOMAN HELD IN SLAYING.

Police Believe She Knows Who Killed Man in South Jersey.

Special to The New York Times.

WOODBURY, N. J., Aug. 16.—Marjorie Buckles, alias Marjorie Barkley, 26 years old, said to be the common-law wife of Anthony Tamburro, alias Jack Buckles, whose body with five bullet wounds was found near Fries's Mills Thursday afternoon, was held here today without bail as a material witness by Edward H. Curtis, police recorder, pending an inquest on Monday.

After more than five hours of questioning by W. Clayton Angar, county detective, and Andrew Zapolski, State police detective, the Philadelphia woman disclaimed all knowlerge of Tamburro's death. Investigators believe, however, that she knows the secret of the slaying and are trying to connect the fact of her stabbing several weeks ago with the Tamburro shooting.

'3-X' NOTES WRITER, DEMENTED, IS TAKEN

Elizabeth (N. J.) Man Caught Sending Messages Like Those of Slayer of Two.

VIOLENT WHEN DETAINED

Women Companions of Murdered Men Say Suspect Is Not the One Who Did Killings.

Letters, telegrams and telephone messages that have annoyed the police here and in New Jersey since the murder of two men in Queens by a man who mailed warnings under the signature of 3-X were believed by the police to have been stopped at their source yesterday, when Hudson Gallity, 28 years old, a civil engineer, of 736 McGee Avenue, Elizabeth, was taken into custody at 107 Montgomery Avenue, Jersey City.

The young man became violent on Friday night when approached by Lieutenant John O'Neill and Sergeant Philip Beggans as he stood near a public telephone booth from which he had been sending cryptic messages to the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company branch at 77 Montgomery Avenue, Jersey City. After a struggle he collapsed in the policemen's hands and was half carried to the Jersey City Police Headquarters. From there he was taken to the psychopathic ward in Jersey City Hospital, where he was placed under the care of Dr. Arthur Hasking, County Physician.

Catherine May, who was in an automobile with Joseph Moyzynsky, College Point delicatessen dealer, the night he was shot, supposedly by "3-X," visited Gallity yesterday in the hospital. She was accompanied by her mother and her brother, John, and by Betty Ring, the young woman who was with Noel Sowley, the youth who was murdered in a similar manner. Both women said Gallity was not the man who had shot their companions.

Discussed Winning $5,000 Reward.

Mrs. May, however, identified him as the person who came to her home in College Point on Aug. 9 and discussed with her the chances of apprehending the murderer and receiving the $5,000 reward that had been posted. While there he telephoned the Postal Telegraph station on Montgomery Avenue, Jersey City.

The patient recognized Mrs. May and her son and admitted having visited them. He admitted also having written letters about the Queens murders to newspapers, the police, insurance companies and the office of the Bronx District Attorney.

John J. Gallagher, police inspector, went from Long Island City to see Gallity, and after talking with him and with the two young women, expressed the opinion that Gallity had had nothing to do with either shooting and was not responsible for the letters written immediately before and after the two crimes were committed.

Writing Shows Irresponsibility.

Inspector William Hogue of Jersey City said last night that a comparison of Gallity's handwriting with that of the 3-X letters and considering the texts of the missives, furnished additional proof that the man was not responsible.

At Jersey City Police Headquarters it was said that Gallity lived with his mother at the Elizabeth address. The family had come there from South Carolina a few years ago, and at that time, it was said, Gallity, well educated, was meeting business success. According to the police, losses in the stock market caused his mind to fail.

2,400 STORM BUREAU AS JOBS REWARD 120

City's New Employment Office, in First Two Days, Registers 4,400, Gets Work for 200.

MANY AGAIN TURNED AWAY

Director Appeals to Employers for Even Temporary Places for Disappointed Throngs.

The city's unemployed continued yesterday to pour into the municipal Free Employment Agency at 54 Lafayette Street. At noon, when the overworked registrars were permitted to rest until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, 2,400 jobless had registered and 120 fortunates had obtained their first jobs in months and, in some cases, in years.

All who had managed to crowd into the second floor of the loft building opposite the Tombs before 12 o'clock were registered. Clerks worked until 1 o'clock to take their applications. But the many who came later were told to return tomorrow. Figures for the two days the bureau has been functioning stood at 4,400 applicants and 200 jobs filled. There can be no estimate of the numbers who turned away in despair without filing applications.

The Department of Public Welfare appropriation for the employment bureau is $35,000. With a force of twenty registrars, ten field men scouring for jobs and with other help, it became problematical yesterday as to how long the bureau's resources for attacking the unemployment pproblem would hold out. Edward C. Rybicki, director of the bureau, declared that he does not anticipate a slump in the daily number of applicants for the next week.

The 120 jobs filled yesterday were mainly for porters and restaurant and factory workers. A number of them were of a temporary nature, but Mr. Rybicki, in continuing to broadcast his appeal for cooperation from employers, insisted that even temporary jobs lasting one, two or three days would be of inestimable aid to desperate men in the present crisis.

Mr. Rybicki announced that the doors of the bureau would be closed at 2 o'clock each afternoon, beginning tomorrow, to enable the clerks to catch up with the vast number of registrations, which for the past two days have swamped the bureau.

Several requests for skilled mechanics could not be filled yesterday, despite the horde of applicants. One offer was for an auto mechanic to go out of town. There were no takers, the New Yorker out of a job apparently being reluctant to leave town, despite his economic condition.

Wages offered in connection with the jobs available yesterday ranged from $12 to $40 a week, as they had the day before. More women appeared for jobs yesterday than during the first day, 350 women and girls applying.

The same order and quiet which marked the opening of the bureau, despite the huge crowds in quest of work, ruled yesterday morning. Save for a rare rowdy who pushed, the lines were patient and orderly. Only one policeman was on duty. In anticipation of a record registration Monday, Mrs. Florence M. Grant, assistant director of the bureau, said an additional policeman would be assigned to handle the crowds.

To the casual observer, the job-seekers on the lines appeared cleanly and neatly dressed, but they showed the anxiety under which they strained.

Mr. Rybicki declared that he receives at least fifty letters a day begging for jobs. Mayor Walker also receives many requests daily, which he turns over to the city employment bureau. A number of the charitable organizations are turning in daily requests, Mr. Rybicki said. All applications are being filled on the principle of first come, first served, he declared.

RAILROAD OFFICIAL DIES IN AUTO UPSET

J. G. Wise of White Plains, New York Central Man, Killed in Maine—Wife Hurt.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Word reached here today that James G. Wise, 43 years old, of 16 Myrtle Street, assistant terminal engineer of the New York Central Railroad, was killed and his wife, Mary Requa Wise, was injured last night in an automobile accident at York, Me. Three children of the couple, Mary, aged 18; Harriet, 16, and Gordon, 9, escaped uninjured.

Their automobile turned turtle twice and caught fire. Mr. Wise died soon after admittance to the York Hospital. Mrs. York suffered a broken collarbone, cuts and bruises and possible internal injuries.

News of the death of Mr. Wise, a native of Ohio, who had been a resident of this city for more than twenty years and had been connected with the New York Central for even longer, was received today by his sister-in-law, Mrs. S. Erwin Requa of 4 Bogart Avenue.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 16.—Ten persons were injured, two persons probably fatally, in a collision late this afternoon on the White Horse Pike at Pomona. The two most seriously hurt are Michael F. O'Connor, 19, of Yeadon, Pa., and his mother, Mrs. Mary O'Connor, 50.

According to the State Police, the car driven by Michael O'Conner was proceeding toward Philadelphia from Atlantic City when it was in collision with a car owned and driven by Philip Zaleznick, 24, of Philadelphia. Five other occupants of Zaleznick's car and two others in the O'Conner car were less seriously injured.

The two cars were wrecked.

Epworth Institute Ends Today.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 16.—The annual Epworth League Institute of New Jersey, conducted at the Pennington School for Boys, will close tomorrow with three services. The Institute is attended by 300 delegates from societies in all parts of New Jersey, and courses in many lines of church work have been offered during the past week.

Receiver for Argyle (N. Y.) Bank.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., Aug. 16 (AP).—The Controller of the Currency at Washington has appointed State Bank Examiner A. M. Douglas temporary receiver for the National Bank of Argyle, Washington County, which closed its doors yesterday, five days after the bank's president, Howard E. Snyder, shot and killed himself.

ASKS 3 STATES' AID IN POLLUTION FIGHT

WOULD INCREASE PATROL

Governors Larson, Roosevelt and Trumbull Urged to Cooperate in Obtaining New Legislation.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Reporting on the pollution of harbor waters, the United States grand jury for New Jersey today recommended increased patrolling of the New York harbor and cooperation of municipal authorities whose cities and towns border on the harbor.

Several trips were made recently by the grand jury under direction of United States Attorney Phillip Forman to learn how this problem could be solved.

Three recommendations made by the jurors are:

"That the force of inspectors operating under the direction of the supervisor of the Port of New York be increased so as to permit a more rigid patrolling of the waters.

"That the appropriation allowed the corps of engineers, United States Army, for the work of clearing wreckage and débris should be increased so that the organization may expedite the removal of the wreckage and débris, especially where the same cannot be traced to definite owners.

"This body respectfully recommends this problem to the attention of all municipal authorities whose cities and towns border on the harbor and the rivers emptying thereinto, with the objective that these municipal authorities will enact stringent regulations designed to prevent the disposal of sewage in these streams, except under the most approved scientific means and will further, by regulation, cause the factories existing under their control to refrain from disposing into those streams chemicals and other polluting material."

Governors Larson of New Jersey, Roosevelt of New York and Trumbull of Connecticut were urged by the panel to discuss the matter and consider it with some view to passing legislation.

The jury announced that it was favorably impressed with the work of Captain R. Drace White, United States Navy, in his capacity as Supervisor of New York Harbor, but added that if progress is to be made in clearing and cleaning the waters, further work should be done.

ANSWERS PARENTS' GROUP.

Dr. Campbell Says Board Gave All It Could for Play Centres.

Replying to the charge of the United Parents' Associations that the Board off Education's budgetary provision for an increase of $13,080 for the after-school athletic centres "merely scratched the surface off the need," Deputy Superintendent Harold Campbell said yesterday that the board approved the largest increase consistent with the other needs of the system.

Dr. Campbell said he agreed "thoroughly" with the associations' emphasis on the importance of the play centres, and that the Board of Education was sincerely interested in expanding them to the fullest possible extent. He added, however, that public education presented other pressing neds for the 1931 budget and that the provision for 3,500 additional play sessions could not be increased.

He directed attention to the record increase of nearly $5,000,000 in the 1931 budget, and declared that the policy of gradual expansion of play centres would be continued.

REPORT SHIP SANK A HOAX.

An attempt on the part of her husband to effect a reconciliation with her was given yesterday by Mrs. Kathleen Sturgis, a waitress at 545 Fifth Avenue, as the reason for the announcing of the sinking of the fishing boat Kathleen, on which her husband is employed as a member of the crew. Mrs. Sturgis yesterday received a telegram, supposed to have been sent by the captain of the boat, to the effect that the schooner had been sunk and that there was no word from the crew.

Mrs. Sturgis, who has been separated from her husband for the past six months, declared the reported sinking to be a hoax. The Kathleen was later found alongside a dock off Gloucester, Mass.

"It was a cruel hoax," Mrs. Sturgis said yesterday. "The Kathleen has a crew of sixteen, whose families must have been terribly distressed."

DIVORCED FROM "COUNT."

Mrs. Von Buelow Carries Through Fourth Attempt at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16 (AP).—After having filed and withdrawn three divorce suits, Mrs. Lottie Brenner von Buelow carried through her fourth attempt and the wealthy widow of a former city Alderman obtained a divorce tday from her husband, "Count" Enrique Dechow von Buelow, who is several years her junior.

Mrs. Brenner met von Buelow in Mexico. He came to Chicago and they eloped to Crown Point, Ind., where they were married May 7, 1929. Several separations and reconciliations followed. It developed that the husband was not Count von Buelow, but had assumed the name, he said, with permission of a family with whom he had lived in his minority.

Mrs. Brenner charged cruelty and testified that after the marriage von Buelow wanted power of attorney in connection with her estate.

CONFIDENT SLAVES WILL NOT BE USED

State Department Expresses View After Reassurance From New York Company.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16. — State Department officials today indicated they had no apprehensions that any work to be done in Ethiopia (Abyssinia) by the J. G. White Company of New York would be done by slave labor. No formal complaint has been made that such labor is being used by the American company in exploration work incident to the eventual construction of a dam on the upper Nile, near Lake Tsana, as suggested in press dispatches from Geneva stating that the matter had been laid before the League of Nations.

It was explained that some time ago the department received a letter from an individual, who had read in a book on Abyssinia, suggesting that the American company probably would use slave labor. The matter was called to the attention of the department merely as a matter of information, it was stated, and the department passed it on to the J. G. White Company.

The anti-slavery convention mentioned in the Geneva dispatches, officials pointed out, has to do with the suppression of the slave trade by the high contracting parties "each in respect of the territories placed under its sovereignty, jurisdiction, protection, suzerainty or tutelage," and Abyssinia comes under none of these categories. However, the department is confident, in view of the company's statement, that no slaves are being used or will be used.

Reducing Girdles

There is a good bit of hokum about any article that has anything to do with reducing. Girdles are no exception. Certain advertisers guarantee reduction. They mark their girdles at preposterous prices—knowing that the lure of a slim svelte figure will tempt a woman to pay almost anything. Well, here's the truth of the matter:

No girdle can be guaranteed to reduce.

A good rubber girdle will increase perspiration, which usually leads to a loss of weight and slimmer hip measurements.

Reducing girdles need not be high-priced. The four shown here are excellent. Try one. It may make you thinner, it probably will, and the cost is very little.

Airship May Take Premier of Canada to Imperial Parley—Comfort of Craft Is Stressed.

By J. FERGUS GRANT,

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Cricket absorbed the attention of England to the exclusion of H. M. airship R-100, which completed today the epochal voyage to Canada and back, which began at Cardington on July 29 and which has brought fresh honors to the country that seeks to maintain her position as the leading maritime nation of the world.

Although the dirigible was moored to her mast at noon, British Summer Time (7 A. M. New York Time), after crossing from St. Hubert Field, Montreal, in the fast time of fifty-seven hours, London's afternoon papers relegated the news of the craft's return and her achievement to insignificant positions on the inside pages. The cricket test match between England and Australia at Kennington Oval and other human interest material received the leading positions.

The welcome was in marked contrast to that at Montreal, only officials, relatives and friends of the crew and several hundred spectators from nearby Bedford being present at Cardington to congratulate the fliers. This gathering was enthusiastic, but its small size surprised the Canadians who had crossed in the airship.

Air Minister Gratified.

Lord Thomson, the Air Minister, was on the mooring tower with Sir Sefton Brancker, Director of Civil Aviation. As the prime mover and constant advocate of this great experiment, Lord Thomson was highly gratified with the results that have justified the confidence in airships which he displayed before some doubting fellow-Ministers in the Labor Cabinet.

In conversation with your correspondent Lord Thomson expressed his satisfaction in no uncertain manner. Indeed, he was so far satisfied with the flight of the R-100 that he may allow her to visit Canada again this year. As he expects to start for India in the R-101 on Sept. 26 that airship cannot be sent across the Atlantic, but there is every possibility that the R-100 will make a second visit to Canada to bring Prime Minister Bennett and the other Ministers to the Imperial Conference.

Wing Commander R. B. B. Colmore, director of airship development, said he had no fear of the airship's safely completing another voyage to Montreal. Certain repairs will have to be effected to the fin fabric but this should not take long. In all probability Montreal will be permitted to welcome the R-100 again within two months.

Lord Thomson is preparing an exhaustive memorandum on airships for presentation to the delegates attending the Imperial Conference. Within three years he expects to see a regular service established between Great Britain and Canada during at least eight months of the year. He predicts mooring masts will be erected at every seaport in the world within twenty years.

Propose to Spend $15,000,000.

An expenditure of $15,000,000 is proposed over a period of three years for the construction of airships, the next two of which should cost about $2,000,000 each.

"I am thoroughly satisfied with the results up to date," Lord Thomson said, "and with the young men who are carrying out the scientific experiments. I was profoundly stirred with the great welcome extended by the people of Canada."

Lord Thomson pointed out that mooring facilities might have to be created on the eastern edge of Canada. He said a shed should be erected in future and that the refueling arangements must be improved.

The Air Minister said government subsidies must be provided as for ocean steamers, and he expressed the hope that the transportation interests would cooperate with the British and Canadian Governments in developing airship services, mentioning E. W. Beatty, chairman of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Sir Henry W. Thornton, chairman of the Canadian National Railways, whose support he seeks in this new venture. It was made clear that the service will be established at first as an imperial project, though it may be extended subsequently to embrace the United States.

Found Airship Comfortable.

There is no doubt that the dirigible is a comfortable vehicle. Your correspondent has now crossed the Atlantic on thirty-three occasions and he found the journey in the R-100 to be by far the most pleasant trip. Dinner was taken in Montreal last Wednesday and luncheon in London today. Until the R-100 nosed down to her mast at Cardington there was never the slightest deviation from the horizontal. Except for the sea beneath, one could have imagined the day was being spent in a house.

Even when a stiff head wind was encountered on Thursday night, considerably delaying the progress of the ship, there was no change in her even motion. The rain beat down incessantly for nearly twelve hours and nearly six tons of water were collected. This was beneficial, as its weight compensated for the fuel consumed, thus saving an equivalent amount of hydrogen.

The officers, observers, passengers and crew suffered slightly as the water filtered through the fabric and caused a short circuit in the electric wiring between the generators and the galley. Nothing hot was served at meals during the trip after Thursday.

Airship Runs Into Rain.

A tropical sunset brought the first day to an end, but then the airship ran into rain and contrary winds. Friday morning was overcast, but the clouds were mostly below, presenting a beautiful picture. Requests for shaving water brought the disconsolate reply, "There is no hot water this morning, sir." But the full portent of this information was only realized when sardines were served at breakfast and when tea and coffee were lacking. This, however, was the only untoward incident during the voyage until the ship descended from 3,000 feet to 200 feet at Cardington.

Then a distinct rip was heard and glances were exchanged between the passengers. The tearing sound continued for nearly thirty seconds and then stopped. The R-100 was going down and the ground was coming up, but no precipitous descent occurred. Sir Dennistoun Burney, builder of the ship, as managing director of the Airship Guarantee Company, sped forward and then aft, but he could find nothing wrong. N. S. Norway, his chief calculator, examined the upper part of the passenger accommodations, but also drew a blank. The explanation was put forward that the noise came from the gas bags from which hydrogen was being released. It was held these had probably stuck to the wire and string mesh enclosing them.

Wireless transmission was carried on throughout the flight by an efficient corps of operators who received meteorological information, from which weather charts were prepared.

Weather Message Delayed.

All went well during Thursday, when a depression was indicated between Iceland and Germany and another in the vicinity of Bermuda. Due to the pressure of work at the land stations and possibly through the sending of press dispatches, one message only was received for several hours after the stipulated time. This indicated that the Bermuda depression was traveling fast and was responsible for the northeast wind into which the ship had run. The officers had been somewhat worried until this message came, as they could not account for the sudden change. Had the meteorological information been received at the right time the adverse winds could have been avoided.

This indicated the importance of receiving the weather reports regularly and may be considered as one of the most valuable lessons learned on the voyage. It is more than probable that special wireless stations will be established at Belle Isle and Valencia, Southern Ireland, when the transatlantic service is started.

Commenting on the efforts of the press correspondents, Sir Dennistoun Burney said: "In the saloon are half a dozen of the country's leading desriptive writers looking like schoolboys sucking their pencils and trying to write descriptive dispatches concerning the last four hours that must not exceed 100 words each."

New Cover Being Made.

Wing Commander Colmore allowed the press representatives to have the entire run of the ship. One of the most interesting experiences was a journey along the outer cover, reached from the observation platform in the nose of the ship. It held some difficulties as the wind blew fiercely and the summit always appeared to be far distant. This little trip gave an excellent opportunity of examining the fabric, which appeared to be in first-class condition.

Another cover is being made for the R-100, but this should not prevent a flight to Canada in October as the present cover is still in good condition. Some alterations will probably be made to the fins, where portions of the fabric were torn on the way up the St. Lawrence.

Less than one-half the available power was used on the flight, as three of the engines were mostly run at a reduced speed. With all six motors the R-100 has a total horsepower of 3,900, but no more than 1,400 horsepower was used during three-quarters of the trip. Four and then five engines were operated as the English coast was sighted.

Among the vessels signaled was Ausonia on Friday. Aboard her was a suitcase which your correspondent dispatched five and one-half days before the R-100 left Montreal and which will arrive in London two days hence.

The R-100 is not a dry ship, and the question was asked whether an airship service between Europe and the United States would eliminate alcohol from its stores.

Log of R-100 by British Air Development Chief, Describing Return Trip, Released by Ministry

CARDINGTON AIRDROME, Aug. 16.—The official log of the return flight of the dirigible R-100 from Canada, written by Wing Commander Colmore, director of British airship development, and released by the Air Ministry, follows:

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 13.

Ship slipped at 9:30 [P. M.] local time from St. Hubert mooring tower, having aboard 9,585 gallons of fuel, 6.3 tons of ballast, 1.5 tons of drinking water and fifty-six persons, including thirteen passengers, nine of whom were representatives of British and Canadian newspapers.

The airship made a splendid getaway after passing over Montreal and shaped her course down the St. Lawrence. Quebec was passed at 11:45 local time. The progress of the ship over the St. Lawrence was entirely uneventful. The speed made was good, with only three engines running, favorably winds making this possible. At midnight, local time, the ship's position was the southwest end of Green Island, having covered nearly 190 miles in two and one-half hours.

THURSDAY, AUG. 14.

Father Point was passed at 2 A. M. Favorable winds continued and Belle Isle was abeam at noon. The weather was fair, with a clear sky and no clouds. We covered the first 850 miles of the trip in thirteen and one-half hours. The westerly winds began to drop very rapidly as we got into the Atlantic, and, after a period of light winds, at about 2 P. M. a strong headwind was encountered from the northwest, associated with the depression which we approached from the southwest.

By altering the course so as to move for a time in a southeasterly direction the maximum adverse effect of this unfavorable wind was avoided and later in the evening we found ourselves in the belt of favorable winds on the south side of the depression.

Heavy rain and low clouds were encountered during the passage through the depression. We were steaming for about five hours at sixty miles per hour air speed but were making good only about twenty-five miles per hour. About seven tons of ballast water were collected. While passing through the heavy rain the ship was soaked with a certain amount of water which found its way on board. Owing to this the electrical cooking apparatus was temporarily disabled. The outcovers still require improvement.

At about 1 P. M., local time, the wind at the time being south, it was decided to lay a course to approach North Ireland rather than South, as was the first intention. We obtained the immediate benefit of wind lying to our starboard quarter, and we shall encounter westerly winds as we near the Irish coast. At 7 P. M., local time, we altered our course toward the coast of Ireland and expect to cross Galway coast between 2 and 3 A. M., G. M. T. [about midnight local time]. Now making good seven knots.

During the night we received a report from Cardington that southwesterly winds might be expected. We therefore decided to shape our course for Fastnet and proceed to our base via Lundy Island.

SATURDAY, AUG. 16.

At 3 A. M., G. M. T., we sighted Fastnet. Johnson has again made a good landfall. Lundy Island was in sight at 6:45 A. M., G. M. T. We passed Barry and Cardiff at about 7:45 and sighted Bristol and Cirencester. We sighted the Cardington sheds at 7:47, G. M. T., and dropped the main wire at 10:35, G. M. T. Our time in the air was 57 hours 5 minutes. The fuel remaining totaled 3,200 gallons.

FLIER TO REVISIT IRELAND.

Kingsford-Smith to See Again Field From Which He Flew Over Atlantic.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VEERE, The Netherlands, Aug. 16.—Before his Australian flight, Major Charles Kingsford-Smith expects to fulfill a promise to General McNeill, commanding the Curragh camp of the Irish Free State Army near Dublin, to visit the field where the Southern Cross commenced its transatlantic journey. The flier hopes also to visit the Junkers factory at Dessau, near Berlin, by air from Amsterdam for an inspection.

After several days' recuperation here as a guest of Henrik W. van Loon, he plans to go to Amsterdam tomorrow to arrange his business affairs. He may remain there a fortnight before proceeding to England.

FOUR GET PROBATION JOBS.

Reorganization of Westchester Bureau Nears Completion.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Joseph O. Wilson of Hartsdale is one of four men appointed to the recently created positions in the county probation department, it was announced today by William J. Harper, director of the reorganized department.

Richard A. Flinn of Yonkers was named as deputy director of probation at a salary of $3,500 a year; William J. Whelan of Yonkers and Victor C. Passage of Mount Vernon will serve as county probation officers at salaries of $2,750. They will begin work in a few days. Thirteen positions remain unfilled.

By THURSTON B. MACAULEY.

"clear the ship." The luggage was examined aboard and then the passengers and crew disembarked.

Arrival Is Broadcast.

Before descending to the ground in the elevator all were greeted at the top of the tower by Lord Thomson, the Air Minister, and other leading British air officials. The ceremony of welcome, as well as a description of the mooring of the airship was broadcast throughout Britain, being heard by many thousands who were not able to see the actual arrival.

Addressing Wing Commander Colmore, Lord Thomson said:

"I welcome you home from Canada and congratulate you on having accomplished the first stage in the development of British airships whose contribution to our imperial air communications must be of incalculable significance."

Lord Thomson then paid a personal tribute to the excellent handling of the airship by Squadron Leader Booth, commander of the R-100, and to all the officers and crew "for magnificent work done in circumstances which provided a searching test not only of their efficiency but also of the sound construction of the R-100."

"On the way back we had no trouble whatever," he said. "We ran into rather a bad patch on Thursday night. It took us several hours to get out of that, but otherwise we had a very smooth passage. There was a good deal of fog, but there was no difficulty in navigation."

Welcome Chance to Smoke.

Practically the first thought of each of the fifty-six persons aboard on leaving the ship was for a smoke and a Canadian National Railway's representative had the forethought to meet them all as they left the mooring mast with packages of cigarettes and boxes of matches, none being allowed on the airship.

The passengers, the officers and the crew were also greeted by their families when they stepped onto the ground again. Lady Burney, wife of Sir Dennistoun Burney, designer of the R-100, was among the relatives present.

"I never had any anxiety and you see my confidence was justified," she remarked.

In a joint interview later with the airship's principal officers, Squadron Leader Booth, Major G. H. Scott, assistant director of flying; Wing Commander Colmore and Sir Dennistoun Burney, it was revealed that what was most missed during the last part of the voyage was the Englishman's customary tea. The electrical stove equipment in the kitchen had been put out of commission by rain coming through the fabric and it was impossible to have any hot food and drinks.

"I think the loss of our tea was felt most keenly by all aboard," Major Scott said, whereupon Sir Dennistoun Burney added: "We wanted a cup of tea, but this is not a dry ship and we were all right. The only consequence was that the beer ran out quicker than it otherwise would have done."

Impressed by Comfort.

Asked what had especially impressed him during the journey, Major Scott replied: "How extraordinarily easy it was. In contrast to my journey in the R-34 this trip was far ahead in comfort and security. There was no air sickness whatsoever and everyone aboard was amazed at the ease with which the ship traveled."

Discussing the changes to be made to the R-100 and the R-101 as a result of the experiences during the Canadian voyage, Major Scott said the present type of fabric covering on the hulls would be replaced. The present covering, he added, had been found faulty because it allowed rain to leak through the envelope into the interior, and so it would be replaced by the old type of covering. The engine trouble which kept one of the six engines unused was in the reduction gear, he explained.

Major Scott was also asked about the prospects of the establishment of a commercial airship service to Canada and elsewhere. "It is entirely a matter of finance," he said. "The amount of flying they are doing on the other side is terrific and it is because that is the country for aircraft—there are big distances and a sufficient amount of money." The present flying program of British airships, he added, was for only one to fly at a time, and the next trip would be the cruise of the R-101 to Egypt and India early in the Autumn.

Many letters were brought in the R-100 and also a box of cut flowers for Buckingham Palace and a case of Canadian peaches for the Prince of Wales.

Look to Regular Service.

CARDINGTON, Aug. 16 (AP).—Wing Commander R. B. B. Colmore, Major G. H. Scott and others who returned here on the R-100 today believe the success of the flight to Canada and back is a sure augury for a regular airline service between Canada and Great Britain. They envisage a bi-weekly service of airships de luxe, each carrying 100 passengers and from five to ten tons of mail, under the cooperation of the Canadian and British Governments with private capital.

Meanwhile they believe the R-100 should be kept in commission on some commercial basis, being sent back to Canada for further experimental investigation, and that she should make frequent transatlantic flights, carrying passengers and mail, instead of lying idle at Cardington.

Sir Dennistoun Burney has already advanced a program for the ship to go back and forth between Canada and England on a regular service.

Death House Inmates Get a Radio.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Six inmates of the death house in State's prison here, will be entertained in the future by radio. A receiving set has been installed in the death block, Colonel Edward B. Stone, principal keeper, said today. Profits from the prison store made the purchase of the radio set possible. Colonel Stone intimated that the entire prison may yet be equipped with radios.

PLANS A SKYSCRAPER AS EDUCATION CENTRE

COST PLACED AT $4,000,000

MUSEUM TO BE A FEATURE

Plans for a skyscraper of about twenty-five stories to house the administrative offices of the Board of Education, centralize many services scattered throughout the city and provide space for a museum of exhibits illustrating public educational activities are being considered by the board, it was learned yesterday.

So far the project has not reached the stage of architectural planning, as several important features have not been determined finally. The location, however, has been practically ascertained for many years, as educators have agreed that the site of Public School 27, in East Forty-Second Street, near Third Avenue, would be ideal from the point of view of accessibility.

Plans Remain Tentative.

Preliminary sketches of the projected structure, which is expected to cost more than $4,000,000, were drawn by the board's Bureau of Construction and Maintenance last Winter, according to Clarence E. Dobbin, chief of the checking division. However, because it has not been determined just what space would be necessary for administrative offices and auxiliary agencies, the sketch is considered highly tentative.

The drawing shows a building rising from twenty to thirty stories above the street, topped by a handsome tower. The upper stories are set back in considerable proportions.

Six months ago the bureau canvassed the various divisions of the board with a request for specifications as to the amount of space each would consider sufficient for its needs. Many replies have been received, but some departments have not been able to fix their needs, as moving to a new building would involve an expansion of facilities.

Deputy Superintendent Harold G. Campbell said that the project had not been formulated in final, concrete fashion by the board, which is studying the financial angle of the plans.

In a special memorandum published last Thursday with the budget estimate for 1931, the board indicated it would call upon the city for corporate stock to the value of about $39,000,000 for construction projects planned for 1931. That sum, Mr. Campbell said, does not include the project for a central headquarters.

While the project evidently is reaching the stage of final decision, it is not known whether the building would be included in the 1931 or a subsequent construction program. The building program for 1931 will not be approved by the Board of Estimate until early next year, Mr. Dobbin said, and the Board of Education will not complete its formulation until late in the coming semester. The matter therefore will not be decided for some time.

Need Long Recognized.

If a decision is made to include the project in the program for next year, the appropriation probably will be made a special item to be appended to the regular building list.

The necessity for a central educational headquarters long has been recognized. The present nine-story building, on the valuable corner at Fifty-ninth Street and Park Avenue, is considered inadequate for the needs of the system's offices.

Due to lack of space, many important bureaus and departments are scattered throughout the city in ten additional buildings. The old fire headquarters building, at 157 East Sixty-seventh Street, houses the attendance bureau and the Department of Health Education. The work of the inspectors of ungraded classes is conducted at 11 Lexington Avenue and an office building accommodating various types of administrative activity is located in Brooklyn at 131 Livingston Street. The building bureau occupies two and a half floors in the Brooklyn Technical High School at Flatbush Avenue Extension and Concord Street and there is an office in the Bronx for the Deputy Superintendent of School Buildings.

In addition, there are three supply "depositories" at different addresses in Manhattan, a garage on East Ninety-first Street and a special office building at 34 East Twelfth Street.

The central building on Park Avenue accommodates, however inadequately, several of the main offices such as the Board of Education, the Board of Superintendents, the Board of Examiners and the main offices for evening, extension and related activities. For several years extensive alterations have been made in an effort to rearrange offices to provide more space. Waiting rooms are small and in many instances nonexistent, and the slightest expansion in the functions of a bureau creates a serious problem of accommodation. The resources of the building recently were taxed to provide a small waiting room for teachers waiting to see the medical examiners and a private conference room.

Would Be Economical Move.

"The new building," said Dr. Campbell, "will coördinate all the activities under one roof and make for better administration of the system. Too much time is now lost because so many important branches are scattered about in other buildings."

That complaint was echoed by Mr. Dobbin, who said the building bureau's work was handicapped by the remoteness of the office from architects' offices.

Few activities will be left outside of the headquarters building when it is ready for occupancy. The deputy superintendents of buildings will be left in the boroughs over which they have supervision. Several clinical activities will remain scattered, as that is desirable for their work. But all the other main activities will be housed in the central office.

Dr. Campbell said the projected educational "museum" would "show the taxpayers of this city and visitors, who come here to study our system from all over the country and the world, just what the schools are doing."

He pointed out that the transactions involving the transfer of the offices and the construction would result in a saving to the city, as the Park Avenue site is valued at more than $2,000,000 and the school system has several other sites which it could relinquish to the city for its use.

44TH'S OFFICERS IN CAMP.

Special to The New York Times.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 16.—Following the departure of men of the 104th Engineers and 119th Medical Regiment, New Jersey National Guard, today the last contingent of the New Jersey soldiers arrived at the State camp for their annual training. Included among the new arrivals were officers of the staff of the Forty-fourth Division, commanded by Major Gen. Quincy A. Gillmore, who will begin their Summer schedule under regular army instructors.

102d Cavalry, commanded by Colonel Lewis B. Ballantyne of Newark; Sixty-ninth Field Artillery Brigade, in command of Colonel Samuel G. Barnard, Haddonfield; Fifty-seventh Infantry Brigade Headquarters, commanded by Brig. Gen. Winfield S. Price, Camden; Headquarters Special Division Troops, commanded by Major Joseph B. Leimer, Orange; Forty-fourth Division Military Police, in command of Captain Grover P. Heinzmann, Passaic; Forty-fourth Division Signal Company, in command of Captain Theodore M. Douglas, Newark; 119th Motorcycle Company, commanded by First Lieutenant George H. Parker, Flemington, and the 119th Ordnance Company, commanded by Captain Cyril E. Edmonds of Trenton.

SAY BEER RAN OUT SINK TAP

BUDD LAKE, N. J., Aug. 16.—Led by Lieutenant Edward Debhardt, State police and prosecutor's detectives of Morris County raided four cottages in this Summer resort today and arrested four men on charges of violating the State prohibition law.

All the men were held in $1,000 bail to await the action of the Morris County grand jury. About fifty barrels of beer were seized. The men arrested were John Dagistino, Arthur A. Brown, William Shule and John Martin.

According to the police, the raiders entered "Brownies Inn," where they found that beer from barrels in the cellar was being pumped through ordinary water pipe lines and that it could be drawn from faucets in the kitchen sink.

FLORISTS GOING TO COAST.

New York Telegraph Delivery Group to Leave Wednesday for Convention.

The annual convention of the Florist Telegraph Delivery Association, which has a membership of 5,000 florists in the United States and Canada, will be held at the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco from Sept. 2 to 5, it was announced yesterday by Adolph Lemoult, chairman of the New York and Brooklyn units of the organization.

A special train of fifteen cars will leave Grand Central Station Wednesday morning, he said, with about 150 delegates to the convention from the metropolitan area. The train will be elaborately decorated with flowers. Similar trains from Boston and Philadelphia are expected to join at Chicago and continue to the West Coast in five sections.

landed sixty-three years ago, he said, "If we go at this speed, when will we get there?" He said he first came here to race "shortly after the great flood," that he had never been to Newport, the scene of this year's cup event; and he also remarked: "No, I have not been received before by the police."

Sir Thomas on Radio.

Mr. Whalen appeared and radio men and sound-picture operators thrust their microphones close. As the Macom drew away from the liner, Mr. Whalen introduced the yachtsman to a radio audience listening to 178 stations of the National and Columbia Broadcasting Companies linked with the Macom by a short-wave radio, arranged for by Albert Goldman, Commissioner of Plant and Structures. The municipal station, WNYC, also carried the broadcast, as did short-wave stations, which, it was announced, formed a link with all parts of the world.

"You are no stranger to New York, Sir Thomas," said Mr. Whalen. "As an old friend of mine, the Mayor has asked me to convey to you his heartiest greetings and his hope that success will crown your efforts. He thinks you are the world's greatest sportsman and the greatest yachtsman of all time." He also welcomed him on behalf of the reception committee.

Speaking into the microphone, Sir Thomas declared: "I have been very fortunate in all of my races so far with the Shamrock V. It's a new boat and I have hopes this time that I have a good boat. I have a feeling I have a boat that will win. I have done everything possible to make the boat successful. Several Americans have offered to help me. They have been so good that I believe they would go along and give the boat a push behind if I wanted it.

"I am very glad to be back again in America and to meet my many American friends. I have come again to try to win a certain very valuable trophy that has been here seventy-nine years. I think it is about time it went back to its native land. I have received the kindest expressions from my friends here. Indeed, if good wishes alone would bring me success the cup would be as good as won. Anyhow, I believe we shall have a good race, and may the best boat win!"

Wind against the microphones and the noise of sirens often interrupted the broadcast. After another session with the photographers, Sir Thomas went below, where he discussed the Shamrock V, which arrived Wednesday at New London. He said that it was "a better boat than the others because it has finer lines and is a new design." Major William Kennelly, president of the New York Athletic Club, suggested that it would win because it carried 2,000 square feet of canvas. Sir Thomas nodded.

"The last time I was defeated," he said, chuckling, "was by Charles Francis Adams, Secretary of the Navy. I told him to get a gunboat and I would get a gunboat, and we would fight it out that way."

Harbor Craft Salute Visitor.

Ferries and other harbor craft saluted the distinguished visitor with their whistles as the Macom progressed up the harbor. Off the Battery a fireboat shot streams skyward in the gray fog. For the first time Sir Thomas left his seat to look at the spectacle. "Wonderful!" was his comment.

A crowd of 1,000 or more lining the Battery wall and a throng on an excursion boat at Pier 1 cheered loudly as the yachtsman stepped ashore. At the pierhead he was told that wind had interfered with his broadcast and was asked to repeat it. Mr. Whalen introduced him again, but all that Sir Thomas would say was "I am glad to be back in America. I feel quite at home here."

He went to the Biltmore at the head of a procession of eight cars, escorted by motorcycle policemen. John Westwood, his secretary, said that while Sir Thomas was in good health, the excitement tired him. Mr. Westwood disclosed that as the Leviathan was leaving British waters, King George had radioed Sir Thomas, saying: "My best wishes. Best of luck in your quest for the America's Cup."

The yachtsman said that he had no engagements in New York. While he had had a smooth voyage and the Leviathan was "a splendid ship," he said he planned to "rest" in New York until tomorrow or Tuesday, when he will board his steam yacht, the Erin, which escorted the Shamrock V from Europe, and will proceed to Newport, where the first of the cup races is scheduled to take place Sept. 13.

He had been in touch by radio with those in charge of fitting out the Shamrock V for the races, but intends to make a visit to New London to inspect her.

Those who went down the harbor yesterday to greet Sir Thomas included Major O. H. Saunders, assistant chief of staff to Major Gen. Hanson E. Ely, commandant of the Second Corps Area; Captain Stafford Doyle and Commander George W. Simpson, representing Rear Admiral Louis R. de Steiguer, commandant of the Third Naval District; Gilbert T. Hodges, representing the Advertising Club; George Mand, Charles E. Murphy and Captain John F. Emery, director of the Port of New York.

Sir Thomas's is the fourteenth attempt by foreign challenger to wrest away the cup which was won by the Yankee schooner America in a race around the Isle of Wight in 1851—at which time the veteran yacthsman was one year old. Sir Thomas first entered the field in 1899, when the Columbia defeated the Shamrock I. The Shamrock II was defeated by the same yacht two years later. In 1903 his Shamrock III was beaten by the Reliance. The Shamrock IV was in mid-Atlantic when the War began, and the race was not run until 1920, when Sir Thomas's craft made a better showing than any of her predecessors.

Sir Thomas spent yesterday afternoon and evening resting and chatting with friends in his suite on the sixth floor of the hotel. It was said on his behalf that while he had no plans for the next day or two, he might visit the Erin today. The steam yacht was expected to arrive here late last night or early this morning and was to anchor in the North River off the Columbia Yacht Club at Eighty-sixth Street.

SIR THOMAS BACK TO TRY FOR THE CUP.

NATION HEARS LIPTON ON AIR.

He Speaks a Second Time After Bay Noises Mar Macom Broadcast.

The voice of Sir Thomas Lipton was carried to radio listeners throughout the country yesterday when he stepped ashore at Pier A, at the Battery, after leaving the Leviathan at Quarantine. The local stations were WNYC, WEAF and WABC. Short waves from the city tug Macom, which brought the owner of the Shamrock V from the liner to the Battery, carried a word-picture of the event to networks ashore. Thomas Cowan of WNYC was the announcer.

Sir Thomas was induced to speak into the Macom's microphone during the transfer, but his comments were marred by atmospheric disturbances and noises in the bay. However, when he stepped ashore, he was again introduced by Grover Whalen and again spoke briefly.

He was then driven immediately to his hotel and the broadcasting ceased. The description from the harbor began at about 8:25 A. M. and ended shortly before 10. Transoceanic broadcasters linked with the radio chains operated simultaneously with the hope that Sir Thomas's words might be heard in foreign countries.

Lipton Asks for Reservation In Poorhouse if He Fails to Win

When Sir Thomas Lipton had gone to the Hotel Biltmore to rest after the city's reception yesterday a close personal friend remarked to him:

"You've got to win the cup. I've put down a big bet on Shamrock, and if she doesn't come through I go to the poorhouse."

To which Sir Thomas retorted:

AMERICANS DEDICATE MEMORIAL IN FRANCE

PARIS, Aug. 16.—In dedicating a new community centre at Nantillois, near Montfaucon, today, Mayor Harry A. Mackey of Philadelphia recalled the heroism of the men of the 315th Infantry who fought there Sept. 28, 1918.

The new community centre was built entirely with contributions from members of the regiment as a memorial to 942 of their comrades who were killed at Montfaucon. The building contains a recreation room with a motion picture machine, as well as a clinic and showers for the children's playground.

"This ground on which you rebuilt your homes," said Mr. Mackey to the citizens of Nantillois, "was made sacred to us by the sacrifice of the flower of Philadelphia's youth. It is specially fitting that Philadelphia should be represented here today, because, twelve years after the war that city is pervaded by the same fraternal spirit that animated her sons who fought here. It was not an egotistical motive which caused them to come to France to aid in the liberation of the invaded villages. They responded to a call for help when they came to accomplish their mission in this little town of Nantillois, and this gives them a right to a glorious place in the history of your village."

Ambassador Paul Claudel, who attended the ceremony, thanked Mr. Mackey and the members of the regiment for their gift, as did the Mayor of Nantillois and the Prefect.

Captain Edward A. Davies, chairman of the memorial committee and Lieutenant John A. McKenna represented the regiment, fifty members of which, it is announced, will hold their reunion next year in the recreation room of the new building.

SEE LATIN AMERICA CHANGED AT GENEVA

TARIFF HELD TRADE BARRIER

Staff Correspondent of The New York Times.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Aug. 16.—Participation of Latin America in the work of the League of Nations is waning, in the opinion of authorities from both North and South America who debated the relationship of the Monroe Doctrine and the League of Nations at the closing session of the Virginia Institute of Public Affairs today.

Representatives of Guatemala, the Dominican Republic and Mexico agreed that participation of the American republics in the work at Geneva is purely nominal.

Dr. Adrian Recinos, Minister of Guatemala, said that should the plan for the formation of a Latin-American group by Spain, Portugal and their former colonies materialize, "the result of such a union cannot be foreseen, but one may anticipate that it will not be decisive in a place where the affairs discussed pertain to Europe and not to America, since Article 21 of the League Covenant pledges European nations to respect the Monroe Doctrine, thereby excluding them from America."

Europe has exerted a philosophical, cultural and social influence in South America as yet unequaled by the United States, Dr. Recinos said, adding that "the Latin-American people realize that the development of the natural resources of their countries requires the support of the capital and initiative of North America."

Holds Americas Need Each Other.

"I wish to say in all sincerity," Dr. Recinos continued, "that in my opinion the Latin-American republics from Mexico to Chile are today more than ever in favor of a policy of cooperation with the United States, not by the Monroe Doctrine, which has achieved its historical purposes, not by intervention, which the United States as well as the other republics wish to avoid, but because every day the belief is more general that the United States and Latin America need each other."

Citing the "rivalry" between Argentina and Brazil, Dr. William Spence Robertson, Professor of History at Illinois University, said that now that Brazil seems definitely to have withdrawn from the League, Argentina may emerge from the state of "suspended animation" in which she has remained for a number of years.

Dr. Clarence H. Haring of Harvard asked whether Argentina's withdrawal after her demand for an amendment to the Covenant recognizing the principle of equality of all nations might not have been inspired by a desire ultimately to jockey Brazil out of her pre-eminent position as a charter member of the League and later by re-entry to assume the position of spokesman for the Latin-American bloc in the League.

This was the view taken by Dr. Robertson, who indicated that definite withdrawal of Brazil might mean re-entry by Argentina.

"In a general sense the republics of America have an important place in the League of Nations," Dr. Recinos said, "but in the political and practical sense this importance is overshadowed by the fact that the largest country of the continent, the United States, is not represented in the League, nor has it adhered to the Court of International Justice."

Jurisdiction Held "Delicate."

The problem of the respective jurisdictions of the League of Nations and the United States over New World international issues was described by Dr. Robertson as extremely "delicate."

"A practical solution of the dilemma arising from Article 21 of the League Covenant lies in the lap of the gods," he said. "For the time being we must confront the fact that by an appeal to the parliament at Geneva a Latin-American State may conceivably put an elastic element of our foreign policy to an acid test."

The extension of the Monroe Doctrine to Antarctica to keep the British from claiming rights over that territory was termed "absurd" by Dr. Maddox, Professor of Political Science at the University of Virginia, who said that there could be no possible menace to American interests justifying invocation of the doctrine in this case.

Summing up the results of the two weeks' discussion of Latin-American relations, Dr. Clarence H. Haring, leader of the round table, said a more neighborly policy on the part of the United States toward the Southern republics had become noticeable during the past months.

Considers Tariff Trade Obstacle.

Foreign resentment against the tariff and the tendency of American manufacturers to regard foreign markets as a dumping ground were held as two great obstacles to the development of America's export trade by Floyd W. Jefferson of the Iselin-Jefferson Company of New York. Mr. Jefferson urged American concerns doing business in foreign lands to select their representatives more carefully, saying that "unfortunately the type of business man who in the past has tried to carry our message to export markets has frequently failed to rank with the better informed, better commercially educated Continentals who have settled permanently in the countries in which their life's work lies."

State and national authorities dealing with the agricultural problem have overlooked that a large part of the farm population has a living standard so low that they have as bad an effect on the population as a whole as the competition of cheap foreign labor, Dr. C. J. Galpin of the Department of Agriculture declared in summing up the two weeks' session of the round table on "National Country Life Questions."

Between the extreme recommendations of "reducing acreage and running people off the land to let the trees grow" and "giving them the right to stay under any conditions," Dr. Galpin urged as a middle ground an effort by farm management to double incomes from small farms and the improvement of merchandising methods.

Bringing the institute to a close, Dr. Edwin A. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia, described it as "an adventure in education," having for its purpose the "cultivation of intellectual hospitality toward new ideas and the destruction of intolerance." In education for the duties of citizenship and in the habit of open-mindedness, Dr. Alderman said, "lie two great safeguards of that democracy which is the final hope of man in government."

TWO SEIZED IN HOTEL AS JEWEL ROBBERS

Two of the four men alleged to have held up Kieva Yasnor in his jewelry store at 3,321 Church Avenue, Brooklyn, on Thursday forenoon and escaped with $15,000 worth of jewels, were arrested last night in the Thorndyke Hotel, 208 West Fifty-sixth Street, and held in the Delancy Street station. Both prisoners face life terms in prison as fourth offenders, according to the police.

They are Herman Heft, 35 years old, who gave his address as 203 Tompkins Avenue, Brooklyn, and Andrew Rocco, 28 years old, of 22 Aspinall Street, Tottenville, S. I. The police said they were Philadelphia men, as were their companions, and that they had given the former addresses of their parents. They confessed their part in the hold-up, and the arrests of their companions in another city are expected shortly, according to the police.

The arrests were made by Detective Thomas Duffy of the Snyder Avenue station, Brooklyn. Aided by photographs which Yasnor had pointed out in the Rogues' Gallery in Manhattan Police Headquarters, Duffy traced the two men to the Thorndyke Hotel. In their room the detective reported finding the black bag in which they made off with the jewels and four pistols. By means of a rust stain on the barrel of one weapon, Yasnor identified it as the one that Heft, the supposed leader of the gang, had pointed at him while his accomplices scooped up seven watches, some unset diamonds and other pieces of jewelry.

Rocco and Heft will be arraigned this morning on charges of illegal possession of firearms, and tomorrow District Attorney Brower of Brooklyn will ask the Kings County grand jury to return indictments against them on charges of highway robbery as fourth offenders.

PINCHOT AND BROWN IN CLASH AT RALLY

BROWN RETORTS IN DEFENSE

FOGELSVILLE, Pa., Aug. 16.—A display of bitterness seldom equaled between members of the same political party at the launching of a State election campaign took place here today when Gifford Pinchot and Francis Shunk Brown, rival Republican candidates for the Gubernatorial nomination in the May primary, spoke from the same platform.

Mr. Pinchot, who was the winner on the face of the certified ballot count, renewed his attack upon the alleged crookedness of the Philadelphia Republican organization, and Mr. Brown, the Vare candidate, in reply charged that 100,000 votes had been stolen from him in the primary.

Because of the uncertainty of the political situation State Chairman Edward Martin announced that the rally could not be regarded, as similar functions have been in the past, as marking the formal opening of the Republican campaign.

On Tuesday the Supreme Court will sit in Philadelphia to decide upon Mr. Brown's application to invalidate all the perforated ballots cast in Luzerne County. If the plea is granted the revised count would make Mr. Brown the nominee instead of Mr. Pinchot.

Issue in "Crooked Election."

Mr. Pinchot in his address discussed two principal issues for the Fall campaign, public utilities and prohibition. But he laid most stress on election reforms and unemployment. He avoided any extended discussion of prohibition, asserting that he would not permit his wet Democratic opponent, John M. Hemphill, to make use of this issue "as a way of sidetracking" the other important questions.

A prime necessity for the Republican party in the entire country was "a complete clean-up of election conditions in the leading Republican State," he asserted. With obvious reference to the primary, he charged that "elections in certain parts of Pennsylvania are notoriously crooked" and named Philadelphia, Alleghany and Lackawanna counties.

As to the prohibition question, Mr. Pinchot said:

"The Democratic wets and the scattering of Republican renegades who are threatening to go over to them appear to think that the one great question which agitates the people of Pennsylvania is how to get a drink. I am of opinion that a far greater question, of far more consequence to many more people is the question of how to get a job or earn a living."

Brown Makes Sharp Reply.

Mr. Brown, who followed the former Governor, charged that he had lost 100,000 votes in the State at large through "theft" at the polls in May and asserted that Mr. Pinchot was the beneficiary of corrupt practices in the primary.

"Votes were taken from me in the north side of Pittsburgh, a wet district," Mr. Brown said, "and the votes were purchased with money, but it was not my money. Put that in your pipes and smoke it."

"Before this campaign opened," he continued, "never did any one dare cast aspersions on my character. Any one who does is without honor and without shame.

"The gentleman who preceded me took a dig at my native city of Philadelphia, charging crooked elections there. I am sorry to dig into these personalities, but the gentleman has attacked my native city and I cannot sit idly by without defending her."

Mr. Brown was interrupted several times with boos and hisses, and on one occasion he stopped to say to the feminine contingent of 2,000 or so:

"Ladies, be ladies, please."

Secretary Davis, Republican nominee for Senator, and other party candidates, as well as political leaders from all parts of the Commonwealth, attended the rally.

Pinchot's Address.

Mr. Pinchot in his address said in part:

"The Republican party of Pennsylvania has taken the side of decency and the square deal in the two most conspicuous issues now before the people of the United States. One of them is the public utility issue.

"The principal plank in the platform upon which I was nominated in the recent primary is the abolition of the present Public Service Commission. This commission has been consistently unfair to the people and consistently over-fair to the untilities. It must be replaced by a fair-rate board, organized to give the people a square deal.

"I shall not at this time discuss the prohibition question further than to say that my attitude toward it remains precisely what it was during my first term. But perhaps I ought to point out to the wet Democratic candidate for Governor, who recently came almost into my back yard to make his demand that I should talk about drink, that not even the youngest of us can create issues in that way.

"It would be foolish to permit my opponent to make use of the drink question as a way of sidetracking the public utility question, as a way to dodge the clean election question, as a way to walk around the unemployment question and every other question the voters of Pennsylvania will have before them during the present campaign.

"There was a time when the port of Philadelphia was second to none in the country," Mr. Pinchot continued, leading up to his assault upon the Republican organization there.

"What Pennsylvanias have done once, Pennsylvanians can do again, provided the conditions in Philadelphia are such as to make it possible.

"Certain disgruntled political leaders, incited and supported by certain public utilities, are refusing to abide by the rules of the game and accept the decision of the voters in the Republican primary. With no regard for party or for principle, but driven by the desire of their masters to control the government, they propose to bring about the election of a wet Democrat instead of the Republican nominee.

"These are the men of whom Elihu Root, whose sound Republicanism none can doubt, described as a corrupt and criminal combination masquerading as Republicans. They are now engaged in proving that Root was right.

"The defection of these masqueraders is neither respectable nor important. Moreover, it will be made good, and more than good, by thousands of Democratic voters who refuse to approve the alliance between the worst elements of their party and the worst elements of ours.

"No one thing is more essential to the permanent success of the Republican party in Pennsylvania, or more important to the Republican party in the nation, than a complete clean-up of election conditions in the leading Republican State.

"However much local pride may shy at an acknowledgment of the actual facts, the truth is, and we all know it, that elections in certain parts of Pennsylvania are notoriously crooked, have long been crooked and will continue to be crooked until the law-abiding citizens of Pennsylvania rise up and call a halt.

"One of the foremost duties of the next administration will be to secure the introduction of effective clean election bills in the Legislature and leave no stone unturned to see that they are passed.

"The vast majority of the voters of this State are sick and tired, and rightly so, of election corruption in Philadelphia, Allegheny and Lackawanna Counties and elsewhere. They will rightly refuse to leave the balance of power in State affairs in the hands of the beneficiaries of crooked elections or crooked machines."

WANAMAKERS LAND WHALE AT MONTAUK

SUBDUED BY HARPOONS

Twenty-five Foot Mammal, Said to Be Only Three Months Old, Is Beached by Crew.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTAUK POINT, L. I., Aug. 16.—John Wanamaker Jr. and Mrs. Wanamaker were resting today on their houseboat at Montauk Lake after two days of deep sea fishing, enlivened by the capture of a 6,000-pound white-finned whale, which towed their craft for more than four hours.

The mammal, 25 feet long, harpooned by Captain Charles Thompson, famous hunter of ocean game, was put on display in front of the Montauk Yacht Club. From 10 o'clock in the morning until well after 2 yesterday afternoon the whale towed Captain Thompson's fishing boat, a craft 50 feet long, for miles and miles within a forty-mile radius of Montauk Point.

While the wounded animal lashed the water, the passengers, the crew of two and the master of the ship looked on in awe, thrilled by the experience and not a little fearful that a lunge from the powerful tail of the sea monster might damage or even upset their ship.

Subdued by Second Harpoon.

Captain Thompson had caught the whale with a harpoon known as a swordfish iron. Realizing that the animal was an unusual type of finback variety, swift and dangerous, he shot another harpoon which penetrated the lungs and subdued the monster. Empty barrels then were strung out to keep the whale afloat.

The fishing vessel, a speedy twin-motored craft, had all it could do to keep up with the maimed mammal until the second harpoon was struck, after which the whale was towed back to Montauk Beach.

On Thursday the Wanamakers caught a swordfish weighing 600 pounds, but yesterday's experience outdid the previous thrill. Mr. and Mrs. Wanamaker have been here and at Montauk Lake for a week, dividing their time between their houseboat, their yacht, the Nirvana, and in fishing with Captain Thompson.

The fin-back whale harpooned yesterday is about three months old. When fully grown these rare whales weigh about six tons and measure about fifty feet. When brought here and beached, crowds stood around admiring the catch. Its tongue was cut off and tipped the scales at 300 pounds, the average weight of a swordfish, which was the largest game expected by Mr. Wanamaker when he started out.

Fin-Back Whales Rare.

Old-time fishermen grew excited and loquacious over the sight. They said that while fin-back whales are sometimes sighted, the particular white-finned variety was new to them. One old sea captain asserted that this whale was the first of its species captured in these waters for fifty years. His father, he said, had told of such a mammal harpooned off Amagansett, but three minutes later they had been towed three miles out to sea; their speed was so great that the boat settled at the stern, and they finally had to cut the rope.

The fin-back whales are not considered valuable by professional whalers, as they have little of the bone and oil that once made whaling a profitable industry in these waters.

Captain Thompson said that yesterday's catch was one of the most interesting of a long career. For four seasons he has been coming to Montauk from the South. He has ciceroned many well-known men in his time. In his long list of "clients" are the late President Harding. Grover Cleveland, who, according to Captain Thompson, nearly lost his life when catching his first amberjack. Waldorf Astor presented a watch to Captain Thompson in appreciation of his services. Others who have fished with the captain include the late John Jacob Astor, Theodore Roosevelt, John Oliver La Gorce, Andrew Carnegie, Senator Johnson, Newton Camden of West Virginia, Carl G. Fisher, who erected a statue at Miami Beach in the honor of Captain Thompson, Jack Dempsey and Reinald Werrenrath.

Captured Many Big Fish.

Mayor Walker was Captain Thompson's guest earlier this Summer. The captain accompanied Commodore William K. Vanderbilt on his two-months' cruise of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in 1926 aboard the yacht Ara. During this trip Captain Thomas lassoed and captured a sea lion in Panama Bay.

In 1912 Captain Thompson made the most extraordinary catch of his career. On June 1 of that year Negro section hands on the Florida East Coast Railway fled to their shanties with great outcries of terror. Near the shore in Knight's Channel, 150 miles south of Miami, they had seen a fish which they described as "big as a mountain." Captain Thompson was not far away on the yacht Samoa. He investigated, using a fast motor launch and taking two men with him. They located the monster and shot a harpoon into it. This was the beginning of a wild tow that lasted for thirty-nine hours before the goliath of the seas was overpowered. Its capture forms one of the most vivid tales in Miami's sea annals. The bow of the launch was splintered, 150 bullets were fired into the animal and five harpoons were needed before the end came.

It was a mystery fish that was christened Rhinodontypicus by the pisciologists of the Smithsonian Institution. It was 45 feet long and weighed 40,000 pounds. Its jaws opened to a width of five feet, giving a man fair standing room inside of them. It was neither whale nor shark and bore few of the characteristics of either.

BLOOM ATTRIBUTES DEPRESSION TO FEAR

Representative, Back From France, Says Courage Can Quickly Restore Trade.

PREDICTS REVIVAL IN FALL

Representative Sol Bloom, who has been in Europe for six weeks attending the Interparliamentary Conference in London and vacationing with his family, returned yesterday on the United States liner Leviathan and talked of conditions abroad. He told also of plans for American participation in the French Colonial Exhibition in Paris next year.

The United States already has appropriated $250,000 for a building to house the showing of American products, he said. The exhibition will be located just outside Paris, near the cemetery where General Lafayette, members of his family and other Revolutionary figures are buried.

Mr. Bloom said that American trade with French colonial possessions has increased remarkably during the years since the war and that relations with France, both commercially and politically, are on a sound basis.

Mr. Bloom called the current business depression a "fake" situation resulting from fear which followed the stock market decline last year. The reduction in advertising, he said, has not been due to poverty or pinched money conditions so much as to this "fear," and Mr. Bloom said that in his opinion business would make a quick return to normal if advertising were restored to pre-crash levels. He looks for business stability in the Fall, he said.

Also on the Leviathan was Charles Evans Hughes, chief justice of the United States Supreme Court, who returned with Mrs. Hughes and their daughter, Elizabeth, after motoring through Northern France and Belgium.

The chief justice has been abroad since early in June and returns in time to attend the opening meetings of the American Bar Association convention in Chicago next week. With Mrs. Hughes he planned yesterday to go directly to Washington, leaving later for Chicago, where he will deliver an address of welcome to the legal delegates.

Judge William I. Schaffer of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court returned on the Leviathan after a motor tour of England and Scotland.

Captain Harold A. Cunningham, master of the Leviathan, announced after docking the ship yesterday that his controversy with the harbor pilots' association has been terminated by a compromise. Captain Cunningham has held out for several months for exclusive rights to Pilot William McLaughlin, who has piloted the Leviathan in and out of the harbor for many years. In the future, under the terms of the compromise, the Leviathan's pilot will be selected from a list of thirty-seven men, instead of the full list of 117.

Beer Mugs as Weapons Banned From Bavarian Mass Meetings

MUNICH, Aug. 16.—Beer steins, ash trays, table cutlery, soup bowls and other normal fitments of restaurants must be removed out of sight henceforth whenever a political party hires a beer garden or restaurant for a mass meeting, according to a police order issued today and effective throughout Bavaria.

The measure has been taken, it is said, in the interest of public safety, movable objects having been found too tempting when some point of an argument needs driving home. There is nothing like an empty beer mug in the hands of a pot-valiant citizen for silencing a refractory opposition, and a good ash tray goes a long way.

DOYLE CASE TO GO TO JURY TUESDAY

Tuttle Expects to Call a Few More Witnesses in Rebuttal on Tax Evasion Charges.

DEFENSE IS NEAR CLOSING

Third Week of Hearing Opens Tomorrow With Veterinarian Holding to Split-Fees Plea.

With the defense nearing the end of its case, evidence in the trial of William F. Doyle is expected to go to a jury in Federal court by Tuesday, according to the statement yesterday of United States Attorney Tuttle, who is directing the prosecution.

Doyle, a veterinarian, is charged with income tax evasion and perjury growing out of his practice before the Board of Standards and Appeals during the chairmanship of William E. Walsh. The trial will enter its third week tomorrow before Judge John E. Martineau.

The veterinarian is facing five counts in a consolidated indictment, income tax evasion for 1927, 1928 and 1929 and perjury in swearing to false tax return statements in 1927 and 1928, but he is contesting only the perjury and the 1929 tax evasion counts, offering no testimony regarding the other counts, contending that the court lacks jurisdiction. Doyle's attorneys assert that since the returns for these two years were filed in Brooklyn, the Eastern Federal Court District was the proper district in which to try the case.

Mr. Tuttle has called more than 100 witnesses, a majority of them clients whom Doyle represented before the Standards Board, and through their testimony has piled up a total of $429,125 paid in fees to Doyle during the past three years as contrasted with the $225,075 figure named by Doyle in his tax returns.

The veterinarian, in centring his attack on the 1929 evasion count, has sought to show that he was compelled to pay large split fees or commissions to persons who brought business to him and that when these sums were deducted from his gross fees, the remainder was within the amount he fixed in his returns.

To substantiate the contention that this method of computing his income tax was approved by the Treasury Department, the defense introduced evidence that Doyle received a rebate of $34,425 from the Federal government covering 1922, 1923 and 1924 after he had protested that his split fees had been ignored in his returns.

Mr. Tuttle, in expressing the belief that the trial would come to an end by Tuesday, said he expected to call several witnesses on rebuttal, but that their testimony would not require much time. The defense will continue presentation of its evidence tomorrow morning.

J., Aug. 16.—Loss of a diamond-and-sapphire bracelet valued at $5,000 was reported to the police today by Mrs. Clarence Mills, 4,157 Paddock Road, Cincinnati, who is staying at a hotel here. Mrs. Mills told the police that she missed the bracelet while "window-shopping" on the boardwalk.

TAKE 35 IN GAMBLING RAID.

Thirty-five men were arrested yesterday afternoon in a raid on an alleged gambling house on the sixth floor of the St. George Apartments at 570 Pacific Street, Brooklyn, by men of Inspector David Kane's staff, led by Lieutenant Robert McCarthy.

The prisoners were taken by ten policemen and taken in three patrol wagons to the Bergen Street Police Station. They will be arraigned in the Flatbush Avenue Court this morning.

James Flannery, 28 years old, alleged owner of the place, gave the apartment as his address and was booked on a charge of keeping a gambling house. Three others were charged with receiving bets. They are Ernest Waters, who also gave the apartment as his home; Thomas Coughlin of 185 Smith Street and Lee Wright of 1,970 Flatbush Avenue. The thirty-one others were booked on charges of disorderly conduct.

A crowd gathered in front of the place as the prisoners were being put into the patrol wagons. Three telephones and gambling equipment were seized, the police said.

FIND 1,050 VIOLATING LAWS IN TENEMENTS

Deegan and 200 Inspectors in Three-Day Drive Reveal Hazards to Dwellers.

SPOT 21 STILLS IN HARLEM

140 Offenders Summoned to Court After Visits to 5,000 Buildings—Campaign to Continue.

In a series of surprise visits during the last three days on tenement houses in the lower east side, Harlem and Yorkville districts of the city, about 200 inspectors, comprising the entire Manhattan force of the Tenement House Department, inspected almost 5,000 buildings and found 1,050 violations of multiple dwellings law regulations.

Commissioner William F. Deegan, who led his men on the drive, announced yesterday that 140 of the most serious offenders had received summonses returnable this week in magistrate's courts. In the Yorkville-Harlem area alone, he said, twenty-one stills ranging from five to forty gallons in capacity had been discovered by the inspectors.

The campaign against the existence of fire hazards in old tenements will be continued tomorrow in other parts of Manhattan and probably in Brooklyn, said the Tenement House Commissioner, who would not disclose the location of these districts.

After a personal tour of inspection of conditions on the lower east side last Monday night, Mr. Deegan summoned his division inspectors before him and reprimanded them for allowing large flower boxes and other obstructions to be stored on fire-escapes. He ordered 110 inspectors to begin Thursday morning combing the zone between Fourteenth and Chambers Streets and Broadway and the East River for violations of the tenement law. Ninety men, the remainder of the Manhattan squad, were instructed to start at the same time an intensive drive in the area bounded by Seventy-second Street, Fifth Avenue, 118th Street and the Harlem and East Rivers.

As the campaigns in the two districts were ending at noon yesterday, Commissioner Deegan reported that in 3,000 flats visited in the lower east side, approximately 600 violations had been noted and that thirty-eight summonses had been issued in cases where serious infractions had been found. These are returnable Wednesday. In this district alone 1,100 fire-escapes were found to be blocked by boards, plant boxes or bedding. The encumbrances were taken to the sidewalks and later removed by Department of Street Cleaning trucks.

Mr. Deegan asserted that despite the large number of violations brought to light, tenement conditions in the downtown area were improving, largely because of the cooperation his department was receiving from several civic and social organizations of the lower east side.

In the Harlem and Yorkville area the ninety specially assigned inspectors visited 1,850 houses and had about 900 fire-escapes cleared of obstructions, according to the commissioner. In 102 of 450 actual violations found the owners were given summonses and will appear in court this week. Twenty-one stills of varying capacities and quantities of mash were discovered and reported to the police. In a number of places the alcohol plants were confiscated and the Federal authorities were notified of the addresses, which were not made public yesterday. No arrests were made, as in each case the apartment was found to be unoccupied at the time.

Since the Tenement House Department began its drive last February on stills, in so far as they constitute fire hazards, about 130 have been reported by the inspectors, it was said yesterday.

Commissioner Deegan announced that tomorrow he will concentrate large forces of his inspectors in other districts of the city for the second week of intensive drives against unlawful conditions in tenement houses. If necessary, he said, men from his inspection squads in Brooklyn and the Bronx would be transferred temporarily to Manhattan to make a sectional drive effective. Check-ups will be made this week in the lower east side, Harlem and Yorkville, to see that the lesser violators have carried out the inspectors' orders to make repairs and other changes within five days.

WILL ENACT CHURCH LAWS.

Congregational World Council Has Received New Powers.

The International Congregational Council, which so far has been a meeting for discussion only, hereafter will be an organization clothed with legislative power. This announcement was made last week by Dr. Fred B. Smith, moderator of the National Council of the Congregational Churches on his return from Europe, where he attended in July a decennial meeting of the international body at Bournemouth, England.

The Rev. Dr. J. D. Jones, the new moderator of the world body, will be head of an executive committee of fifteen members. This will be appointed by the various national bodies—five from the United States, five from Great Britain and five from other countries. The total number of local congregations in the world organization will be 24,275, with a constituency of about 6,000,000. They are located in thirty-one countries. Dr. Jones is expected to devote virtually his entire time to the new office. The Japanese Congregational churches have invited the council to hold its next meeting, which will be in 1940, at Tokyo.

ONE KILLED, 4 SHOT, IN A BANDIT CHASE

A BYSTANDER IS WOUNDED

One Fugitive Is Slain, Two Injured and One Escapes—Three Youths Seized as Park Hold-Up Gang.

A chase after four bandits through the streets of Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, shortly before noon yesterday by a patrolman who was off duty resulted in the killing of one man, the wounding and capture of two more, and the wounding of a patrolman and a bystander. One fugitive escaped.

At about 11 A. M. two men entered the office of the Pilgrim Laundry at Eleventh and Prospect Avenues, Brooklyn, apparently to obtain a $10,000 payroll. Eight girls were in the office with Miss Martha Tiedt, the manager. One of them, Mabel Zient, screamed when the two men ordered all to put up their hands. The men fled.

Policeman Off Duty Pursues.

Shortly afterward, Patrolman William A. Drake, off duty, who had not heard of the attempted hold-up, was going home in his automobile when four men passed him in another car. Drake believed he recognized one of them as Charles (Young Bum) Rogers, whom he had once arrested. He followed the car containing the four men for several blocks until, at Forty-first Street and Seventh Avenue, the leading car swerved to the curb and stopped. Drake stopped fifty feet behind, and Rogers stepped from the first car, fired three shots at Drake, swung back into the car and disappeared in traffic. All three shots struck his automobile, but Drake was uninjured.

He followed, picking up Patrolman Arthur Heine at Sixth Avenue and Forty-first Street. Heine stood on the running board of Drake's car and fired at the fleeing car at every opportunity. Answering shots came from the bandits. Detective George Grundelman of the Bergen Street station, also off duty and out for a ride, heard the shots and joined the chase.

As the machine swung into Third Avenue Heine was wounded in the leg. The chase led along Third Avenue to Fifty-first Street, where Drake and Grundelman got the fugitives' automobile into a pocket with their two cars. The four fleeing got out and ran, exchanging shots with Drake, Grundelman and Heine, who kept on in spite of his injured leg.

Bystander Shot in Leg.

Noraf Nelson, 22 years old, of 5,903 Third Avenue, Brooklyn, who was in the street, was struck in the leg by a wild shot. Angelo Pessalano, 20, of 961 Seventy-third Street, Brooklyn, was shot through the back of the head and died in an ambulance on the way to the Norwegian Hospital.

One man disappeared around a corner unwounded, so far as the police know, but Rogers was shot in the left leg, and Albert Gaety of 901 Sixty-ninth Street, Brooklyn, who said he was 15 years old, was wounded in the right arm. They were the ones who used the pistols, according to the police.

Patrolman Heine, who is 35 years old and lives at 520 Eighty-second Street, was treated and taken home. Nelson was treated in the Norwegian Hospital. Rogers and Gaety were treated by a police surgeon and questioned in the Fourth Avenue station by detectives and by Assistant District Attorney Hyman Barshay.

From information that they pieced together after questioning the men and witnesses, the police learned that before attempting to enter the Pilgrim Laundry Rogers and Gaety had made arrangements with Pessalano and the fourth member of the gang to meet them with a rented car several blocks away. Then they took a taxi driven by John Wallengreen of 284 Persimmon Street. When they were frightened from the laundry they left in the taxi and rejoined Pessalano and the fourth man in the rented car.

Wallengreen told the police that Rogers and Gaety had stuck a pistol into his ribs and robbed him of $2, all that he had at the time. He was held for questioning.

Mulrooney Commends Men.

Police Commissioner Mulrooney came to the station house and commended Drake and the other policemen. He was accompanied by Chief Inspector O'Brien. Mr. Mulrooney said Rogers and Gaety had confessed to fifteen hold-ups, chiefly of chain stores, in Bay Ridge, Flatbush and South Brooklyn.

Rogers, who is 27 and lives at 855 Seventy-second Street, Brooklyn, carried two weapons during the chase, the police said, and had emptied one and two chambers of the other. Gaety's gun had been discharged four times. The records showed that Rogers had been released from Sing Sing on Thanksgiving eve, 1929, after serving six and one-half years of a sentence for second-degree larceny, to which he had pleaded guilty. Gaety admitted he had been in a reform school three times. They were booked on charges of assault, attempted robbery and violating the Sullivan law.

Three Seized in Hold-ups.

Three youths under 20 years of age, charged with holding up men and women in Prospect Park, were in the line-up in Manhattan yesterday and taken to the Fifth Avenue station in Brooklyn to be identified by their victims. They were captured Friday night and early yesterday morning after another of their number had given their names to the police.

The three face charges of assault and robbery, burglary and violating the Sullivan law. The burglary charge was placed against them because they are said to have stolen three automatic pistols from the Fourteenth Regiment Armory in Brooklyn a week ago when they slipped in under pretense of saying goodbye to relatives going to Camp Smith, Peekskill.

The three prisoners are Thomas Flavin, 16, of 263 Forty-ninth Street; James Dempsey, 19, of 442 Fifteenth Street, and James Horton, 17, of 216 Sixth Avenue, all of Brooklyn. Flavin is out on $1,500 bail for stealing an automobile, according to the police, and Dempsey also has a larceny record. The police believe that with the capture of the trio they have stopped a series of hold-ups that had caused a special detail of plainclothes men to be sent to Prospect Park every night.

FIVE ROBBERS CAPTURED.

Policemen Battle Three for 15 Minutes—Seize Two After Chase.

Five robbers were captured by the police yesterday morning in two hold-ups, one in lower Manhattan at 2:30 and one in upper Manhattan several hours later. All three of the participants in the earlier crime were captured, while in the later two hold-up men were captured.

John Kroll of 203 East Fourth Street was alone in the garage at 65 Pike Street when three men entered, attacked him and took $22. His cries attracted Patrolmen McVey and O'Connor of the Clinton Street station, who captured all three after a battle of a quarter of an hour. Edward J. Gunneen and Frank Musso were held without bail in Essex Market Court, while Rocco Tamarella was removed to Bellevue Hospital, suffering from the effects of his fight with the police. Gunneen and Tamarella, according to the police, face sentences as fourth offenders under the Baumes laws.

The second hold-up occurred in the Municipal Fruit Market, 1,875 Park Avenue, in the presence of nine employes. While one thug remained at the wheel of an automobile parked outside, another walked into the office, brandished his pistol before Esther and Marion Becker, bookkeepers, snatched $560 which one of the sisters had just brought from the bank, and fled to the car, which started up the street. Harry Lillian, an employe, jumped on a fruit truck and gave chase, picking up two patrolmen on the way. The fugitives' car crashed into a hydrant at First Avenue and 121st Street, its occupants dodging into adjacent entries. Dominick Caravello, later identified as the man who entered the fruit concern's office, was found hiding in a dumbwaiter shaft. Part of the stolen money was recovered.

In another hold-up yesterday afternoon, two thugs escaped with $200 from the delicatessen store of Stanley Dombowski, 481 Ninth Avenue. Dombowski was alone in the store at the time, and the bandits tied him to a chair in the rear of the store.

SIFT MYSTERY BEATING.

Police Find Man With Fractured Skull Unconscious in Street.

The police began an investigation yesterday into circumstances which resulted in serious injuries to James McNaughton, 44 years old, of 161 West Eightieth Street, who was found unconscious at 9 A. M. in front of 50 West 112th Street.

Patrolman John McCabe discovered the man and called Dr. Payne of Harlem Hospital, who said McNaughton was suffering from a fracture of the skull, concussion of the brain and contusions of both eyes. The man's identity remained unknown for about two hours until, in a moment of consciousness, he was able to give his name to detectives. His address and age were established from papers in his pockets. McNaughton again lapsed into a coma before he could give further information.

OUTSIDE POLICE AID ATLANTIC CITY DRIVE

New York, Philadelphia and Other Places to Cooperate in Clean-Up There.

MAYOR WARNS CRIMINALS

Urges Their Friends to Advise Them to Leave Town—55 Already Driven Out by Police.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 16.—Police officials of New York, Philadelphia and other cities have promised to cooperate with Mayor Harry Bacharach in keeping this city free from criminals and other undesirables.

After a conference with out-of-town police officials the Mayor expressed the opinion that Atlantic City and its patrons would be better protected now than ever before.

Among the police bureau heads with whom he conferred were Commissioner Mulrooney of New York, Assistant Director of Public Safety Weeks of Philadelphia, Director Egan of the Newark Public Safety Department and Mayor Hague of Jersey City.

"I would suggest that any one having friends in the underworld or the fraternity of crooks temporarily residing in our city would advise them to leave immediately," the Mayor said.

Since Mayor Bachrach started his campaign a week ago fifty-five undesirables have been seized by the police and set free with warnings not to return to Atlantic City again. Most of the undesirables are said to have come from Philadelphia.

He emphasized the fact that the outside cities from which the resort draws the major part of its patronage are watching closely the efforts to rid the city of these characters.

"The outside world is showing that it is keenly interested in our endeavor to clean up and make the resort absolutely safe for visitors," said the Mayor.

Asked whether it was intended to suspend other members of the Police Department, he said:

"I have not yet received reports of further suspensions. The first plunge in the ocean is always the hardest, but after you once make the plunge and get wet the water does not seem so cold. I have not the slightest doubt that Commissioner Cuthbert and Chief Doran, having made that plunge, will unhesitatingly make further efforts along the line necessary for betterment of police service."

AUSABLE FORKS CASE PUT OVER FOR 2 WEEKS

Plea to Force Public Service Body to Restore Branch Trains Is Adjourned by Justice.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—In special term in Hudson today Justice Daniel V. McNamee adjourned for two weeks the application for a mandamus against the Public Service Commission, sought by Russell Kent of New York to compel that body to direct the Delaware & Hudson Railroad Company to restore trains on its Ausable Forks branch.

The trains were withdrawn several months ago and since that time Mr. Kent has been endeavoring to have the service restored. He has had a hearing before the Public Service Commission, but that body has refused to direct restoration of the service.

Today the matter was presented to Justice McNamee, who decided that because of the importance of the case he would prefer to hear it in chambers.

H. A. Chamberlain appeared for the Public Service Commission, Judge Joseph Rosch for the Delaware & Hudson Company and J. A. Lowry for Mr. Kent.

GROAT SPEEDS DRIVE ON FOOD PROFITEERS

Holds Preliminary Hearing and Promises Sensation When Inquiry Opens Tomorrow.

SAYS PRICE RING EXISTS

Wynne's Board Prepares Second Bulletin and Will Feature Daily Radio Talks to Housewives.

A gathering of legal forces to combat an allegedly powerful combination of "food racketeers," which is said to be working to raise prices in this city as a result of the recent drought crisis, was under way in the offices of Assistant Attorney General William B. Groat Jr. yesterday.

Witnesses representing housewives, produce cooperative associations and alleged "racketeers" were questioned. The hearings were preliminary to the general inquiry which State authorities will open tomorrow into food profiteering in this city.

Although Mr. Groat refused to make public the nature of the information he gained yesterday, fearing that the disclosure of names might influence some of those wanted in the general inquiry to "leave town," he said that his offices possessed information of "combinations to increase prices in a number of foodstuff lines and evidence which tends to indicate activities in several others."

There was no further information forthcoming from the Attorney General's office concerning the alleged revival of the old milk ring, headed by Larry Fay, which was broken up a year ago and which Mr. Groat charged on Friday to be again in operation. Mr. Groat said, however, that his charges would be substantiated tomorrow when he would present his evidence at 11 o'clock before Referee Charles C. Johnson in the Attorney General's office at 49 Chambers Street. At 2 o'clock there will be a second hearing before John Holley Clark Jr., referee appointed by Supreme Court Justice Leander B. Faber of Brooklyn, at which time the general inquiry into food prices will be held and Mr. Groat will present evidence of widespread "racketeering."

Agents from the Attorney General's office were sent to many parts of the State yesterday, it was disclosed, continuing their investigation of unjustifiable price raising and serving notices on various produce merchants to appear at tomorrow's hearings. Mr. Groat said that he would spend today organizing the mass of evidence which had come into his hands since the start of his activities, and which he says will "blow the lid off" the present food situation when revealed tomorrow.

While it is impossible to reach the individual shopkeeper who raises his prices unreasonably on food stuffs, according to Mr. Groat, it is within the scope of the Attorney General's office to take legal action when it is known that a group of merchants or operators combine to increase prices.

No further information on the situation was given out by the Health Department, but the second bulletin of the Fair Price Food Board, organized by Health Commissioner Wynne to assist housewives in determining equitable prices for market stuffs, will be issued tomorrow. In a brief announcement through Station WNYC last night, the daily talks of Commissioner Wynne on food prices, beginning tomorrow morning at 11:05 o'clock through that station, were called to the attention of housewives. Dr. Wynne will give a daily report on produce market conditions, what vegetables or fruits are plentiful or scarce, what prices were paid by dealers to wholesalers, and suggestions for the substitution of cheaper vegetables for those being sold at higher prices.

The forces of the Department of Public Markets and the local offices of the United States Department of Agriculture also have been enlisted in this campaign to keep the housekeeper informed of local market and produce conditions. Each of these bureaus will issue daily reports and summaries on the food situation, publishing prices paid by wholesalers and middlemen, to show the consuming public what profits the retailer is receiving.

RULES FLORIDA BONDS MUST BE SURRENDERED

But Court Holds Sanford, Fla., Still Owes Chase National Debt of $450,000 on Loan.

As a result of a decision handed down yesterday by Federal Judge John C. Knox, the Chase National Bank must surrender bonds valued at $740,000 which it received in 1927 from the Seminole County Bank of Florida as collateral for a loan of $600,000 to the City of Sanford, Fla.

Judge Knox, ruling at the same time against the City of Sanford, which brought suit in January, 1928, to prove that it was not obligated to pay a balance of $500,000 on the loan, decided that the city is in debt to the Chase National Bank to the extent of $450,000.

The suit, filed by Charles A. Boston, representing the City of Sanford, was based on the charge that Forrest Lake, former Mayor of the city, issued certificates of indebtedness without proper authority, when he was president at the same time of the Seminole County Bank, now bankrupt.

In deciding against the Chase National Bank in respect to the bonds, Judge Knox said in his opinion that they had come to the defendant "with full knowledge that they had never been advertised and sold in the manner prescribed by law," and that the bank "knew or should have known that neither Lake nor his bank had title to nor lien upon the bonds."

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Plain girls will be made over into beauty contestants, it is said, before the eyes of the audience at the meeting of the National Hair-Dressers' and Cosmetologists' Association Sept. 1-5.

Beauty specialists from Paris and from all parts of America are to take part in demonstrations which are to transform homeliness into pulcritude, according to H. L. Franklin, managing director of the organization.

INDUSTRY IN GERMANY BACKS REPUBLICANISM

Taking Sides for First Time in an Electoral Campaign, Group Urges Fiscal Reforms.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—German industry expressed itself strongly in favor of republicanism and liberalism today when the powerful Federation of German Industries came out with a round-robin letter to its members urging every industrialist to turn out and to cast his vote on Sept. 14 for the candidates of those parties which appear to appreciate the necessity of reform in finance and economic life and which at the same time stand squarely for the republic. This is the first time the federation has taken an outspoken part in an election campaign.

"Developments of the last few months have incontrovertibly shown to what disastrous results a false financial and economic policy can lead," the letter declares. "The effects of the international economic crisis have been aggravated by the lack of initiative for reform. The faith of the people has been seriously undermined and the state of economic emergency and unemployment is going to take its most serious form during the coming Winter."

Asserting that the election will be a test of whether the strength is at hand in this hour of danger to put through the fundamental reforms, the federation urges its members to support the parties which in turn support private industry and private property, avoid collectivism and seek the revivification of business and the reduction of unemployment.

"Only men who have the welfare of the whole population in mind belong in the Reichstag," says the letter. "Federation members are urged to do everything in their power to see that a capable Reichstag is elected. He who stays away from the ballot box sins against the State, the citizenry and business."

COUNT BERNADOTTE PLANS TO LIVE HERE

He and His American Wife, the Former Estelle Manville, Will Arrive in Fall.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 16.—Count Folke Bernadotte and his American-born wife, who was Miss Estelle Manville, will leave Sweden soon to settle in America. The Count has asked leave from his regiment with the right to re-enter the service after two years.

He plans to enter his father-in-law's business.

At the Manville estate in Pleasantville, N. Y., it was said last night for H. Edward Manville, father of Countess Folke Bernadotte, that she and her husband were coming to this country on a visit in October, but that no other plans were contemplated at this time.

The Count is a nephew of King Gustaf V of Sweden and a descendant of Marshal Bernadotte, a lieutenant of Napoleon Bonaparte's. He and the former Miss Estelle Romaine Manville were married Dec. 2, 1928, in Pleasantville. It was a brilliant ceremony. The couple toured the country on their honeymoon and were luncheon guests at the White House. They sailed for Stockholm late in December.

This will be the Count's first visit here since the wedding, but the Countess came here in June, 1929, on the Swedish-American liner Kungsholm. Her father, warned by radio that his daughter was ill, met the ship at Quarantine. The Countess was transferred to a tug and rushed to the Fifth Avenue Hospital, where Dr. F. W. Bancroft, chief surgeon, performed an operation for appendicitis.

VOTE REGISTRATIONS GAIN.

Central registration of men and women eligible to vote in the November elections gained slightly during the last week. In the five boroughs a total of fifty persons appeared at the offices of the Board of Elections in their home boroughs and were qualified to cast their ballots, according to figures released yesterday at the central office in the Municipal Building. From last Monday until noon yesterday fourteen persons registered in Manhattan, two in the Bronx, sixteen in Kings and nine each in Queens and Richmond.

Heretofore, it was said, the number of those registering centrally has averaged twenty-five to thirty a week since registration began June 1. In only one week, that ending July 5, has this week's number of registrants been exceeded. The total for that week was fifty-five.

SAYS REDS 'PLANTED' PAPERS ON WHALEN

Gregory G. Bernadsky Holds Documents Were Faked to Discredit Ex-Police Head.

CITES BOGDANOV'S ACTS

Interpreter Charges Amtorg Head Was Certain of Forgery Before He Had Seen Exhibits.

The charge that the so-called Whalen documents, made public by former Police Commissioner Whalen in the closing days of his administration and linking the Amtorg Trading Corporation, the Soviet commercial agency in this county, with Communist activities, were a "plant" by agents of the Soviet Government, with the idea of discrediting Mr. Whalen, was made yesterday by Gregory G. Bernadsky, president of the Research Publishing Corporation, of 11 West Forty-second Street. Mr. Bernadsky said he based his charge upon a personal investigation.

Mr. Bernadsky, who acted as interpreter for the Fish Congressional committee investigating communism and is the head of a private bureau investigating such Communist activities, declared that he himself had little faith in the authenticity of the documents when made public last May.

Says Papers Came From Soviets.

"Not that I did not believe in their existence," he declared. "In fact, I had reason to believe that Grover Whalen's men produced these documents. But these documents were procured from the Soviets. Therefore, it is but natural to assume that they were responsible for having them made up. It is the aim of the Soviets and the Amtorg Trading Corporation to discredit former Police Commissioner Whalen and to accuse him of having planted these 'fake' documents in the Amtorg.

"The names which were mentioned in the documents surprised me. Having investigated communistic activities in New York for a number of years and being familiar with the correct names of G. P. U. agents and Soviet propagandists, I noticed that they were not mentioned in these documents, as though their names were eliminated purposely to avert attention of United States authorities from the real men.

"From previous information from Europe, I know that in many instances the Communists themselves produced forged documents and then proved that they were forgeries, alway accusing others of having forged them. Their idea in this clever scheme is to make the public believe that all documents are forged, so that when really genuine documents are apprehended, the public will not be interested."

Cites Bogdanov's Action.

In support of his argument that the documents were a Soviet "plant," Mr. Bernadsky cited the fact that they were denounced as forgeries on the very day of their appearance by Peter A. Bogdanov, chairman of the Amtorg.

"He did this without investigation, just as if he were positive that they were forgeries without looking at them," Mr. Bernadsky said. "My own investigation showed that Bogdanov immediately announced the documents as forgeries the day they were exposed to view. At the Congressional investigation Bogdanov confessed that he was not well acquainted with the duties of his collaborators in Amtorg. He stated that he had never been in the photostatic rooms of the Amtorg, nor is he acquainted with the material for propaganda carried on by Amtorg at 136 Liberty Street. There were many other things of which he was in doubt, but that the Whalen documents were forgeries he was positive.

"Max Wagner, printer of the forged documents, admitted his connection with the Amtorg. He confessed that he never questioned Mr. Yasova (who ordered the printing) and it never aroused his curiosity as to how a man in New York could order letterheads bearing the name of 'Ispolkom,' with a Moscow address. Having a connection with Amtorg, how could he possibly accept Yasova's order without questioning him? Wagner kept silent for about six months or until the documents were seized by Whalen's men. Then, a Mr. Spivak came on the scene and printed Wagner's statement that he had made the letterheads.

"Does it seem logical that a man will seek death voluntarily? Does it sound reasonable that a man committing such a supposed crime against the Soviets would have the nerve to go to Russia, where certain death awaited him? I think not. Yet, Yasova, who forged the documents and had connections with Amtorg, is now in Red Russia."

MANN REPUBLICANS ANNUL REPUDIATION

Atlanta Meeting Declares Its Members Strongly Support Hoover Administration.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Aug. 16.—The Southern Republican organization, which ten days ago repudiated the administration and endorsed Colonel Horace Mann's scheme for rehabilitation of the party in the South, has repudiated its repudiation.

The organization met here yesterday and denounced reports that its members were bolters of the regular Republican party, asserting that the organization was not formed to establish an independent or third party in the South.

Resolutions adopted said in part: "This organization is strongly supporting the President and we take this opportunity to pledge to him our whole-hearted support and loyalty."

The organization also declared that its highest purpose was to coordinate the Republican forces of the Southern States and to promulgate the principles of the party.

M. O. Dunning of Savannah, who led the recent revolt against the administration faction of Postmaster General Brown, was absent. Delegates from Georgia and Alabama are said to have been present.

CONVICTS' RUSE FAILED; CAUSED DEATHS OF 320

Columbis (Ohio) Jailbirds Had Plotted Escape for 4,000, Investigators Find.

COLUMBUS, Aug. 16 (AP).—A delay in the operation of a fuse caused the deaths of 320 convicts in the Easter Monday fire at the Ohio Penitentiary, but prevented the possible escape of 4,000 into the city to spread terror, officials investigating the cause of the blaze, revealed today.

Investigators found that a group of convicts had planned to set fire to the I and K cell blocks while hundreds of their comrades were in the mess hall and in the prison yard. The convicts planned a break for liberty during the confusion.

For some reason, however, a taper or candle timed to set fire to the oil-soaked rooof over Blocks I and K at 4:30 P. M. failed to take effect until 6 P. M. At that time the convicts were locked in their cell blocks for the night, and those in the upper tiers of G and H perished before guards could open the cell doors.

At least half a dozen prisoners were involved in the fire plot, one of whom died in the flames, according to Ray R. Gill, State Fire Marshal Clear and F. Byrne Hues, the marshal's legal adviser.

MAURICE CONNOLLY BETTER

Improves After Transfer to Hospital From Welfare Island Cell.

Maurice Connolly, former borough president of Queens, now serving a penitentiary sentence on Welfare Island, has already improved since he was moved to Correction Hospital on Thursday, suffering from heart and liver ailments.

Whether he will remain two weeks, as originally ordered by Dr. Abraham Norman, medical director of the hospital, was uncertain. "He will remain as long as his condition warrants," Dr. Norman said yesterday. He quoted Connolly as saying that he felt better than he had for some time.

SPORT CLOTHES FOR VACATION WEAR

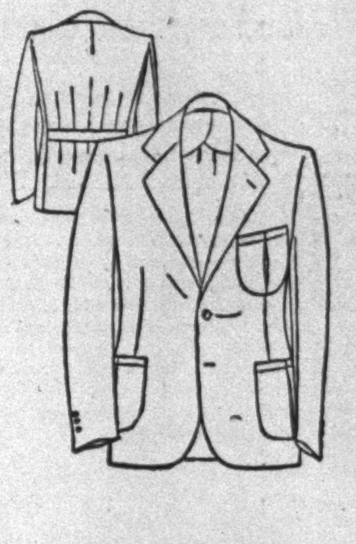
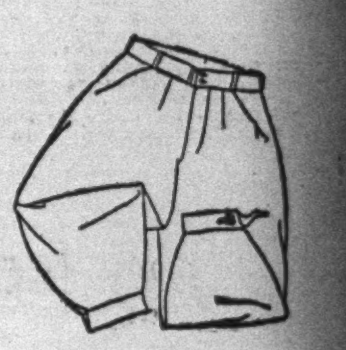
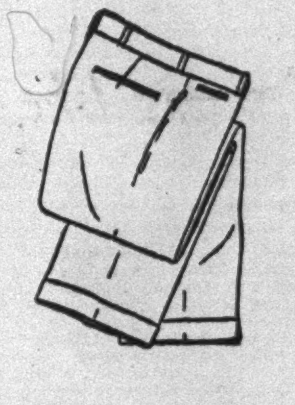
Even if you're going to stay in your own back yard this vacation and play "Puttering" golf for exercise, that man of yours is going to need sports clothes, so visit a John David Shop and get definite prices and descriptions for him.



The blue flannel sports jacket may be conservative, but truly is there anything quite as smart? I found this single breasted model with half belt, pleated back, and patch pockets, at a John David Shop ($20). It's made of fine quality navy blue flannel and is all silk trimmed.

Knickers of imported Irish Linen ($3.95) are correct and cool for wear with this jacket. These John David knickers are free-draping models made of fine quality linen which launders unusually well.





White flannel trousers just naturally seem to go with a blue jacket, don't they? The John David Shops have a spiffy model in creamy white flannel at $8.50, which seemed to me to be awfully well tailored.

I'd like to tell you all of the news about sports attire that I picked up during a shopping tour thru the John David Shop at Fifth Avenue at 43rd Street, and the Broadway establishment at 32nd Street, but space just does not permit it, so do please run in and see their smart sports clothes yourself and then tell your men folk about them.

PASSENGERS TO QUIT SINKING PACIFIC SHIP

Norwegian Freighter Rushes to Disabled Tahiti to Take Off More Than 300.

LIFEBOAT ORDER RESCINDED

Master Had Radioed Earlier All Were Preparing to Dare Open Water Until Saved.

THREE OTHER SHIPS ON WAY

Two of Them Must Steer Through Dangerous Uncharted Waters and Hidden Shoals.

By The Associated Press.

More than 300 men, women and children passengers and crew of the Union Line Steamship Tahiti, which became waterlogged and disabled in the South Pacific 460 miles southwest of Raratonga, Cook Islands, yesterday, were anxiously awaiting the arrival today of the Norwegian freighter Penybryn, nearest of four vessels in that general vicinity rushing to render assistance.

Reports received yesterday in San Francisco direct from Suva, Fiji, by The Associated Press and by the Matson Navigation Company from its steamer Ventura said all on board had taken to lifeboats and abandoned the Tahiti.

A report from Wellington, New Zealand, at 5 A. M. Sunday, New Zealand Time (3 P. M. New York Daylight Time Saturday), said the master of the disabled ship had countermanded the order to take to lifeboats and arrival of the Penybryn was expected Sunday afternoon, New Zealand Time. Transfer of passengers and crew to the Penybryn was to take place before dark.

The Tahiti, one of the largest ships plying the Pacific, left Wellington for San Francisco Aug. 12 with 175 passengers and a crew of 142. She was due in San Francisco Aug. 29.

The vessel got into trouble when she lost her starboard propeller and tailshaft and began to leak. The cause was not ascertained. The No. 4 hold began to leak early Sunday, New Zealand Time. Captain A. T. Toten, master of the ship, ordered all aboard to lifeboats.

It was this order that was countermanded, presumably when it was realized the vessel would remain afloat until the Penybryn could reach her.

In addition to the Penybryn, three other vessels were rushing to the Tahiti. These were the Matson liner Ventura, en route from Suva; the Tofua, diverted from the Fiji Islands, and the Tagua, en route from Mangaia.

Names of the Tahiti's passengers were not immediately available. The only name mentioned in dispatches was that of Sir Hugh Allen, director of the British Royal College of Music. The sea was reported rough, but the weather was fair.

The Tahiti, a twin-screw liner of 7,898 gross tons, was built in Glasgow in 1904. She was operated by the Union Steamship Company under British registry. She is 460 feet long, 55.5 feet wide and 24.4 feet deep. Her officers are all New Zealanders. Captain Toten was making his first voyage as her master.

A dispatch from Pago Pago to The Associated Press yesterday afternoon quoted a radiogram from the Tahiti as saying the Ventura was 115 miles away, expecting to arrive at 2 P. M. Sunday, New Zealand Time [12 P. M. Saturday, New York Daylight Time.]

Sir Hugh Percy Allen Aboard.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 16.—Sir Hugh Percy Allen, a passenger on the Tahiti, is director of the Royal College of Music in London and has been Professor of Music at Oxford for the last twelve years. For many years he was conductor at the Leeds festivals and formerly was conductor of Bach choirs at London and Oxford.

Dr. F. A. Bennett, a New Zealand Bishop, also is among the passengers.

The last message received from the captain at the offices of the company here gave the position as 464 miles from Raratonga, Cook Islands, and said: "Fractured starboard shaft and lost propeller. Taking water in holds 3 and 4 and engine room. May be necessary to abandon ship. Ventura and Tofua proceeding to render asistance. Due Monday."

The Tahiti is the ill-starred ship, which, on Nov. 3, 1927, rammed and sank the ferryboat Greycliffe in Sydney Harbor. More than fifty persons drowned. A marine court of inquiry placed the responsibility on the Tahiti and exonerated the Greycliffe officers.

Twelve Officers on Ship.

Captain Toten, said by Union Steamship Company officials to be making his first trip as master of the Tahiti, is a native of New Zealand. The other officers are Australians or New Zealanders.

Officers aboard are:

Chief Officer—N. J. Siepen.
Second Officer—D. J. McKenzie.
Third Officer—J. W. Madden.
Purser—F. H. Ferguson.
Surgeon—C. E. Lester.
Chief Engineer—C. J. McPherson.
Second Engineer—A. Thompson.
Third Engineer—E. M. Danby.
Chief Steward—M. McFadyn.

F. N. Davidson is wireless operator. In addition to the eleven officers, J. C. Greig, a government mail agent from New Zealand, is on board.

Uncharted seas and an ocean jungle of volcanic and coral archipelagoes lie between the Tahiti and two of the four ships going to the rescue.

The Penybryn, nearest of the four ships, and the Tagua were on the same steamer lane as the Tahiti. The other vessels were on a more northerly lane and were forced to pick their way through thousands of little islands and patches of shallow water.

In navigating the shallows of the uncharted South Seas, the captain and his mates stand on the bridge and chart their course as they go, picking out deep water by reflection of light. Fast sailing is virtually impossible at night unless ships are in a wide stretch of deep water which separates the archipelagoes. For this reason officials of the Matson Line here said it was impossible to estimate accurately the time of the Ventura's arrival beside the disabled vessel.

'LIGHTNING DIVISION' RECALLS WAR DAYS

IMPROMPTU DRILL IS HELD

Sham Battle, Re-enacting Tactics on Hindenburg Line, a Feature of Three-Day Encampment.

Special to The New York Times.

BURLINGTON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Loudly acclaimed as he appeared on the field, Major Gen. Hugh L. Scott was welcomed this afternoon to the first return on their old camp grounds of the famous Seventy-eighth, or "Lightning Division."

The open-air reception featuring the three-day celebration that has brought together 2,000 "buddies" from New Jersey, New York, Delaware and adjoining States, and the visit of their old commander, who organized the division as the first unit to train at Camp Dix, were the high spots in today's program.

Already probably the largest reunion of any veteran division to be held under canvas since the World War, the celebration here will grow tomorrow with the arrival of other delegations from Newark, Jersey City, Trenton, Camden, Atlantic City and points in Delaware and New York.

The veteran division also has extended invitations to the thousands of motorists who visited Camp Dix in war days to return tomorrow afternoon and join them in a great open-air memorial service on Headquarters Hill.

Regular Army Drill Cheered.

The First Brigade of the First Division staged a review for their veteran guests on the parade ground at 10 o'clock. Brig. Gen. Rosenbaum, camp commander and a former Seventy-eighth brigade commander, with President Jack J. Rosenberg and executive officers of the Division Association, received the review, while the "vets" were comfortably seated on the bleachers. As the applause for the manoeuvres of the regulars died down a figure sprang from the stands, tooted a whistle and let loose a leather-lunged command:

"Fall in, buddies. Let's show 'em we haven't forgotten how. Snap out of it!" In a twinkling, a laughing, yelling mass of men were leaping over benches and romping on the parade grounds. The chap with the whistle, George Hill of Dover, Del., known throughout the division in war days as Delaware George, with a dozen volunteer assistants, lined up the crowd of erstwhile majors, captains, shave-tails, "non-coms" and buck privates into rookie squads, told them to count off and, with Hill in command, marched the long column of four down and across and around the parade grounds and then brought them back into a quarter-mile-long parade front.

An alert bandmaster had taken his cue, struck up the strain of "American Patrol," their old review tune as they marched, heads came up, shoulders were squared and with a "pep hep" they struck the old swing and stride while the crowd on the sidelines, touched by the sight of an occasional armless sleeve or a crutch, cheered them with gusto.

Recalls First Major Action.

A sham battle staged by the First Division recalled to "vets" their first major action on the Hindenburg Line when the Lightning Division smashed through at Grand Pre. Behind a simulated barrage and with smoke screen, while one pounders and machine guns barked on both sides and tanks came up in support, the "doughboys" stormed the "enemy line," forcing a retreat before a cheering and vocally critical gallery.

Inter-regiment baseball and athletic contests, boxing and other features filled the daylight program. An old-time camp sing around a great bonfire on the hill with song leaders and volunteer artists constituted tonight's program.

COSTE REMAINS ALERT TO START FLIGHT HERE

Denying He Has Given Up Plan, He Says Take-Off Depends on French Weather Bureau.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Reports published in New York that Diendonné Coste had abandoned his project for a transatlantic flight this year were emphatically denied in a statement by telephone tonight from the airman, who has gone to the country over the week-end.

"I have every hope that conditions will permit the attempt before long," said Coste, "and if I find favorable conditions, I would not hesitate to depart tomorrow. My plane is now as near perfection as I can make it and I feel confident it is capable of reaching New York without a stop."

Coste every day for the past three weeks has gone to the French National Meteorological Bureau for the latest reports on weather conditions over the Atlantic. He has always had discouraging news of storm, fog or violent contrary winds.

3 AMATEUR SAILORS PLAN WORLD CRUISE

WILL EXPLORE IN TROPICS

Another Member of Crew Is Sought Before Departure of "Swordfish" on 40,000-Mile Voyage.

With her shrouds and stays tarred and taut and her strakes clean and fresh, the forty-six-foot topsail schooner Swordfish with her crew of two men and one woman, lay at anchor in the Hudson River yesterday, sixty-three days out of Chicago, with 40,000 miles of seaways and three years of cruising ahead of her.

Fresh water sailors, 29-year-old Robert H. Cook and his young wife Lenore of Chicago and Don Dickson of Evanston, Ill., brought the little craft through a seventy-five-mile storm south of the Strait of Mackinac, and piloted her through three of the Great Lakes, down the Erie Canal and the Hudson River to moorings off the Hudson River Yacht Club at the foot of Ninety-second Street.

Her lockers crammed with provisions and her tanks full of 210 gallons of sweet water, the Swordfish, her anchor underfoot, swung impatiently with the tide, eager for her round-the-world cruise and the adventures that lie ahead.

Bound for Tropic Seas.

Within ten days, "Captain" Cook hopes to take her out of New York Bay and set a course for tropic seas, but he expects before that time to recruit a fellow adventurer, who will round out the ship's complement.

A stop at the Cocos Islands to search for buried treasure is scheduled, as well as exploration of the Galapagos and inspection of the sea elephants and turtles there, and a long cruise through the South Seas. Mr. Cook says that he is offering an itinerary that can compete with that of any travel bureau.

The three shipmates, who have planned and saved three years for the trip, have never sailed on salt water before and are amateur navigators, but have confidence in their ability and in their luck.

"I was always lucky," Mr. Cook explained, as he lolled on one of the six bunks of the Swordfish yesterday. "This trip really started three years ago when I had a bit of luck and suddenly won $1,000. My wife and I decided to put it away for this trip, and ever since then each of us has been saving $100 a month for the cruise. We bought the schooner for $4,000. She needed fixing up pretty badly, but her hull was good and sound. She's seven years old, you know, built for sword-fishing—a white oak deck, and her strakes are of cedar and cypress. Her best speed is about eight knots under canvas, but we've got a little four-cylinder gasoline engine that will give her seven knots under power."

"We left Belmont Harbor in Chicago on June 14 with five in our crew," Mr. Cooke continued. "On a nine-hour trip up Lake Michigan to Milwaukee it kicked up a bit and two of our crew, brothers, got pretty sick. So they decided to leave us at Milwaukee, and that held us up a bit while we got reorganized on the three-person basis."

Mr. Cook said that a prospective applicant for a berth on the Swordfish must have $2,000 to invest, three years to loaf, some little experience in navigation and seamanship, and must be congenial.

The trip to date, though the Swordfish has not yet been within smell of the sea, has not been uneventful. After Milwaukee and the desertion of two of the original crew, the little two-master ran into a fierce storm when near dangerous shoals just south of Mackinac. For thirteen hours the schooner ran before the wind and chugged back and forth in deep water until the storm had subsided. But the worst part of the trip to date was the passage through the Erie Canal, which was made in the midst of the heat wave.

"We poured the butter and I lost fourteen pounds," Mrs. Cook explained.

But the crew has already forgotten most of the hardships in anticipation of three years on the ocean. When the Swoardfish leaves New York she will head south for Beaufort, N. C., or Savannah, Ga., where she expects to lie until after the hurricane season is over. Taking her departure from the United States at Miami she will sail to Havana, thence to Jamaica and Haiti and to Porto Rico, where the crew of the schooner expects to call on Governor Roosevelt.

May Seek Legendary Treasure.

After passing through the Panama Canal, the stem of the Swordfish will plow Pacific seas to the Cocos Islands, where decades ago, legend says, $10,000,000 in gold ingots and "pieces of eight" was buried. One hundred and seventy-five different expeditions have sought the fabled treasure in vain, but the Cooks are undeterred by previous failures. From the Cocos Islands the schooner will sail to the Galapagos, where exploration will be done, and from there by star and sun Mr. Cook will lay the course for Easter Island. He hopes to arrive at this tiny outpost of some old civilization about 1,000 miles off the coast of Chile in June, 1931. Pitcairn Island, where years ago the mutineers of H. M. S. Bounty landed and set up an island kingdom of their own, will be the next port of call, and then on across the South Pacific to the Marquesas, the Society Islands, Fiji, the Solomon Islands, Tasmania, New Zealand and Australia.

Sailing ever westward the Swordfish will next drop anchor in the ports of Borneo and Java and Sumatra. Mrs. Cook, who is an artist, hopes to sketch some of the famous Cambodian temples. After stops in India, the Swordfish will voyage through the Red Sea, the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean to the Atlantic and the last lap of her voyage home. "Captain" Cook expects to return to New York via London, the Azores and South America, and is hoping that he will return to Chicago in time for the world's fair.

HOOVER HAS NOT FOUND TARIFF BOARD HEAD

He Seeks a Man Who Would Take the Post as a Patriotic Duty.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (AP).—With only one month remaining in which to select the six members of the reorganized tariff commission, President Hoover today still faced the unexpected difficulties that have arisen in the choosing of a chairman.

Day after day since he was directed by Congress two months ago to reorganize the commission within ninety days, Mr. Hoover has canvassed the various names submitted to him, and several men have been offered the chairmanship and have declined it.

The Chief Executive, it was explained today, has found himself in the predicament of wanting men who will not or cannot accept and of being pressed to appoint men who do not measure up to the standard he desires.

Mr. Hoover is known to be seeking a type who would not consider the post merely for the remuneration but who can be prevailed upon to serve as a patriotic duty.

Some progress is reported to have been made by the President in the selection of other members of the commission, although no names are being announced, pending selection of the chairman. Indications are that Edgar B. Brossard of Utah, now chairman of the commission, and Alfred P. Dennis of Maryland will be the two incumbents retained.

ACT ON POCANTICO SCHOOL.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Attorneys representing John D. Rockefeller Jr. and the School Board at Pocantico Hills conferred here today with Superintendent of Schools Charles H. Cheney on the type of building to be erected on the Pocantico Hills site. No decision was reached, Mr. Cheney declared.

Consolidation of school districts will save Mr. Rockefeller about $3,000 in school taxes this year, tax records indicated. Mr. Rockefeller is said to own more than one-third of the property in the Pocantico district. He is understood to have promised a contribution toward the cost of erecting the new Pocantico Hills school, aside from the large share of the cost he would ordinarily pay in taxes.

BUY RADIO STATION TO OPPOSE THE POPE

Funds Sought From Listeners—Eventual Aim Is to Have String Throughout Country.

Franklin Ford, manager and announcer of station WHAP and president of the Defenders of Truth Society, which "aims to break the grip of Popery" for millions in this country, announced yesterday that the society has purchased station WOAX of Trenton, N. J., "as the first link in a proposed national chain of Protestant radio voices."

Mr. Ford declined to divulge the purchase price of the station but said that a substantial first payment had been paid by funds donated by two New Yorkers, whose names were withheld. He said three additional payments of $15,000 each are due on March 1 and Sept. 1, 1931, and March 2, 1932, and he expects to raise this money through contributions from his radio audiences.

His society has applied to the Federal Radio Commission for the removal of the transmitter of Station WOAX to Merchantville, N. J., near Camden, in order to serve the Philadelphia area. However, said Mr. Ford's announcement, this change has been blocked for the present by a protest filed by Commissioner Clay W. Reesman, director of Camden's station, who has said he would file a protest no matter where the new site was picked.

To Go on the Air in Trenton.

"As the city of Trenton is not far from the city limits of Philadelphia," said the announcement, "we have determined to go on the air in Trenton. The towers and antenna will be changed in direction, to throw the strongest signals toward Philadelphia, also covering Trenton, Princeton, Bristol, Burlington, Southern Jersey and Eastern Pennsylvania. We will open an office in North Philadelphia."

The statement then quotes an editorial that will appear in the first issue of a monthly magazine, The American Standard, which is scheduled to appear on Sept. 1. The editorial expresses friendship toward all efforts to improve mankind through religion, then continues:

"We have no enmity against any Roman Catholic or any member of any religious faith on earth. Roman Catholics are children of God, equally with non-Catholics. Millions of them, and children of Catholic immigrants as well as hundreds of priests, have left the papal system in this country. We aim to break the grip of popery for millions more. In so far as we succeed we shall be doing a great act of service to those now under papal sway—an act of brotherhood and friendship, not of enmity or malice.

Stand by Defenders of Truth.

"We believe in the absolute and complete separation of Church and State; free speech; free press; liberty of conscience for all religions; interference in politics by no religion; American public school system. We oppose the Communist-Socialist revolutionary propaganda of Soviet Russia. We are not connected with any other organization.

"We do not discuss racial subjects nor comment on Jews, Negroes, Anglo-Saxons or other groups from a racial standpoint. Our program consist of talks by qualified speakers, together with musical features. As we have no endowment as yet, our support comes entirely by voluntary contributions from public-spirited citizens."

FLEEING BOY IS SHOT; HELD AS EXTORTIONIST

Young Companion Also Taken—Elizabeth Police Lay Trap After Threat to Kidnap a Child.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Aug. 16.—Two boys, arrested about last midnight after one was shot and wounded by policemen, were held here today on charges of trying to extort $200 from Mario Mirabelli, well-to-do clothing manufacturer, by threatening to kidnap Mirabelli's 3-year-old son and by sending lurid blackmailing letters to the boy's parents.

The boys held are Salvatore Sesta, 15 years old, of 220 Christine Street, and James Rena, 16, of 223 John Street. Sesta, according to the police, confessed and implicated Rena.

Postal inspectors have been apprised of the facts. The first letter, which threatened the kidnapping of Mirabelli's son "if $200 was not left at School 3 at 11 P. M. on Aug. 11," was received by Mirabelli on Aug. 8. Police were notified, but a watch on the school proved futile.

Mirabelli received on Thursday another letter warning him to appear at the school last midnight and pay the writer $200.

Mirabelli drove to the school and met Sesta, who demanded the money. Police in hiding in their own automobiles jumped out and ordered the youth to halt after Mirabelli had given him a package of marked money. The youth ran almost three blocks before he was brought down with a bullet in the leg. After being taken to a hospital, he is alleged to have confessed, implicating Rena, who was arrested at his home. The police found the package of marked money in the school yard.

TO INCREASE AIR SAFETY.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—As a result of the severe criticism directed against the German Lufthansa in connection with the Admiralty Court's investigation of the seaplane wreck in the Baltic in which two Americans lost their lives, the company has ordered that all its seaplanes in future must be fitted with pneumatic lifeboats capable of carrying all the passengers, the crew and part of the cargo.

The life-belts of the type which failed to function when the plane was wrecked will be replaced with newly invented bags filled with chemicals which automatically generate gas on touching water.

All the company's flying boats will also carry equipment for towing purposes.

Lufthansa is demanding the creation of a special aviation court for the investigation of air accidents.

WEATHER DAMAGES CROPS OF EUROPE

Russia and Rumania Probably Will Be Only Nations With Cereals for Export.

OTHER YIELDS SUBNORMAL

England, France, Italy, Germany, Austria Suffer From Drop in Wheat, Rye, Oats and Barley.

LONDON, Aug. 16 (AP).—Europe will bear with America heavy agricultural losses which a Summer of protracted droughts and severe storms has occasioned from the British Isles to the steppes of Russia.

Reports from many countries where harvesting operations are about to begin today showed that Russia and Rumania probably would be the only ones with surplus cereal crops for export, while England, France, Italy, Germany and Austria would have subnormal yields of wheat, rye, oats and barley.

French and Italian wheat farmers have been suffering from fickle weather almost as much as have the grain growers of the United States. But Soviet officials reported that Russian peasants had benefited from a season so uniformly good that they were preparing to harvest a huge crop, with the prospect of having grain to spare.

England will market a smaller wheat crop than usual, as a result of a decrease of 200,000 acres in cultivation, but expects to obtain better prices for wheat because of conditions in America.

Hour of Sunshine Worth $500,000.

England, for the moment, is enjoying weather favorable to her crops, but the Ministry of Agriculture has come to regard every hour of sunshine now as worth $500,000 more in the value of the grain harvest to British farmers. It is stated officially that there will be slightly less wheat, oats and barley produced this year than last, but it is admitted that this forecast may prove to be an underestimate if the present fine weather continues. There are nearly 200,000 acres less under cultivation than last year.

Officials expect 1,164,000 tons of 1930 wheat, compared with 1,271,000 tons last year. There should be 800,000 tons of barley, though last year's yield was 998,000. The estimate for oats is 1,347,000, compared with 1,522,000 in 1929.

Spain, which never raises enough wheat for her own use, will have a better than average crop upon which to draw this year. Unusually cool weather this Summer, with copious rains, gave the country a good yield also of olives and grapes. The Spanish farmers have little complaint regarding their prospects for a prosperous harvest.

Southeastern Europe has been favored with temperate weather, and even where droughts have been experienced the dryness came at an opportune moment to ripen crops and permit of easy harvesting. Yugoslavia reports excellent yields of all grains.

Conditions Good in Rumania.

From all parts of Rumania conditions are reported satisfactory to the farmer. Official figures estimate an excess production of cereals over the country's home needs as follows: Wheat, 150,000 carloads; rye, 80,000; maize, 150,000.

Austrian crops have ripened in excellent quality and quantities nearly equal to 1929 with the exception of barley.

Hungary has reported less satisfactorily than her neighbors, as her crops, especially sugar beets, potatoes and corn, are a full 20 per cent behind last year.

Owing to prolonged drought, Czechoslovakia has prospects of only moderate crops of all grains.

France has begun to entertain serious doubts of producing enough wheat at home to provide bread for the nation. Last year France had a surplus of 30,000,000 bushels over the 260,000,000 required for home consumption. As late as last June, French crop experts estimated the crop at 20 per cent more promising than last year's yield. Then came protracted rains and electrical storms which swept all sections of the wheat-growing areas. Unofficial estimates of France's home-grown wheat this year, therefore, range around 250,000,000 bushels.

Italy, it has been estimated, will produce 6,071,000 metric tons of wheat, compared with 7,082,000 last year. This 14½ per cent decrease, however, is higher than the five-year average, which is 5,748,000 tons. Changeable weather, with excessively high temperatures and frequent electrical and hail storms, has damaged this year's Italian crops seriously.

German Crops Delayed.

A protracted wet period, which followed the long June drought, delayed all German crops. An increase of 25 per cent in wheat acreage, in accordance with the government's directions to agriculture to set up a condition avoiding importation of foreign wheat, has helped to keep up the yield. The additional acreage offset the seasonal damage, although increasing the cost of production.

It now is estimated that Germany will produce 20,000 tons of Summer wheat, compared with 197,000 last year, and 1,890,000 tons of Winter wheat, compared with 1,700,000 tons in 1930.

In other respects the German grain crop appears less promising. Rye, which is the staple crop of the Fatherland, it is estimated will yield only 47,000 tons Summer crop, compared with 59,000 tons of 1929. Winter rye, estimated at 5,000,000 tons, will not match the 6,000,000 tons of last year. Although more land was put to barley this year, that crop suffered from rains, and great quantities of rye destined for the beer industry were spoiled. The oat yield also will be smaller than last year by about 1,500,000 tons.

Convinced It Broke Drought, Negro Church to Pray Again

PORT CHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Convinced that the recent rains which brought relief to a parched countryside were sent in answer to the prayers of thirty-eight members of his congregation who assembled for that purpose last Wednesday night, the Rev. E. H. Hamblin, pastor of the Bethesda Baptist Church of Port Chester, one of the largest Negro churches in Westchester County, announced last night that a similar prayer meeting will be held next Wednesday night.

"I'm certain," said the pastor, "that the rain was sent when Heaven heard our prayers. Next Wednesday fifty brothers and sisters will meet and we'll pray that the rain may continue. And we'll pray also that some brother's heart may be touched so that he will donate a pipe organ for our new church. The church is nearly finished now."

ORDERS SEARCH ENDED FOR ROCKIES' CLIMBER

Mrs. Waffl Telegraphs Guides in Canada That She Has Given Up Hope for Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Aug. 16.—Instructions to discontinue the search for Newman D. Waffl, headmaster of Carteret Academy of Orange, mountain-climbing enthusiast, who has been missing for eleven days since his attempt to scale Mount Robson, British Columbia, were telegraphed today to searchers by the headmaster's wife, who has been in the Orange Memorial Hospital for fifteen weeks suffering from a fractured hip.

Mr. Waffl's stepdaughter, Mrs. H. being informed that her husband's knapsack and shreds of his clothing had been found by searching parties in the débris of an avalançhe. She explained in her telegram that she was afraid that, because of melting snow and ice on the upper slopes of the mountain, the searching parties might come to grief as her husband did.

Mr. Waffl's step-daughter, Mrs. H. J. O'Connor, said that her mother had given up hope that the body would be found.

Last year Mr. Waffl became headmaster of the Carteret Academy, an exclusive school for boys, whose faculty he joined twenty-five years ago as an instructor. He was 52 years old. An expert mountain climber, he had scaled some of the most difficult and dangerous peaks of the Rockies and the Swiss Alps. He was a member of the Canadian and American Alpine Clubs.

Mr. Waffl was born in New York City and was graduated from Syracuse University. Besides his widow and stepdaughter, he is survived by his mother, Mrs. L. E. Waffl of Fort Plain, N. Y.

VICTIM OF THUGS HONORED.

Cambridge (Mass.) Citizen Was Killed in Aiding Policeman.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 16 (AP).—Cambridge paid solmen tribute today to the memory of Allan McPherson, 29, private citizen, who laid down his life in aiding a policeman who had been attacked while making an arrest.

Mayor Richard M. Russell, members of the City Council, details of policemen and firemen in uniform and a huge crowd of citizens attended the solemn requiem mass in St. Paul's Catholic Church today.

A gang of hoodlums was giving Patrolman William Anderson trouble on the night of Aug. 4 when McPherson went to his aid. The patrolman succeeded in getting the man under arrest into a patrol wagon, but McPherson was terribly beaten by the thugs and died Tuesday.

Two brothers, John J. Donahue, 21, and Martin A., 18, have been charged with McPherson's slaying.

Snow and Hail Cause Rivers to Overflow—Three Alpinists Found Frozen to Death.

VIENNA, Aug. 16.—Where the flimsiest dresses and Palm Beach suits usually are de rigeur in August for those unable to adopt the pleasanter alternative of spending their days in the cooling waters of the Danube and the sweltering nights in bungalows in the hills, Vienna is now suffering from such a degree of Winter weather that residents are appearing in Winter clothing and foreigners are departing to escape the bitter winds.

Snow has fallen heavily in the neighboring Schneeberg Baxalp district and hotelkeepers are urging tourists to stay and enjoy the unusual experience of skiing in August.

Three tourists, Hans Kinz of Karlsruhe, Hinz Klump of Berlin and Dr. Karl Fisher of Vienna started on a trip to the wild Kaiser Mountain area near Kitzbuehel Thursday. As they had failed to return, a rescue party was sent out this morning and found the three Alpinists frozen to death.

Everywhere rivers are rising. In some places the Danube has overflowed its banks. The Rivers Enns and Traun in the Salzkamargut Lake district have overflowed their banks.

In the valleys of the Hochschwab Alps terrific thunderstorms accompanied a heavy fall of hail, lasting nearly two hours. An Ilgner stream overflowed its banks, blocking the highroad with débris. Hailstones lay more than ten inches deep in Sanct Ilgenx churchyard.

Near Salzburg many rivers overflowed their banks. A landslide at Inklamm Pass blocked the main road to Gastein Spa. Heavy snow has fallen in the Salzburg Alps.

Even worse weather conditions were reported from Bulgaria. Storms smashed hundreds of windows in Sofia and uprooted telephone and telegraph posts in the countryside. Heavy snow fell in the Bulgarian Alps. Many casualties to persons and animals were reported.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BELGRADE, Aug. 16.—Twenty-two persons drowned when a rowboat upset in the River Drave last night.

In connection with Friday's Catholic holiday, hundreds of peasants had made a pilgrimage from the villages in the neighborhood of Gjurjevatch, near the Hungarian frontier, to a famous shrine some distance from Drave in boats. On their return one overloaded boat began to rock in the swollen river. Finally a large wave overturned it. Thirteen women and nine men perished and only two were rescued.

RAINFALL IN BERLIN SETS 20-YEAR RECORD

Gales and Downpour Continue for Forty-eight Hours—Ships Driven to Seek Shelter.

BERLIN, Aug. 16 (AP).—This is the wettest August that Germany has seen in twenty years. The northwesterly gales and heavy downpours of the last forty-eight hours continued all day over virtually the entire country, especially on the North Sea coasts, where more than an inch of rain has fallen in twelve hours.

Two young men were drowned at Brandenburg when their boat capsized. Two women in Berlin, struck by a shop sign blown down, were sent to a hospital. Elsewhere no casualties have been reported, but widespread damage has been done to growing grain.

Scores of ships were held up in the Elbe and Weser estuaries today. The lightship off Cuxhaven was torn from its moorings and some other craft lost their anchors, drifting helplessly until taken in tow.

A heavy windstorm considerably damaged the Segeberg watering place in Holstein. From Southern Bavaria violent hailstorms and floods were reported.

Montana Situation Critical.

How to get 500,000 head of cattle and 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 head of sheep from the blighted plains of Montana to the feeding pens of nearby States was the chief concern of Secretary Hyde and President Hoover today. Secretary Hyde, accompanied by Chairman Alexander Legge of the Federal Farm Board, went to the President's Rapidan camp this afternoon to confer about this emergency.

The Farm Board stands ready, it was said, to lend $5,000,000 to the National Livestock Marketing Association as soon as that organization complies with the requirements and this could be used for moving the Montana herds.

State Committees Formed.

The first messages from the Governors who attended the drought relief conference at the White House were received today by Secretary Hyde, who took them to President Hoover at Rapidan. The messages stated that the Governors sending them had set up State committees which will coordinate with county and Federal agencies in administering relief. President Hoover had asked the Governors first to name the financier member of their State organizations. He purposes to call them at once to Washington to set up the credit mechanism through which the Federal financial agencies will cooperate.

The Weather Bureau continued today encouraging reports on meteorological conditions, predicting general showers for most of the drought areas for the first part of the coming week.

Secretary Hyde has ordered a special survey to obtain complete information regarding the needs of farmers for feed and possible sources of supplies to meet the deficiency. More than 100,000 crop reporters in twenty-eight States were asked to obtain this data. The survey will cover all States except New England, New Jersey, Delaware, the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida and the States west of the Rocky Mountains.

So far little evidence of forced marketing of live stock because of the drought has appeared in reports received by the Department of Agriculture from its representatives in eighteen of the leading live-stock markets.

Louis J. Taber, Master of the National Grange, in the National Grange Farm and Home Hour, feature of the National Broadcasting Company today, broadcast a general picture of the drought situation and advised families in need to go immediately to their local Red Cross chapters. He described the relief plan evolved by the President and Governors as "admirable."

Illinois Responds at Once.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Aug. 16 (AP).—Governor Emmerson, on his return today from the conference with President Hoover, directed the State Highway Division to place under contract at once $4,000,000 of road building, intended for 1931.

The 1930 road program was to total $32,500,000. The new work will increase this to nearly $37,000,000. Many of the road projects already under contract for this year are located in the drought-stricken areas of the State. In contracting for the $4,000,000 additional work, the department would insist, it was announced, that the contractors, in so far as practicable, employ Illinois labor and include a fair scale of wages in their bids.

GIRL CAMP LEADERS GET JAIL TERMS

Misses Holmes and Husa, Communist Directors at Van Etten, Also Are Fined.

AS DESECRATORS OF FLAG

THEY DENIED ALL CHARGES

Conviction Before Justice of Peace a Climax of a Long Series of Incidents.

Special to The New York Times.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Miss Aileen Holmes and Miss Mable Husa of New York City, directors of the Young Communist League Camp at Van Etten, were found guilty today in the court of William Westbrook, Justice of the Peace, of desecration of the American flag.

Three months' terms in the Monroe County penitentiary were imposed on them and a fine of $50 each.

Attempts to get the Justice to parole the young women failed. He insists that they must be jailed as a warning to Communists all over the United States that they could not trifle with the American flag or teach un-Christian doctrines.

Residents of Waverly, N. Y., Sayre and Athens, Pa., who instigated the prosecution and with their friends filled half the little court room at Van Etten, showed disposition to make a demonstration when the Justice announced his verdict and passed sentence, but State troopers prevented it and the room was cleared.

The trial of the case lasted all day. Mrs. Daisy Felt of Waverly and Andrew Dennis of Athens, the two signers of the complaint against the Misses Holmes and Husa, told their story and Samuel and Arthur Koons and their mother, Mrs. Victoria Koons of Sayre, backed them up.

Complaints Tell of Rebuff.

They said that they had read in the Sayre papers a statement by the Rev. H. M. Shepson, pastor of the First Baptist Church, that conditions at the camp were a disgrace, that un-American doctrines were being taught and that the flag of Soviet Russia was being idolized.

Dennis bought an American flag and a pole and the party went to the camp and offered them as a gift, virtually demanding that the campers fly the flag daily.

Misses Husa and Holmes refused, they asserted. According to the witnesses, the girl directors said: "To hell with the American flag," and "Down with the American flag." Furthermore, it was stated, Miss Holmes and Husa declared that the Soviet would rule the United States in four years and make the American flag a dishrag.

Evidence for the Defense.

At the afternoon session Miss Holmes, Miss Husa, Walter Warwick, 17, of Port Chester, N. Y., a member of the camp; Mrs. William Wendella, who leased the land to the campers; Mrs. Elli Haino, New York City, who lived at the camp, and Jack McKela, 15, of Syracuse, also a camper, denied that disrespect was shown the flag or that any one said "to hell" with it.

Miss Holmes, who gave her age as 23, Miss Husa, who gave her age as 20, said they recognized the American flag as the flag of their country and respected it as such. But they added that they regarded it as a capitalistic flag while the International Workers' flag they esteemed as the flag of all who labored. They denied showing disrespect for the flag.

Miss Holmes stated that she had been arrested and convicted in Boston three years ago for engaging in a Sacco-Vanzetti protest meeting in front of the State House.

Justice Westbrook advised with District Attorney S. P. Roe, of Chemung County. Then he said that the campers had brought nothing but strife and worry to Van Etten. Calling the defendants before him, he imposed sentence.

Camp Has Attracted Attention.

The camp at Van Etten was opened early in the Summer by Miss Holmes of 533 East 139th Street, New York City, and Miss Husa of 43 East 125th Street, New York City, with children largely from New York City and Baltimore as the pupils.

Van Etten, which is a rural community, is largely populated by Friends. Many of these have Communist or Socialistic inclinations. They operate a cooperative store and keep to themselves, no one being concerned about their meetings.

Visitors thronged the new camp and its directors lost no opportunity, it is reported, to impress upon guests that it was red, declaring children were being taught opposition to government and overthrow of wealth and were being told that the Soviet would soon rule the world.

The children themselves did not seem to know what it was all about, but submitted to an hour's daily instruction in red doctrines and spent the rest of the time in swimming or organized games.

When word about the instruction at the camp came out hundreds of visitors motored to the camp nightly. They received quantities of Communist literature.

Just as trouble seemed to be brewing some of the children caught chickenpox and health officers closed the camp to guests, posting guards.

Klansmen Take a Hand.

Last Saturday night about 400 Waverly, Sayre and Athens residents and 300 Chemung County Klu Klux Klansmen in regalia, but unhooded, invaded Van Etten, the klansmen holding a meeting to denounce the Communists and the others raiding the camp and taking the directors and two children before William Westbrook, justice of the peace.

Mr. Westbrook refused to act until he consulted District Attorney S. P. Roe, and the girls and their wards were returned to camp by State police and deputy sheriffs. Later, however, he caused the arrest of Misses Husa and Holmes.

Miss Hewitt Gives American Relics to Ford; 18 Carriages, 1 Used by Lincoln, Among Them

Special to The New York Times.

RINGWOOD MANOR, N. J., Aug. 16.—Miss Sarah Cooper Hewitt, granddaughter of Peter Cooper, philanthropist and founder of Cooper Union in New York City, and daughter of Abram S. Hewitt, once Mayor of New York, has presented to Henry Ford her collection of relics, many of them dating back 300 years, it was learned today at the Hewitt estate near here. She offered the relics to the American Museum of Natural History several months ago, but the gift was declined because of lack of space.

This week Ford employes visited the estate every day, and already three carloads of the antiques have been shipped to the Ford museum at Dearborn, Mich. Many of the relics are valuable, some of them being harnesses inlaid with silver and said to be worth $1,500 apiece.

Eighteen carriages are included in the donation, including one used by President Lincoln and by President Roosevelt at his inauguration. The gifts also include fifteen sleighs of an early American period. Numerous antiquated farm implements formerly used on the extensive farm lands of the estate were sent to Mr. Ford. Next week further gifts will be shipped, including a yoke of oxen, each animal being 7 years old and a thoroughbred.

The family history has it that several years before the American Revolution the Hewitt estate had guests staying there who were the direct cause of the Boston Tea Party in 1773. These guests, it was said, were ladies of the court of King George III who found their trip to America so expensive that they appealed to the King to raise more revenue for the court. Therefore, according to the tale, the King succeeded in having passed the tea tax, which resulted in the Boston Tea Party.

Miss Hewitt, who was prominent in the social life of the '90s, is secluded in her New York City home at 9 Lexington Avenue because of an illness resulting from an operation in 1928. With her sister, the late Miss Eleanor G. Hewitt, she was for many years active in philanthropic work and the two, in 1897, founded the Museum of Fine Arts at Cooper Union.

Miss Hewitt is the sister of Erskine Hewitt, New York lawyer and capitalist and of Edward Ringwood Hewitt, also of New York, an inventor and engineer.

At Miss Hewitt's New York home it was said last night that she is bed-ridden and seriously but not dangerously ill.

AIR TREK ON TODAY FOR CHICAGO RACES

Pistol Shot by Radio Will Start Seven Fliers From Long Beach, Cal., in Women's Derby.

1,000 PLANES TO MOBILIZE

Service and Civil Airmen From All Parts of Country Will Fly to the Converging Point This Week.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—A great migration of flying craft starts tomorrow toward Chicago from all parts of the country for the National Air Races.

For a week the concentration of the nation's flying machines and flying men will continue, and by next Saturday, when the races begin, 1,000 planes are expected at Curtiss Field and in the hangars of a dozen Chicago airports, ready to take the air and fly for honors and prizes.

A score of girl pilots flying in the Pacific Women's Derby, will start the movement toward Chicago. They will take off from Long Beach, Cal., at 3:30 P. M., Pacific Time, or 6:30 Chicago Time.

At that hour Major R. W. Schroeder, contest director, will stand before a microphone here, pistol in hand, and fire the starting shot that will be carried by radio to Long Beach, where fifteen small open planes will be marshaled on the starting line.

The signal will start the first plane on the first lap of the 2,365-mile race over the San Bernardino Mountains, across the Yuma Desert and the Western plains to Chicago.

These women pilots, ranging from high school girls to matrons, will fly three or four hundred miles each day, making seventeen stops for fuel and rest before they land at Curtiss Field, on Aug. 25, the third day of the ten-day race meet, where $22,000 in prize money will await the victors.

Entrants in Women's Derby.

The official list of seven contestants comprises Gladys O'Donnell of Long Beach, winner of second place in last year's derby from Santa Monica to Cleveland; Margery Doig of Danbury, Conn.; Ruth Barron of Hollywood, Mrs. Mildred Morgan of Beverly Hills, Claire Fahy of Los Angeles, Ruth Stewart of St. Louis and Jean La Rene of Kansas City.

New rules this year limiting the horsepower of planes in this race to 800 cubic inches displacement, deemed safer for the women fliers, eliminated several women pilots, including Mrs. Florence Lowe Barnes, holder of the women's world speed record for airplanes, and Amelia Earhart, who formerly held that record.

Mrs. Louise McPhetridge Thaden, winner of last year's derby, was kept out of the race because of the arrival of a son two weeks ago.

Among late entries received today for the women's Dixie Derby, starting from Washington, D. C., on Friday, were those of Nancy Hopkins of New York, who will fly a Kittyhawk biplane; Mrs. Mae Haizlip of Kansas City and Mrs. Martie Bowman of Hempstead, L. I., who also sent along her husband's entry for three speed events.

Goebel and Post in Non-Stop Dash.

Art Goebel, winner of the Dole prize for his flight to Hawaii and former holder of transcontinental speed records, entered for the non-stop race from Los Angeles which will finish here on Aug. 27.

Another entrant was Wiley Post, flying a Wasp Lockheed Vega, who informed race officials that he would cross the finish line, refuel aloft, and continue to New York, seeking a non-stop transcontinental record from Los Angeles.

Many service planes will arrive here Friday. From Quantico will come the marines and from Anacosta and San Diego the navy squadrons. A fleet of army bombers will arrive from Langley Field and forty or more army pursuit ships from Selfridge Field.

While the contest committee was organizing the race events today, the reception committee was perfecting plans for the entertainment of aviation celebrities.

The Chicago chapter of the National Aeronautical Association announced that to Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd will be presented a diploma of honorary membership in the association at its banquet at the Sherman Hotel Friday evening. Admiral Byrd will be the fifth to receive the diploma, the others being Dr. Hugo Eckner, Thomas A. Edison, Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh and Orville Wright.

The banquet will bring together most of the outstanding figures in American aviation.

MINIATURE PLANES DO STUNTS AT SHOW

TARRYTOWN WINS CUP

County Recreation Group Holds First of Annual Exhibits, With Several Thousand Attending.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—The first annual miniature aircraft show, promoted by the Westchester County Recreation Commission, was held today at the County Centre Building and the adjoining ten-acre parking area. Several thousand adults visited the events during the day. One hundred and ten boys and fourteen girls, all under 16 years of age, participated and one of the planes stayed in the air nearly five minutes.

A sudden downpour in midafternoon sent the crowd running for shelter, but not before a hundred planes, made of Japanese tissue paper and thin strips of balsam were drenched and ruined.

The outstanding performance of the tournament was furnished by a hand-launched plane belonging to Francis Schaider of 41 West View Avenue, White Plains, which sustained flight for 4 minutes 25 seconds, to take first place in the boys' handlaunched event.

The Tarrytown playground scored the largest number of points, with six entries and all of them winners. The Bronxville playground scored highest in the county-wide tournament.

F. L. Lobdell, director of miniature aircraft activities on the Recreation Commission's staff, declared the Tarrytown playground would receive a cup for its achievement. Wilmont Merrow of Mount Vernon, high point holder among the senior boys entered in the contest, won a complete course in glider instruction from the Westchester Glider School at Valhalla. He will be qualified for a glider's pilot license.

Outstanding results of the various events follow:

Girls Indoor Glider—Alberta Sherwood, 11, Ossining, 3 4-5 seconds.

Church Plans Indoor Golf Course.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Aug. 16.—Miniature golf is going indoors, and a church is taking it inside. The Rev. F. L. Quinn, pastor of St. Paul's Catholic parish, Highland Park, said today that an eighteen-hole course was being constructed in the basement of the Rosary Auditorium of St. Paul's School and would be opened soon. The funds derived through operation of the course will be used to pay off part of the $129,000 debt on the new school building.

BILLIARDS PLAYED 4,000 FEET ALOFT

PASSES ENDURANCE FLIERS

Player Executes Difficult Cue Manoeuvre — Proposes Matching Experts on Cross-Country Flight.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 16.—Billiards in the air proved a success here today when Charles C. Peterson of St. Louis, famous billiard player, flying at an altitude of 4,000 feet and a speed of 100 miles an hour, made 100 points in 28½ seconds, just 2¼ seconds longer than his own world record on an earth-bound table.

With Captain Frank Courtney, the British World War aviator, at the controls, Peterson made four flights for his playing in a giant Curtiss-Wright Condor plane, the tests being recorded by still and movie camera men.

By way of diversion, and by request, Peterson made a flight around the Greater St. Louis, the record breaking endurance plane, going within 300 feet of Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brine, who waved greetings. Mrs. Jackson was a spectator at the aerial billiard exhibition and Major Ray Wassall, St. Louis flier, was official timer.

Varying speeds and heights were tried and it was found that a speed of from 95 to 100 miles an hour and an elevation from 3,500 to 4,000 feet were almost perfect for aerial billiards. Once Captain Courtney developed 132 miles an hour at an elevation of 7,000 feet, but the ivory balls vibrated too much.

On the first flight, which required about thirty minutes, Peterson registered 70 points in 42 seconds. On the fourth flight, the official one, which started at the Curtiss-Steinberg field in East St. Louis, Ill., and went directly over the city of St. Louis on the return to Lambert-St. Louis flying field, Peterson made his aerial record of 100 points in 28½ seconds.

On that fourth trip Peterson astounded his gallery by making the famous balancing shot, in which he places the white ball on top of the red, then with his cue ball shoots the red ball from under the white, making three cushions, then counts on the white ball. This shot under perfect conditions is considered one of the most difficult.

"I simply was amazed at the results I gained," Peterson said. "I did not believe billiards could be played so well in the air. If I did not know I was in the air I would swear I was playing on terra firma.

"I made many difficult shots after I made the speed test and I got action. Once, when Captain Courtney tilted the plane at an angle of 30 degrees, I managed to make ten points at straight rail.

"This exhibition may be classed as an experiment, but there is a future for aerial billiards. I would like to suggest that a test match be tried between Willie Hoppe and Jake Schaefer on a run between St. Louis and Chicago. I would like to referee that match. I am for more aerial billiards."

The game was played in the plane's passenger compartment, which is 21 feet, 6 inches long, 6 feet, 6 inches high, and 6 feet, 1 inch wide. The specially constructed portable table was 6 feet long and 3 feet wide, the largest table ever used in an airplane. In the first aerial billiard flight, made by Ralph Greenleaf in Detroit in December, a table 2½ feet long by 5 feet was used.

The condor plane used for experiment is powered with two 600 horsepower Conqueror motors, has a wing spread of 93 feet and a high speed of 139 miles an hour.

HOOVER WOULD AID AIR COMMERCE

mercial industry from carrying mail and express matter to the transportation of passengers was described to Mr. Hoover, who was said to be much impressed by the number of persons who travel by air.

Methods of coordinating the various activities of the government air services were reviewed, the purpose being to find means of avoiding duplication and useless expenditure, but not to impair efficiency, weaken national defense or retard the progress of commercial aviation.

Figures presented to Mr. Hoover showed the present government outlay for aviation, including air mail contracts and lighting, totals $120,000,000 annually.

Demands by all branches of the government air services for annual replacements were said to involve about 3,000 planes, while about 500 are required annually for commercial enterprises.

It was stated that the conferees agreed that further government aid to commercial flying companies would increase their demands for planes each year, thus aiding the manufacturers.

The understanding is that the President will go more deeply into commercial aviation, will ask for further suggestions and may call airplane manufacturers into consultation.

While his time was occupied primarily with the aviation situation, today he kept in touch with the drought situation through the White House and Secretary Hyde and Chairman Legge and two other Farm Board members who went to the camp for conferences. Guests at the camp were, as usuel, left largely to their own devices.

FOUR AIR WEDDINGS HELD IN ONE PLANE

Three Clergymen Officiate, With One Witness, in Event Above New Harrisburg Field.

Special to The New York Times.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Aug. 16.—Four aerial weddings took place at noon today as the first events on a two-day program dedicating the Harrisburg Airport, five miles from the business district. On the bank of the Susquehanna River, it is one of the first inland fields to be equipped for sea planes as well as land craft.

The four weddings were held simultaneously in a twelve-passenger transport plane, three ministers officiating. Only one person could be taken along as witness, owing to the capacity limit of the plane. The craft took off at 12 o'clock and landed ten minutes later.

The aerial brides and bridegrooms were: Miss Jennie Eckhart and Harry Schaeffer, both of Steelton, married by the Rev. J. H. Schmidt of New Cumberland; Miss Sara Himes of Progress and Gerald Pipes of Penbrook, married by the Rev. C. H. Heiges of New Cumberland; Miss Marian E. Green and Harold W. Shadel, both of Harrisburg, also married by Mr. Heiges, and Miss Kathryn Robinson of High Spire and Aldus Arment of Harrisburg, married by the Rev. M. V. Schrivinger.

T. B. SLICK DEAD; WEALTHY OIL MAN

DISCOVERED BIG OIL FIELDS

Reported to Have Disposed of Mid-West Holdings for Many Millions of Dollars.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 16.—Thomas B. Slick, wealthy independent oil operator of Tulsa, Okla., died here of apoplexy today in his rooms in the Marburg Building of Johns Hopkins Hospital, where he had been a patient since June 27. His age was 46.

The hospital issued the following statement:

"Mr. Slick arrived here June 27, suffering from thyroid trouble, and was admitted to the hospital as a patient. It took some time before he could be treated sufficiently to strengthen him for the strain of an operation.

"An operation was performed for goiter on Aug. 5. Mr. Slick apparently stood the operation well, was recovering and was making his plans to leave the hospital.

"He suffered a stroke of apoplexy, or a cerebral hemorrhage, on Aug. 14. He died early today."

Burial will take place in Clarion, Pa., at the home of Mr. Slick's mother, Mrs. J. W. Slick, on Monday.

Sold Holdings for Vast Amount.

During his long career in Pennsylvania, Kansas and Oklahoma Mr. Slick often was referred to as "King of the Wildcatters." He was credited with the discovery of some of the best producing oil fields in the Southwest.

Mr. Slick figured in the Pennsylvania oil fields before going to the West. He acquired vast holdings in the West, and in March, 1929, sold them to the Prairie Oil and Gas Company for a sum estimated at between $30,000,000 and $45,000,000. He announced his retirement at the time of this deal, but soon resumed activities. He was busy with new operations in Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma when he entered the hospital.

Early in his career Mr. Slick decided to retire. In 1912 he sold his holdings in Southern Illinois for $2,500,000 with that end in view, but he soon resumed operations, this time in the Southwest.

Rumor had it that Mr. Slick, who was born in Clarion, Pa., started his career as a teamster and suffered the pangs of hunger many times during his early youth, but he himself declared last year that manual labor never played much of a part in his life.

"I was poor enough," he said, "but I was never starving. I always had sense enough to rustle a meal. I never drove a mule in my life, nor dressed a drill, but I would have done those things if I had to. My whole life has been work, work, work, the hardest kind of work, but not manual labor."

Lost Several Fortunes.

During his oil career Mr. Slick saw many fortunes come and go, building up vast accumulations only to lose them. He spent some of his earnings in a street railway line in Tulsa and an interurban line between Tulsa and Sapulpa, fourteen miles away, but a business slump caused him to abandon the project and develop only a terminus of the road. He also set out pecan trees and shipped nuts by the carload.

Mr. Slick is survived by a widow, the daughter of J. A. Frates, vice president of the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway, two sons and a daughter.

SILVAIN, NOTED ACTOR, VICTIM OF A STROKE

SAINT CYR LES SECQUES, Department of Var, France, Aug. 16 (AP).—Eugene Silvain, dean of the Comedie Française, known as one of the greatest of French actors in the last half century, is suffering from partial paralysis in his villa here, being temporarily deprived of speech. He is 79 years old. Despite his age, his physicians hold hopes for recovery.

M. Silvain, a contemporary of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, made his début more than fifty years ago as Theseus in "Phedra." During his long career in the House of Moliere, as the Comedie Française is called, he scored triumph after triumph in classic repertoire, including "Le Cid," "Polyeucte," "Le Misanthrope" and "Le Pere Lebonnard."

Some years ago M. Silvain was forced out of the theatre as being too old. He brought suit in the courts, won, and was restored to full activity, only to retire of his own volition last year.

He is an ardent chess player, holding forth at the Café de la Regence, where Napoleon sometimes used to play. Now and then the aged actor would become so interested in the game that he would forget his theatre engagements. Then he would have to be called just before the curtain went up. This annoyed his associates.

M. Silvain was a soldier in the war of 1870. He was an intimate friend of some of the greatest figures of the third republic.

C. L. HAMILTON DIES; EXPERT ON ANTIQUES

Philadelphia Collector Had Long Headed Paper Concern Founded by His Father.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, Aug. 16.—Charles Lacey Hamilton, paper manufacturer and collector of antiques, whose home was in the Warwick Hotel, Philadelphia, died here in his apartment in the Hotel Chelsea late yesterday afternoon, in his eighty-third year, after a four years' illness. He was unconscious for three days before the end. His wife and daughters were at his bedside.

Funeral services will be held in the Baier Funeral Parlors, Philadelphia, at 2 P. M. on Tuesday.

Besides his widow, the former Olivia Phillips, Mr. Hamilton is survived by three daughters, Mrs. Walter M. Schwartz and Mrs. James F. Benson of Chestnut Hill, Pa., and Mrs. Roland P. Falkner of East Orange, N. J., and a son, Charles L. Hamilton Jr. of Philadelphia.

For many years Mr. Hamilton was president of W. C. Hamilton & Sons, paper manufacturers of Miquon, Pa., a concern founded by his father. When he became ill he relinquished the presidency and became vice president.

Mr. Hamilton's collection of antiques probably is as extensive as any in Philadelphia belonging to an individual.

He was a member of the Union League Club, Bachelor Barge Club and Historical and Numismatic Societies.

C. L. GRAVES DIES AT TEE.

Illinoisan Stricken on Golf Links at Princeton.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Charles L. Graves of Winnetka, Ill., collapsed late yesterday on the Princeton golf links as he was about to play in a foursome and died shortly afterward. Death was attributed to heart disease.

Mr. Graves arrived at the clubhouse with Neil Bowman, president of the Pocono Rubber Company of Trenton, who lives here. Two friends joined them. Mr. Graves was preparing to tee up for the first hole when he was stricken. He was carried to a bench, on which he died before medical assistance could be obtained.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Mr. Graves, who was 34 years old, was district manager of the auto accessories department of Montgomery, Ward & Co. He was the son of Mrs. Charles L. Graves and the late Mr. Graves, a realty broker in the East. He was a member of the Lake Shore Athletic Club. Burial will take place at Lexington, Ky.

ADOLPH BUSCH MAGNUS.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16 (AP).—Adolph Busch Magnus, grandson of the late Adolphus Busch, St. Louis brewer, died in a Chicago hospital last night. He was 46 years old. Mr. Magnus was operated on for an intestinal infection about a month ago.

Mr. Magnus was born in St. Louis on July 3, 1884, obtained his early education at the University School in Chicago and later attended Yale. He was a son of Mrs. Nellie Busch Loeb. Immediately after he left Yale he started work in his grandfather's business, and later became assistant manager of the Chicago branch. He was a member of the South Shore Country Club and the Calumet Club, both of Chicago.

FREDONIA, N. Y., Aug. 16 (AP).—Guy H. Fuller, former editor of The Jamestown Sunday Sun, is dead here in the home of his daughter, Miss Edna Fuller.

Mr. Fuller was 79 years old, and since his retirement from newspaper work, twenty-five years ago, had been prominently connected with organization work in the Loyal Order of Moose.

GEN. KUNDT QUITS MILITARY CAREER

CRITICIZES SOUTH AMERICA

He Charges All Nations There Are Moneyed Oligarchies, and, as Such, Ill-Governed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BALBOA, C. Z., Aug. 16.—Passing through the Panama Canal on the Grace liner Santa Clara, en route to New York, where he will remain but three hours before proceeding with his family to Germany, General Hans Kundt, deposed head of the Bolivian Army, today already had taken on the attributes of civilian life, to which he says he will retire. The German militarist looked like anything but a soldier of fortune or the type of man who ordered soldiers to fire on unarmed cadets, as his enemies charged following the recent revolution in Bolivia.

Gray-haired and tired looking, General Kundt denied this charge and intimated that he had been slandered by rumors which emanated from the country whose army he trained for twelve years.

"I am able emphatically to declare that but one cadet perished in the street fighting, and his life was taken by a stray bullet," he said. "Less than thirty were killed in the entire fighting."

General Kundt declared he was through with soldiering in Latin America and never expected to see the continent again unless on a visit. Moreover, he said he had little respect for the governments of South America, although tolerant of them. He declared, "There exists in all South America nothing but moneyed oligarchies. Oligarchies always are badly governed. I believe firmly that these countries have not been educated to democracy, because their transition from colonial to independent States was too quick."

General Kundt still had a good word for the deposed President, Dr. Hernando Siles, who resigned his office with the intention of trying for re-election.

If Dr. Siles had wanted to be a dictator, as charged, he could have remained in office indefinitely, but instead he chose constitutional means of regaining the Presidency by resigning, the General declared. He pointed out that Dr. Siles made no attempt to hide his intention.

The 61-year-old General is eager that he be known as a German citizen and is proud of his World War record as a Brigadier General, although he admitted that he took out Bolivian citizenship during his four years in Bolivia before the war. He declared he became a German citizen again when he returned to Germany.

General Kundt, who speaks German, French, Spanish and Russian, hopes to retire to civilian life immediately on his arrival in Germany, and possibly to write a book on his South American experiences, with particular reference to Bolivia.

Military Funeral for John Fromm.

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Aug. 16.—Military honors will be paid to former County Commander John Fromm of the American Legion, who died after drinking poison Wednesday night at his real estate office in Closter. The legion posts of the county will assemble tomorrow afternoon at Closter legion headquarters at 3 o'clock. The body will lie in state at the club house before the funeral. There will also be a funeral ritual by the Masons.

Florence M. Garrison.

BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 16.—Miss Florence M. Garrison, sister of Lieut. Col. Fielding H. Garrison, United States Army, retired, died yesterday at the Johns Hopkins Hospital. She was 55 years old. Funeral services will be held Monday in Washington.

VICE PRESIDENT SAVES WOMAN HIT BY COACH

Curtis Jumps From Box for Rescue on Driveway of W. H. Vanderbilt Home at Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 16.—Vice President Curtis and Mortimer A. Sullivan, Mayor of Newport, rescued two women this afternoon on the driveway at the entrance to Oakland Farm, home of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt, when the women became trapped between a hedge and one of Mr. Vanderbilt's coaches returning from the Newport Horse Show.

The horses, frightened by the striking up of a band, shied, veering the coach toward the hedge beside which the women, Mrs. Bertha Horton of Providence and Mrs. L. B. McLennan of Portsmouth, were standing, and both were knocked down.

Mayor Sullivan, waiting to welcome the coaching party, rushed to Mrs. McLennan, who had fallen beneath a wheel of the coach, and dragged her to safety. Vice President Curtis, who was on the coach, sprang down and rescued Mrs. Horton.

Mrs. McLennan was taken to the Newport Hospital, where it was found she had suffered a torn finger and badly swollen leg. Mrs. Horton was only slightly injured.

There was a crowd of several thousand at Oakland Farm this afternoon, the occasion being the fair being held for the Children's Welfare Fund of Rhode Island, and all were watching the arrival of Mr. Vanderbilt's two coaches from the horse show when the accident occurred.

The coach driven by Mr. Vanderbilt carried Governor Norman S. Case of Rhode Island and Mrs. Case, Major Dwight Colley of the Governor's Staff and Mrs. Colley and Mrs. Colby, mother of Mrs. Vanderbilt. It passed through the driveway and around a sharp turn without incident.

Following close behind came another coach driven by Everett Colby of Orange, N. J., with the Vice President on the box with him. Others occupying the coach were Mrs. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Fitz Simons, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Haffenreffer, Mrs. George Mesta, whom the Vice President is visiting, and Charles and Everett Colby Jr., occupying the other seats.

Just as the Colby coach made the turn a band started up and the horses shied.

FRANK PENNACCHIO DEAD.

He Established the First Italian Theatre in This City.

Frank Pennacchio, who established the first Italian theatre in this city and who was engaged in real estate and theatrical enterprises, died on Friday at his home, 1,259 Forty-ninth Street, Brooklyn. Mr. Pennacchio, who was born in Italy in 1863, came to the United States at the age of 25 and in 1892 established a theatre at 109 Mulberry Street. He later sold the theatre and entered the real estate field, acquiring holdings in New York and on Long Island.

He was a member of the Fraterna Society of New York, the Sons of Italy, the Figlio Italia Society and the Italian Hospital Society. He is survived by his widow, six sons and five daughters. Funeral services will be held Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at St. Rosalie's Roman Catholic Church, Sixty-fourth Street and Fourteenth Avenue, Brooklyn.

Mrs. Charles J. Wooehr.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16.—Mrs. Dora L. Wooehr, widow of Charles J. Wooehr, former textile manufacturer of Frankford, died at her home in Holmesburg today in her sixty-ninth year. She was active in charity and was a director of the Needlework Guild of America. A daughter and five sons survive.

Robert Arthur Osborn.

Funeral services for Robert Arthur Osborn of Beaufort Gardens, former Park Commissioner of New Rochelle, who died on Friday, were held yesterday morning at St. Bartholomew's Chapel, Park Avenue and Fifty-first Street. Mr. Osborn, who was 70 years old, had been active in Democratic circles in New Rochelle and was the founder and proprietor of the Osborn Hotel there.

MOTOR ACCIDENTS CAUSE FOUR DEATHS

TWO OTHERS ARE HELD

One Victim Died of Injuries Which Were at First Thought Only Trivial.

New Jersey State police searched yesterday for a hit-and-run driver whose car killed Mrs. Jacob Jock, 54 years old, near her home in Reed Street, Sayreville, N. J., Friday night. Mrs. Jock was crossing the street with her two sons when the speeding car struck her and hurled her to the street, dead of a fractured skull. The sons said the car was going so fast that they could not get a description either of the car or its driver.

Erwin Eicholz, 17, of 458 Avon Avenue, Newark, was held in Woodbridge, N. J., yesterday on a charge of manslaughter following the death of an unidentified man who was struck by Eicholz's car in St. George Avenue, Woodbridge, Friday night. Eicholz had only recently obtained a driver's license. The victim died in the Rahway Hospital. He was about 45 years old, well dressed, and had an expensive watch bearing the initials C.Y.M.A. The body was taken to a morgue in Perth Amboy.

Alfred Needham of the Hotel Kenmore, New York City, who was struck by an automobile on the Hutchinson River Parkway Friday night, died yesterday in the New Rochelle Hospital. Needham had been driving in an automobile owned by Mrs. Isabelle Townsend, 33, of Flushing, L. I. They stopped the car on the parkway while Needham walked back for a briefcase which had fallen out. He was struck by an automobile driven by Samuel Corbett, 96 Kraft Avenue, Bronxville.

Mrs. Alice Johnston of New Rochelle, one of three guests in Corbett's car, suffered lacerations and was taken to the hospital with Needham. At first it was thought that Needham's injuries were slight, but yesterday he succumbed. Corbett said that the Townsend machine had no tail-light. He was held for the medical examiner.

Ned Bolt, 35, of High Point, N. C., a driver for the A. F. Wheeler Circus, died yesterday in the Atlantic City Hospital of injuries received Friday night when he was struck by a truck as he was standing beside his stalled van in Swainton, N. J. Calvin Eason of Pleasantville, N. J., driver of the truck, was held in $5,000 bail on a charge of manslaughter.

SEIZE CARLOAD OF BEER.

Atlantic City Agents Take Shipment Billed as Cantaloupes.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 16.—Two seizures of beer estimated to be worth $7,500 were made here today by Prohibition Agent W. W. Marshall and his squad.

The most important one was made at the Reading Railroad freight siding on Arkansas Avenue, where Federal Agent William Cavanaugh came upon a refrigerator car loaded with 250 half barrels of beer valued at $7,000. An examination of the bill of lading showed that it was consigned from the "West Coast Commission Company" of Patterson, to the "Seaboard Produce Company" of Atlantic City as a shipment of cantaloupes.

Marshall believes that the names of both concerns are fictitious. There is no way to check the real ownership, except to wait for some one to present a copy of the bill of lading. The beer was dumped outside the municipal incinerator.

A truck containing eleven barrels of beer was seized near California and Atlantic Avenues early today. The driver escaped, but a licence bearing the name of Lawrence Williams, 30, of 412 Main Avenue, was found in the machine.

VARIED PROGRAM GIVEN AT STADIUM CONCERT

Albert Coates, guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, conducted one of the best balanced programs of the season last night at the Lewisohn Stadium.

The program comprised Elgar's march, "Pomp and Circumstance, No. 1"; Boccherini's symphony in C major; the Russian dance "Gopak" from "The Fair of Sorochinsk," by Moussorgsky; Liadoff's legend "Kikimora"; Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries"; Balakireff's Oriental fantasy "Islamey," orchestrated by Alfredo Cassella; Percy Grainger's "Shepherds, Hey" and "Molly on the Shore" and Tchaikovsky's overture "Romeo and Juliet."

The audience demanded a repetition of the Moussorgsky work and tried to have Mr. Coates repeat "Islamey," though it was evidently too long. When the charming Grainger piece was given it was again necessary to repeat it.

The evening was one of the worst conceivable for playing out of doors because of the extreme humidity. The strings especially were laboring under great difficulties. The harps seemed to lose a string every few moments but rapid restringing kept the parts going. At the end of the concert Mr. Coates received an ovation and motioned the instrumentalists to rise for perhaps the fourth time during the evening. Tonight marks the end of his guest engagement at the Stadium this season.

Tonight's program is announced to include Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," Glinka's overture to "Rousslan and Ludmilla"; excerpts from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" and Scriabin's "Poeme de l'Extase."

MACHADO DISCREDITS CUBAN UNREST TALK

No Call for Our Intervention in Elections, He Says—Calls Communist Aims Futile.

HAVANA, Aug. 16 (AP).—President Machado in an interview today with The Associated Press discredited recent reports of political dissatisfaction and unrest in Cuba. He also denied reports that the United States might intervene in the Cuban elections this Fall.

"At the present time," he said, "the political situation of the Republic is normal. Peace prevails throughout the island and I have the honor of being the first Cuban President who has not seen actual or attempted overthrow of government by armed revolution during his administration.

"The tranquility has been at intervals slightly disturbed by scattered, abortive outbursts of Communism, engineered in almost every instance by foreigners who desire to blast existing order and change the present social régime by acts of violence and by dissemination of their destructive ideals among our neighboring nations.

"Being fully aware of my responsibilities as head of a nation so geographically located as is Cuba, I have energetically suppressed these objectionable activities."

Schneider Flies to Wichita.

MEET AT LAKE GEORGE.

Cottagers' Association Re-elects Officers—Want a Police Patrol.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKE GEORGE, N. Y., Aug. 16.—The largest meeting in the history of the Lake George Association, an organization composed mainly of residents of Summer cottages, was held this afternoon at the Lake George Club. W. B. Woodbury of New York City and Lake George was re-elected president. All other officers and chairmen of committees were re-elected.

A resolution was adopted favoring the passage of an act by the Legislature appropriating at least $200,000 for State publicity work. Another resolution adopted favored the revision of the State navigation law as affecting Lake George and the establishment of a police patrol on the lake.

Speakers at the meeting included Dr. Paul Brooks, Deputy State Superintendent of Public Health; Dr. Emmeline Moore, State fish culturist; Arthur F. Hopkins of the State Conservation Department, and Charles Tuttle, Federal District Attorney of New York City.

PESETA LOWEST SINCE 1898.

Further Fall to 9.75 to Dollar Disturbs Spanish Public.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MADRID, Aug. 16.—Pesetas dropped to 9.75 to the dollar in Madrid today in private deals, the exchange being closed. This is the lowest it has been since 1898.

The Spanish public is disturbed and puzzled at what it calls the unjustifiable fall. The position appears to be due to a combination of revolutionary fears abroad, Spanish and foreign speculation and, some say, the action of international capitalists at Amsterdam, who moved capital there from belligerent countries during the war to avoid taxation and are now using it for speculation. Foreign fears of political trouble would seem to be exaggerated.

As a consequence of the fall of the peseta foreign imports are at prohibitive prices and the cost of living is going up, so tourists are not likely to benefit by exchange.

FLIERS ESCAPE IN CRASH.

G. P. Brett Jr. and Companion Forced Down at Bridgeport.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Aug. 16 (AP).—George P. Brett Jr. of Bridgeport, vice president and treasurer of the Macmillan Publishing Company, New York City, and a companion, Leslie Cooper of Woodside, L. I., narrowly escaped injury today when Mr. Brett's plane buried its nose in the ground in a forced landing at Seaside Park here.

The motor of the plane had gone dead when the pair were about 1,500 feet up. Mr. Brett managed to bring the plane down in a small space between a bathing pavilion and baseball diamond, but the ship landed on one wheel only and turned up on its nose.

Mr. Brett and Mr. Cooper escaped with cuts and bruises, none considered serious. They were taken to Bridgeport Hospital.

FIELD PREPARES TO WED.

LONDON, Aug. 16 (AP).—Notice of the marriage of Mrs. Dudley Coats and Marshall Field 3d, grandson of the Chicago merchant, has been entered at the Marylebone registry office. It is believed the ceremony will take place Monday.

Mr. Field confirmed the announcement of his engagement to Mrs. Coats, who is an Englishwoman, on arriving in Southampton Thursday. At that time he said that the wedding would "possibly take place within a week or possibly within a month."

TARRYTOWN CHAPEL QUITS PARENT CHURCH

Row Over Trust Fund Causes Rift in Congregation of the Irvington Presbyterian.

Special to The New York Times.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Aug. 16.—After several months of discussion and arbitration the connection of the Presbyterian Hope Chapel here with its parent church, the Irvington Presbyterian of Irvington-on-Hudson, has definitely been severed and final incorporation papers for the new Hope Presbyterian Church of Tarryton will be filed in White Plains on Monday, it was learned here today. William Angus, who was elected president of the board of trustees of the new church at an organization meeting last week, made the announcement.

The move was recommended by a special committee of the Westchester Presbytery appointed to arbitrate a dispute between the chapel congregation leaders and parent church trustees over the disposition of a $49,000 trust building fund created for the chapel. The Irvington trustees were not inclined to turn over the fund, due to the fear that a new Hope chapel might reflect on the parent church, which is heavily in debt.

Although the Hope Chapel leaders were confident today that this fund would be turned over to them when incorporation of the new church was completed Monday, James Hall, chairman of the Irvington Presbyterian Church trustees, said, "The matter is not settled," and declared that it could not be settled until the Irvington trustees "meet in two or three weeks and decide what is best to do."

The Hope Chapel congregation numbers about 100, nearly half of whom were drawn from the parent church. It was established sixty-three years ago.

UNIFORM LABOR LAW URGED AT CONFERENCE

J. F. O'Connell Asks Standardization of Hours in All States—Chicago Meeting Closes.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—The National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws adjourned tonight after a week's session in which four acts were recommended to State and territorial legislatures for adoption. These were acts on child labor, jurisdiction in divorce, firearms and air licensing. The conference refused to adopt an absent voter's act and recommended to a committee a proposed act dealing with hasty marriages.

The air licensing act, which would put the States adopting it in conformity with Federal laws on this subject, was adopted yesterday by the commissioners. An act on trust receipts was adopted tentatively and put over another year, as was action on mechanic's lien laws and the Hoover conference act on high safety.

A movement for legislation to establish uniform hours of labor throughout the United States was started by former Representative Joseph F. O'Connell, Boston attorney, at the closing session.

Shortening of working days and weeks and standardizing them in all the States is the direct goal of the project, said Mr. O'Connell.

TONG PLOT SUSPECT IS HELD AS SLAYER

$1,000,000 FUND REPORTED

Prisoner Alleged to Have Been Employed for Murders Says He Was Told of Treasury.

One of three Chinese who were arrested with a Filipino last Thursday night in what the police believe was a plot to slay members of a rival tong was identified in the line-up at Police Headquarters yesterday as a man named in a first-degree murder indictment twenty months ago for the shooting of another Chinese in the warfare at the time between the On Leong Tong and the Hip Sing Tong.

He is Wong Young Dit, alias Wong Fook, who when arrested in his laundry at 323 East Twenty-sixth Street, gave his name as John Wong. Assistant District Attorney McGuire said that Dit was indicted in the Fall of 1928 for the killing of Wong Chun during a mah jong game in an apartment at 18 Eldridge Street on Oct. 14 of that year. Chun was one of six players in the game when Dit and another gunman, both said to be members of the On Leong Tong, entered, Mr. McGuire said, and opened fire. Another player, Wong Wai, was struck by a bullet and slightly wounded in the right arm.

Dit escaped at the time, but his identity was revealed to the authorities by some of the witnesses to the shooting and his indictment followed. A week after this shooting, which had been preceded by several killings by pistol and hatchet, the leaders of the two tongs signed a peace pact.

The alleged slayer was taken into custody last Thursday night with the Filipino, Lamberto Eullarian, and two other Chinese, when detectives seized Eullarian as he was emerging from the laundry, they alleged, with a bundle containing pistols and knives which the detectives suspected were to be used in the killing of rival tong members by white men in the employ of a new tong.

Eullarian was alleged to have admitted to Assistant District Attorney Burns that he had agreed to obtain the killers after George Chu, another of the Chinese arrested with him, had given him the names of two tongmen who were to be slain and had promised him $500 for each slaying. Chu, Eullarian also alleged, according to Mr. Burns, informed the Filipino that those behind the proposed slayings had a fund of $1,000,000 to carry on the warfare.

Assistant District Attorney McGuire, who presented the evidence on which a first-degree murder indictment in the Eldridge Street shooting was returned against Dit, said Dit admitted he was a member of the On Leong Tong. The prosecutor added that an immigration certificate found in Dit's possession on his arrest indicated he was admitted to this country at San Francisco in 1912 when he was 17 years old, under the name of Wong Zam Do. He described himself at the time as a student, and said he was the son of a merchant in China.

Dit was lodged in the Tombs, pending his arraignment for pleading on the murder indictment in General Sessions tomorrow morning. He is the sixth Chinese in the Tombs now awaiting trial on first-degree murder charges in connection with tong killings in recent years. Assistant District Attorney Brothers, who for years has conducted the prosecution of Chinese indicted as slayers, said it is the largest number to be lodged in the prison at one time in almost fifteen years.

JAIL DEATH CASE DROPPED.

Ridgefield Inquiry on Arrest of Salesman Unlikely.

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Aug. 16.—As far as can be learned, there will be no investigation in the Ridgefield Police Department because some of the men on the force thought Charles R. Carruth, a salesman of Hempstead, L. I., was intoxicated when found in the road near his automobile on Thursday night and locked him in a cell, only to find him dead yesterday morning.

George Darraugh, supervisor of police, insists that Carruth used abusive language when first encountered by the police and walked to the police wagon. Others on the force say Carruth was carried to the wagon and was unconscious when he reached Police Headquarters. Dr. Arthur Greenfield, acting county physician, says there were no marks of violence on Carruth's body and there was no trace of alcohol in his stomach.

The body was taken to Hempstead today for burial.

FAIL TO LOCATE ANASTASIA.

But Immigration Inspectors Expect to Reach Her in a Few Days.

Immigration authorities thus far have failed to get in touch with Mme. Anastasia Tchaikovsky, who claims to be the Grand Duchess Anastasia, a daughter of the late Czar Nicholas II of Russia, and to have survived the assassination which wiped out the other members of the imperial family in 1917. The immigration authorities are looking for her to inform her that she must apply for an extension of the permission under which she has resided in this country since 1928.

Commissioner Benjamin M. Day said yesterday that he had communicated with Mme. Tchaikovsky's attorney, Wilton Lloyd-Smith, and expected to learn Mme. Tchaikovsky's whereabouts when Mr. Lloyd-Smith returns from a week-end in the Adirondacks.

SCHWARTZ NAMES TERMS.

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 16 (Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—Maurice Schwartz, noted Jewish actor and former director of the Yiddish Art Theatre of New York, will not return to America unless an organization is founded in New York to finance a Yiddish art theatre for him. Mr. Schwartz, who has been acting here with success for two months, made the announcement yesterday.

He revealed that he had received offers of support for such a theatre from several Jewish centres in various parts of the world. From New York, he said, there came a cable signed by influential people in which he was asked to return.

"I answered my New York friends," he said, "that they must suggest a concrete plan whereby a Yiddish art theatre there would be able to maintain itself financially before I would consent to return."

Says Expenditures of $9,500,000 Should Be Charged to Back Dividends Due Stockholders.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16.—A vigorous attack upon expenditures by Mitten management, Inc., of more than $18,000,000 in funds of the Philadelphia Rapid Transit Company is contained in the latest report of Milo R. Maltbie, chairman of the New York Public Service Commission, on the Philadelphia Rapid Transit audit here. The report was transmitted today to City Controller Will B. Hadley.

Mr. Maltbie and his associates analyzed expenditures of more than $9,500,000 and said they should be charged directly to the back dividends due the stockholders. This amount includes $3,600,000 in fees to Mitten Management, Inc., during the five-year period ended June 30, 1928, which the auditors declared were illegal. They charged numerous violations of the 1907 agreement between the city and transit company.

The report pointed out that traffic, miscellaneous and general expenses totaling $24,000,000 were $8,600,000 in excess of "an estimated reasonable amount."

"It seems that careful and economical management would have been able to pay off the greater part of the cumulative 6 per cent dividend due to the stockholders within this five-year period," the report asserted.

If this cumulative back dividend had been paid off the city now would be receiving income from the transit company under the terms of the 1907 agreement, by which it is to get 50 per cent of the excess earnings when the Philadelphia Rapid Transit has paid off the back dividends, now totaling $15,971,496.

According to the report, the city will not receive its equal share of P. R. T. net earnings for twenty-one years, or approximately the date when the city may exercise a right to purchase the transit company upon payment of the par value of the capital stock outstanding.

BUDGET ATTACKS ILLS OF MASS EDUCATION

GRADE SCHOOLS GET MOST

Bulk of $5,000,000 Increase Over This Year to Be Spent to Aid Younger Pupils.

CAUTIOUS POLICY ADOPTED

Many Innovations to Be Tried Out on Small Scale in Hunt for Better Teaching Methods.

The city's record 1931 school budget estimate, which tops this year's allowance by nearly $5,000,000, makes it possible for officials to grapple with new and old problems in mass education, in addition to providing for the growth of a system whose buildings are reckoned by the thousands, teachers by the tens of thousands and whose pupil register reaches seven figures.

The Board of Education is asking the city to spend $141,296,636.81 on elementary and secondary public education during the next year, exclusive of retirement allowance, corporate stock funds, debt service, water, gas and electricity, and Health Department service.

The question around which the most significant increases in the budget estimate revolve is that of retardation, or backward pupils. The difficulty reappears in many different forms in the maze of budgetary items.

Size of Classes Chief Problem.

First it appears as the problem of the normal size of class. There is hardly any disagreement among educators that smaller classes are desirable and that individualized instruction is better than mass teaching, but the task of substantially reducing the average size of class is the most drastic and serious confronting the board and the city. Since more than $83,000,000, or well over half of the year's budget for 1931 will go for elementary and junior high school teachers' salaries, a deep cut in the size of classes would automatically raise that sum by many millions of dollars.

From that point of view, retardation of pupils is merely a question of teaching efficiency, but the problem is many-sided. There is the question of how much intelligence variations influence retardation. There is the more serious angle which links up truancy, and later delinquency, with retardation.

Another point of view brings the problem of the slow, retarded or ill-adjusted child to the threshhold of the home and the street surroundings. Economic conditions, social standing, family misfortunes — all have their separate bearing.

Were these different angles and conditions carefully assayed and the proper importance of each ascertained, it would be possible to provide for a definite attack on retardation. However, the battle is still in the reconnoitring stage, with educators trying to find the proper point of attack.

First comes a tilt in the direction of over-size classes. Provision is made for the appointment of 200 extra teachers from September, 1930, to December, 1931, to reduce the number of classes with excessive registers. Similar yearly appropriations have brought the average register for the entire city to 37.9 pupils in the regular grades.

That figure, 37.9, symbolizes the fundamental difficulty of the school system. Until 37.9 is substantially reduced and brought within the range of the actual capacities of the average school teacher there can hardly be hope that the retardation problem will be entirely clarified, let alone solved. But a drastic step in that field must wait upon the willingness of the Board of Estimate, and in the last analysis, of the New York taxpayer, to give careful attention to a condition which lies at the bottom of most of the difficulties of the educational system—and foot the bill.

23.3 Per Cent of Pupils Retarded.

In his last annual report, Superintendent William J. O'Shea included a table showing that in September, 1927, 43.7 per cent of the day elementary school register was of "normal age" in the normal grade, 33 per cent was "under age" or in advanced grades, while 23.3 were "over age," or, to a large extent, retarded. Of the latter, 9.2 per cent were less than a year "over age," a similar percentage was "over age" between one and two years, and nearly 5 per cent was "over age" two years and over.

In the junior high schools, where the average class is now 34, the budget estimate provides no change.

The board's appropriations for the combatting of retardation were made on the basis of recommendations in a report prepared by a special committee appointed to study the subject a year ago.

The committee reported that the "chief handicap to the formulation of even a tentative program aiming at a solution of maladjustment is the lack of knowledge which is based on more than subjective opinion."

Six Problems Outlined.

Surveys and studies—some of which have been made and others are in the planning stage—are directed toward finding answers to the following six "fundamental problems":

1. How valid, adequate and reliable are our current measures and standards?
2. To what extent do present con-

Pennsylvania Speeds Traffic By Cutting Highway Lights

HARRISBURG, Pa., Aug. 16 (AP).—To the many advantages offered by Pennsylvania highways will soon be added that of having an average of only one traffic signal for every thirty-four miles of highways.

The elimination of unnecessary signals began Aug. 1, and is expected to be completed within three months. It will reduce to about 400 the total of potential red lights which can momentarily stop a motorist making a theoretical tour of the State's 13,600 miles of roads.

The highway department has ordered all control lights removed from intersections at State highways with a peak load of less than 500 cars an hour and where fewer than 125 cars an hour approach the intersection from the side roads.

LAWYERS' REPORT ASSAILS FARM ACT

American Bar Association Will Hear Law Called Too Socialistic.

3,000 MEMBERS WILL ATTEND

Chief Justice Hughes, Wickersham and Foreign Notables Are on Program for Addresses.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Chicago will be host next week to more than 3,000 lawyers from all parts of the United States, Canada and European countries, who are coming here for the annual meeting of the American Bar Association.

While the main sessions will not begin until Wednesday, many conferences of delegates and sectional meetings are scheduled to begin Monday morning at the headquarters of the convention.

George W. Wickersham, chairman of President Hoover's Law Enforcement Commission, will address the delegates on Wednesday afternoon. The morning session that day will be devoted to business and committee reports, with an address of welcome by President Henry U. Sims of Birmingham, Ala. N. W. Rowell, K. C., of Toronto, will address the evening session.

Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes will address the delegates at the Civic Opera House on Thursday evening. There will be responses by representatives of the bar from England, France, Scotland, the Irish Free State and Canada. The sessions of that day will be devoted to committee reports, with a special address by Thomas D. Thatcher, Solicitor General of the United States.

The sessions will end on Friday with the annual dinner of the association. The speakers for that day have not been announced.

Lively Sessions Promised.

Reports which have been published for the benefit of the delegates carry interesting committee comment on such subjects as American citizenship, the Federal Farm Board act, criminal law, radio law and professional ethics, and promise many lively sessions.

The American Citizenship Committee, of which F. Dumont Smith is chairman, reports that its immediate and principal objective is the celebration of Constitution Week, beginning Sept. 14. In this connection the report says:

"One difficulty that we are having is the acrimonious controversy between the wets and drys. From points as widely separated as Texas, Central New York and Vermont, lawyers write us they are afraid to undertake such a celebration this year because the wets will consider it a dry move and the drys will consider it a wet move, that the celebration is put on either for or against the Eighteenth Amendment.

"The wets want us to bring them a wet celebration and the drys want us to bring them a dry celebration.

"Of course we are doing neither. This committee is neither wet nor dry and it has nothing to do with that controversy.

"So far as this controversy is concerned this committee quotes Mercutio, 'a plague o' both your houses.' "

Farm Relief Act Assailed.

In its report this committee assails the farm relief act as the "first step toward a Socialistic, Soviet Government," and says:

"It is not the purpose of this act to 'provide for the general welfare' of all the people, to lower the price of food or increase their comfort. The avowed purpose is to raise the price of bread to 90 per cent of the people in order that 10 per cent may have a larger profit in producing it.

"As lawyers we are not concerned with the economic fallacy of this experiment foredoomed to failure, a failure that is already imminent; but as sworn defenders of the Constitution, its expounders and teachers, we are profoundly concerned in preserving that form of government which was intended to protect the individual, his life, liberty and property, and nothing more; a government that, while affording these guarantees, has left free the marvelous initiative and ingenuity of the American people, producing an industrial progress that is the amazement of the world.

"This is but the first step. It is defended because growing wheat, they say, is a 'basic industry.' The production of coal is a basic industry, and the coal business is languishing. Following this example the government should engage in the coal business, appropriate as much money as necessary to buy all the surplus coal, store it until such time, if ever, that a coal board decided to unload it, and thus

PLAN 5-YEAR DRIVE FOR HEALTH TESTS

County Medical Groups Here Aim to Create New Course in the Profession's Schools.

$100,000 FOR CAMPAIGN

One Purpose Is to Save Family Doctor by Making Examinations Routine Practice.

A five-year program involving the expenditure of $100,000 to lay the foundation for the inclusion of the periodic health examination in the regular routine practice of medicine in this country was announced yesterday when the official report of the Greater New York Committee on Health Examination, appointed by the five county medical societies, was made public.

The report already has been adopted by the societies, which represent the entire organized medical profession of the metropolitan district. Among the objectives is a study of the medical school curricula to create a standard course for teaching the technique and value of the physical examination of persons suffering from incipient diseases. The committee also will work out a standard examination and educate physicians in the method and its importance.

Dr. Abraham J. Rongy, chairman of the committee, said the program would usher in a new period in American medicine. The change, he explained, would be from the present trend of emphasizing the importance and treatment of pathological conditions caused by disease to emphasizing the diagnosis of early unhealthy conditions to forestall disease.

Tells Trend of Medicine.

"The present trend in medical practice throughout the world," Dr. Rongy said, "is to treat disease which already has caused organic changes. To treat these conditions is a difficult matter and the doctor can really do little for the patient medically because organic changes are hard to handle. On the other hand, if we could teach doctors to catch disease in its early stages or, perhaps, even to detect altered physiological changes which will inevitably result in pathology by means of properly conducted periodic health examinations, the medical profession of America will make one of the great advances in our profession.

"Thus the doctor will become a social agent, a watchman against the onset of disease, as well as a physician who treats diseased conditions. He will be able to advise his patients how to adjust their lives in order to avoid lung, heart or kidney diseases which now take such a heavy economic as well as death toll in our nation today.

"We feel that as a result of our program we will be able to lay the basis for an extensive practice of the periodic health examination. Not only will it greatly help the medical profession serve the public, but it will also help preserve the family doctor now well on his way to oblivion because of specialism. With the periodic health examination accepted as a standard procedure by the public and the medical profession, the general practitioner will have a better chance of surviving the economic battle."

The report of this committee is an outgrowth of last year's campaign for periodic health examinations, carried on here for the first time in the history of American medicine, according to Dr. Rongy. In that campaign, the committee realized that the medical profession was not properly educated on how to conduct a health examination and its value to the patient.

The campaign which ended last Spring aroused a world-wide interest in the periodic health examination among social agencies and organized groups of medical men, according to Dr. Rongy. More than 400 requests were received by the committee from Italy, France, Belgium, England and other nations for information on how to conduct similar campaigns, he said. A canvas of 100 metropolitan doctors at the end of that campaign revealed that 85 per cent of them felt a longer campaign was necessary.

Outline of Five-Year Program.

The following is a brief outline of the five-year program as outlined by the committee in its official report:

"Special educational facilities and curricula will be established to teach physicians the proper application of health examination in private office practice. The aid of recognized medical institutions and teaching faculties will be enlisted.

"The health examination as a fundamental medical measure is too recent a development to have received the attention it deserves from many medical schools. Thus most of the older graduates of medical schools have never received any special training in the technique and practice of health examinations. The Greater New York committee on health examination will undertake to establish post-graduate courses for practicing physicians.

"The committee will concern itself with a review of the curricula of medical schools with the aim of seeing to it that preventive medicine, particularly the health examinations, is adequately presented to the undergraduate.

"An investigation will be made of the amount and character of the health examination training now being given in medical schools. From the data thus assembled it is proposed to formulate a course of study for undergraduates in the science and technique of health examinations, and advocate the adoption of such a course as a standard for medical colleges.

"The committee will make a thorough study of the existing health

Jersey Dry Chief Sees No Wrong in Saloon Ad, But Detectives Fail to Buy Drinks in Place

Special to The New York Times.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Aug. 16.—When asked what he thought of the advertisement in a local newspaper for the sale of a saloon in Carlstadt declared to be worth $25,000 a year to any one, Alexander P. MacPhee, Prohibition Administrator for New Jersey, said he failed to see "where that advertisement warrants any action on my part." He admitted it was funny, but continued:

"Just because the place is a saloon is no reason why we should get excited about it. Any place where beverages are dispensed might be termed a saloon, and it may be that only soft drinks are sold in this place. I do not say that this is the case, but it is possible."

The advertisement's assurance of "never any liquor difficulties" could be interpreted, Mr. MacPhee said, as meaning that the establishment was operating under protection, but it also was susceptible of interpretation that the place is operating according to law and that it, therefore, was not subject to official molestation.

"Anyway," he asserted, "that is purely a matter for the local authorities to look into. We have bigger and more important things to do."

The saloon in question is owned by Frederick J. Kuchenmeister of 491 Broad Avenue, Carlstadt, who wants to sell out so that he and his wife can return to Germany. All day yesterday and today detectives, newspaper men and others entered the place and tried to buy a drink of liquor, but soda was all they could get. The detectives from the office of Prosecutor E. O. West said the publicity had spoiled their chance to get the evidence necessary before they could make a raid, and the proprietor, familiarly known as "Pop," said the attention attractd by the advertisement evidently had spoiled all chances of a sale.

CITY PLANS TO FETE NOTABLES OF FIDAC

CONVENTION AT CAPITAL

European Nobility, Statesmen and Business Leaders to Be Guests of City for Two Days.

Representatives of European nobility, statecraft, letters, finance, business and professional life will be among the delegates who will arrive in New York, Sept. 15, aboard the Cunard liner Lancastria to attend, as guests of the American Legion, the congress of the Federation Interalliée des Anciens Combattants, at Washington, D. C., Sept. 18 to 21. This was announced yesterday by Major William F. Deegan, Tenement House Commissioner and chairman of the Mayor's special committee to welcome the allied veterans.

This city will be host to the men and women who will attend the congress and that of the Fidac Auxiliary, to be held at the same time, for the three days prior to its opening. Major Deegan and his committee will meet the delegation on the city yacht Macom and a round of official functions and fêtes will enliven their stay. During their visit they will be greeted by Mayor Walker at City Hall, who also will preside at a formal dinner in their honor on Sept. 17 at a place as yet unannounced.

Major Deegan, who has received a partial list of those who will arrive on the Lancastria, made public the names of more than 100. Heading the delegation will be Lieut. Col. Fred W. Abbot of England, president of Fidac, who will be accompanied by Mrs. Abbot.

Heraud in French Group.

Others among the officers and former officers of the federation will be Marcel Heraud, Under-Secretary of the Interior of France and former president of Fidac, and Mme. Heraud, former president of the Fidac Auxiliary; Baron Roger-Marie d'Avigneau of France, secretary-general of the organization, with Baroness d'Avigneau; Canzio Cimpincio, vice president of the Banco di Roma in Paris and treasurer of Fidac, from Italy, and Jean Thebaud, president of the General Association of War Wounded of France. M. Thebaud is director of the organization's European press section and publisher of the Revue des Vivants.

Two American officers of the Fidac, residents of Paris, who will attend the convention are H. W. Dunning, assistant secretary-general of the Fidac, who will be accompanied by Mrs. Dunning, and S. P. Bailey, assistant treasurer.

Princess Cantecuzene of Rumania, president of the Fidac Auxiliary, will head the women delegates. Other women to accompany her will be Lady Spencer-Churchill, former president and friend of the British royal family, and Mme. Jean Goy, secretary-general of the auxiliary.

Mme. Goy's husband, a member of the French Parliament and general secretary of the National Association of Wounded Officers of France, will be a member of the French delegation, which will be headed by Joseph Granier, Assistant Secretary of War of France and Fidac vice

RAISE TAR AND GAS RESIDUE

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—A plant for the conversion of mid-Continent bituminous coal into a high-grade anthracite on a large commercial scale, solving a problem upon which scientists have been working for years and promising a new era in fuel, with smokeless mid-Western cities, was opened here today by Thomas Hitchcock Jr., international polo player of New York, and C. E. Poyer, grand-nephew of Thomas A. Edison.

In converting bituminous coal to anthracite the process, developed after eight years of experimentation, is said to duplicate in a few hours that which in nature required millions of years. It is the long-sought low-temperature carbonization process, which, while it produces a high-grade, smokeless fuel for domestic use at a retail cost $3 a ton less than mined anthracite, yields in addition two to three times the quantity of tar produced by high temperature carbonization, and large quantities of gas of high heat value.

Low-temperature carbonization has been the modern philosopher's stone which chemists have been seeking for twenty years. Many ingenious processes have been devised and over one hundred different systems are being tried in Europe, particularly in England, France and Germany.

None of those systems is said to produce a domestic fuel resembling anthracite, the main object of the European methods being the production of a large yield of light tars and oils. The coal residue there is sold in the form of a soft, fast-burning coke, which, while marketable in Europe, does not answer the demand of domestic users in the United States, where a hard, compact, slow-burning fuel of little or no smoke and large heat value is demanded.

Is First Large-Scale Plant.

In the United States also there have been developed a number of low-temperature carbonization methods, but they have so far proved too costly to allow for manufacture on a commercial scale. The latest process, Mr. Hitchcock stated, is the first of its kind to make large-scale production possible.

"Our plant," he said, "has a capacity of 600 tons a day, but we plan to enlarge it in accordance with the demand. We have been working on our new process since 1922 and are at last satisfied that we have found what we have been seeking.

"We start with the bituminous product of Illinois and Indiana, which has a volatility of 36 per cent, and end with a high grade of an artificial form of anthracite in which the volatility has been reduced to 12 per cent. Out of every 2,000 pounds of raw material we get 1,400 pounds of char, to which we add a quantity of petroleum asphalt as a binder to form a pillow-shaped briquet. We also get a yield of twenty-four gal-

RUHR LABOR BATTLE OVER WAGES NEAR

Coal Miners to Meet This Week to Discuss Defense of the Present Schedules.

300,000 TO BE AFFECTED

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 16.—The cancellation of wage schedules by coal mine owners in the Ruhr Basin, which affects more than 300,000 workers, has created considerable excitement among the miners, and their leaders assert that any wage cuts are bound to cause a bitter battle. The miners will meet next week to discuss defensive measures.

It is significant that the Socialist, Christian and Nationalist organizations stand together. The Socialist Vorwärts in a special article bitterly attacks the operators, accusing them of not being sincere in declaring that their main purpose is to reduce the costs of a key industry which automatically would bring about a general reduction in prices and thereby help to revive German economy.

"Their sole idea is really to overcome the present sales crisis and to realize suficient funds to strengthen the pressure on other coal-exporting countries, primarily England and Poland," says the paper and asserts that "last year's annual reports, in spite of the extreme secrecy of the balance sheets, showed that the operators made huge profits and set aside considerable reserves which now should be mobilized to overcome an otherwise undeniable crisis."

The paper further declares that overhead expenses are much lower than a year ago because of a reduction in hauling costs by 10 cents a ton, a reduction in the premiums for social welfare and price cuts in various materials. Finally the paper calls attention to the fact that the miners are forced to lay off considerable time every month, that their income already is considerably reduced and that through enforced holidays the cost of production has been increased by 10 cents a ton.

The operators point out the seriousness of the situation, which is illustrated by the fact that sales for July reached the lowest level since the days preceding the English coal strike of 1923. Sales were 25 per cent less than in July of 1929. This was caused through the extraordinarily mild weather of last Winter, the reduction in freight transportation by ships and the general world economic crisis, in addition to English dumping in Germany and the world markets.

Contrary to the methods adopted in the metal industry, the operators insist that price reduction—which probably will amount to 25 cents a ton—can be undertaken only simultaneously with a general wage cut, while the press asserts that wholesale dealers will hesitate to place orders in view of the proposed price reduction.

SCOTSMEN HOPEFUL OF ROYAL BIRTH TODAY

GLAMIS, Scotland, Aug. 16 (AP).—Hundreds of highland folk in kilts and plaids attended the flower show at Airlie Castle today, and the hope was expressed on all sides that the expected child of the Duke and Duchess of York would be born tomorrow.

Many of them who live near by went home after the annual show, but those from some distance prayed that the great event would occur while they still were in town and free of work. The first public reference to the expected royal child was made today by J. R. Clynes, the Home Secretary, who is here to record the infant's birth officially.

"As is commonly known," he said as he opened the show in Airlie Castle, where he is staying, "I am here in relation to a pending event which is naturally attracting the attention not only of the United Kingdom but of the people of the British Empire as well."

Mr. Clynes extolled Scottish scenery, history and hospitality.

"It is small wonder," he remarked, "that the Scotsmen who govern England would want to govern their own country as well."

WOMAN SWIMS HELLESPONT

The Former Mercedes Gleitz of England Crosses It in Less Than 3 Hours

ISTANBUL, Turkey, Aug. 16 (AP).—Mrs. Patrick Carey, the former Mercedes Gleitz, London swimmer, today swam the Hellespont at its broadest section in 2 hours and 45 minutes.

The English girl, who, after failing seven times, crossed the English Channel in October, 1927, had to struggle against a very strong current. She went from the Asiatic to the European side and was given a rousing reception by the villagers of Tchanak on landing.

The swimmer was married on Aug. 9 and had come to Istanbul for her honeymoon with the idea of swimming the Hellespont. She will try to swim the Hellespont in the opposite direction tomorrow.

TO OPEN LIQUOR STORES.

Nova Scotia Will Start Control of Sales Tomorrow.

HALIFAX, N. S., Aug. 16 (Canadian Press).—The opening of three government liquor stores in Halifax and one in Dartmouth will start the system of government control in Nova Scotia on Monday. The opening of nineteen stores in other parts of the province, either singly or in small groups, will follow soon. This number will probably be increased within a short time.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DEAUVILLE, Aug. 16.—With the exception of André Citroen's $400,000 loss two years ago, the biggest loss recorded at the Deauville-Casino was the $300,000 misfortune last night of John Factor, a London diamond merchant, who was born in Hull, Quebec Province, Canada.

Mr. Factor was banking owing to the withdrawal of a Greek syndicate on account of a controversy with French Government officials in regard to taxes on gambling profits.

Against him were a dozen wealthy players, including James Hennessy, horse owner and distiller; Octave Homberg, French banker; Marks Lissberger of New York, John McKeon, Gustava Ross, wealthy Chilean; Captain Lionel Montagu, Viscount Furness and Dino Philipson of Florence, who is a member of Premier Mussolini's council.

COMMUNIST GROUP CHEERS CUBAN REDS

ONE SPEAKS AT SHIP'S RAIL

Seven Spanish Communists, deported from Cuba because of their activities in the island republic, arrived at noon yesterday in New York Harbor on the Royal Spanish Mail liner Cristobal Colon en route for Vigo, Spain.

Though they were under guard and were not permitted to land, their arrival was the signal for a demonstration at Pier 8, East River, by less than 100 New York Communists, who carried banners denouncing both Cuba and the United States and who listened to speeches in Spanish and English. One of the deportees, Pedro S. Hernandez, appeared at the ship's rail and harangued the crowd on the pier for several minutes until stopped by several of the ship's guards. There were only two policemen on duty during the demonstration. No arrests were made.

To Charles Mitchell, representative of the International Labor Defense, who boarded the ship when she docked, the deportees declared their deportation order was signed after they had been held in jail in Havana two months without trial. All the men, they added, were members of the Cuban Federation of Labor, which is said to be the extreme radical wing of the island labor movement. Mitchell gave money to one of the Spaniards, he said, when they informed him they were penniless.

Among the banners in English and Spanish, displayed by members of the Communist group, were several which read: "Down with Yankee Imperialism," "Solidarity With the Revolutionary Labor Movement in Cuba" and "Greetings to Comrades Deported From Cuba."

The deportation of the Spanish Communists was characterized yesterday in The Daily Worker, Communist organ here, the work of "the tyrant Machado and the bosses in Wall Street."

The seven Communists aboard the Cristobal Colon are the first to be shipped to Spain under the present Machado régime, but several boatloads of Chinese, suspected of Communist activity, have been deported from Cuba to China.

The International Labor Defense, through J. Louis Engdahl, executive secretary, announced yesterday that every possible defense will be furnished Mabel Husa and Aileen Holmes, directoresses of the Communist children's camp at Van Etten, near Elmira, who were arrested Tuesday on charges of desecrating the flag. A crowd of 2,000 from the Pennsylvania border and from Waverly, N. Y., threatened Friday to set fire to the camp, but were prevented by a sheriff, six deputies and a dozen State troopers. The children were terrified and virtually all left by trains for their homes in New York and Baltimore.

Mr. Engdahl stated that a defense attorney as well as a representative of his organization, both from Buffalo, have arrived at Elmira to defend the interests of Misses Husa and Holmes.

"It is significant," said Mr. Engdahl, "that the arrests are the only ones made as a result of the attack by a Ku Klux Klan mob of 2,000 persons on the workers' children's camp at Van Etten."

BANK OFFICER A SUICIDE.

FRANKLIN, Pa., Aug. 16 (AP).—Gaylord McCrady, 35, assistant cashier of the Lamberton National Bank, shot and killed himself while in conference with bank officials today.

Mr. McCrady was talking with Robert Lamberton, the cashier, when he asked the latter to get him a drink of water. Before Mr. Lamberton returned, Mr. McCrady pulled a revolver from his pocket and shot himself in the temple.

Mr. McCrady was in an automobile accident several weeks ago, suffering a fractured arm, and had not yet returned to work.

Bank officials had no statement to make tonight regarding the shooting.

CARIBBEAN POLICY STIRS FORUM DISPUTE

R. L. Boomer Predicts at Williamstown That Nations There Will Seek Ties With Us.

WALL STREET HAND DENIED

There Are Easier Fields, Banker Says — Intervention Benefits Latin Americans, He Adds.

OPPOSITE VIEW IS VOICED

W. E. Walling Asserts They Fear Domination of Banks—Extra-Territoriality Also Debated.

By LOUIS STARK.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Aug. 16.—Widely varying views on the economic and financial aspects of American intervention in the Caribbean area were expressed at the Institute of Politics today. American intervention in Latin America was justified on the ground both of practicality and idealism. On the other hand, intervention was criticized because it was seen as a means of increasing the economic dependence of the Latin American republics on the United States.

Denial that "Wall Street" had stimulated intervention by this nation in the affairs of the Caribbean nations was coupled with the prediction that just as small banks seek the protection of larger institutions with which to merge and consolidate, so would Haiti, Santo Domingo and the other Caribbean nations seek the protection of the United States in the future. It was argued that in the modern world there was no room for the artificial lines which break up Central America into five small, weak States.

President Hoover's policy, defined as "giving governmental support to economic intervention rather than to economic imperialism," was characterized as a group of "audacious principles" which were regarded with alarm by other nations, who feared that "big business" would be allowed to dominate American international policies.

The assertion that most of the inhabitants of nations "which have enjoyed the benefits of intervention" would favor its continuance was vigorously disputed.

The speakers at the general conference, which was under the direction of Henry Kittredge Norton, were W. W. Cumberland, former financial adviser to Haiti; Williams English Walling, publicist and editor of the foreign affairs section of the Democratic campaign book of 1928; Robert L. Boomer of E. H. Rollins & Sons, bankers, New York, and Herbert Feis, former Professor of Economics at the University of Cincinnati.

Era of Mergers Noted.

In his address Mr. Boomer pointed out that in recent years the world has passed through a great period of financial and business mergers and consolidations.

"This same tendency is already apparent in nations," he said. "I have just returned from an extended trip in Europe. The talk of the Continent today is the merger and consolidation of countries. The modern world has no room for the artificial lines which break up Central America into five little States, weak and unstable.

"There is no place for the problems of Haiti and Santo Domingo in a world of airplanes, wireless, cables and Zeppelins. My prophecy is this: That just as the small bank seeks the protection of the large one through merger and control, just so the economic necessities of small nations will make them willingly seek the protection of the strong nation in whose sphere they happen to be located, and our intervention in the Caribbean has on many occasions been invited. We will be invited even more insistently in the future.

"Our economic penetration has been invited in the past. It will be invited more insistently in the future and our financial and political dominance will increase in the Caribbean while we may well hesitate to assume the responsibilities which are thrust upon us."

Mr. Boomer maintained that in the broad sense American finance has not directly sought or stimulated intervention, that our investments have not materially increased as a direct result of intervention, and that without political disorder as the primary cause it was "inconceivable that any financial interests could induce our government to intervene in the Caribbean."

Points to Course in Cuba.

In support of his argument Mr. Boomer declared that American investments in Cuba came long after intervention, that American investments in Haiti and Nicaragua are today lower than in any other Latin-American country with the possible exception of Paraguay.

"Frankly, Wall Street is too busy dealing with larger and easier fields to waste much of its time or thought on small countries which are not stable," he continued. "One must acquire a real delusion of persecution to discover nefarious aggregations of American capital exerting hidden influences on our government to induce it to intervene in the Caribbean so that such capital may exploit innocent and downtrodden people incapable of defending themselves against the money steamrollers."

Intervention, according to Mr. Boomer, was practical and sentimental. On the sentimental side the United States wished to assist the Latin-American countries to become prosperous, while on the practical side she wished to maintain influence over the strategic points in the vicinity of the Panama Canal.

He believed these policies were amply justified and ventured to predict that if secret plebiscites were held "in those countries which have enjoyed the benefits of intervention," 90 per cent would be for continued intervention and the 10 per cent against would include the politicians "who view the national treasury as a source of personal profit."

Declares Our Help Is Needed.

"Our Caribbean friends ask and need our help," asserted Mr. Boomer. "Governments must be practical as well as idealistic. We should continue our policy of intervention because it is beneficial to the people involved and because it is advantageous to us."

Mr. Walling, who presented the Latin-American viewpoint, asserted that what the Caribbean nations feared most was American control of their banking systems, "just as we control the Cuban banking system." He asked why this country had not intervened during the last Cuban election, when, he asserted, voters had no choice but to vote the reelection of President Machado, whose candidacy appeared on the ballots of all three political parties. Mr. Walling answered his own question by the statement that it was to the advantage of American commercial and financial interests to continue Machado as President.

"Since the American big business interests put Machado into power and approve him, I venture to predict that the United States will make no offer to supervise the next Cuban elections as we supervised the elections in Nicaragua," he said.

It was Mr. Walling who criticized President Hoover's policy. He insisted that the world did not agree with Mr. Hoover's view that "the export of American capital leads to the increasing economic independence of the capital importing nations" and declared that, on the contrary, the nations believed that "vigorous defensive measures" were necessary to prevent American capital from turning other nations into economic colonies of American capital.

Report on Haiti Condemned.

Quoting President Hoover as saying that this country asked no more privileges for her corporations in foreign countries than corporations enjoy in the United States, Mr. Walling asserted that the President ignored two differences: "That in no other country does corporate health enjoy the same right and protection against government itself as in the United States, and that industries and business are more helpless in these countries in confronting gigantic American corporations and more in need of the protection of their governments."

Mr. Cumberland gave it as his opinion that intervention in Haiti had not been particularly lucrative from the viewpoint of trade, investments and loans. He believed that the two weeks' visit of the Forbes commission was akin to "a piece of impudence," as he felt it could not make a proper report after such a short visit.

Mr. Morton referred to American policy in the Caribbean as in the nature of "one of the most interesting experiments in the history of the world" involving the refusal of a great power to annex strategic islands but permitting them to become independent republics. This experiment would require constant study and frequent action to prevent failure and therefore, said Mr. Norton, such actions must take the form of interference or "intervention."

Extraterritoriality Debated.

Dr. Liang Yuen-li, secretary of the Chinese Legation in Washington, in a discussion of the question of extraterritoriality, at a round table on China, asserted that the abolition of extraterritoriality in China would mean better protection for foreigners. He explained that in order to accustom foreigners to Chinese judicial administration special courts would be established for foreigners and would be presided over by judges trained in Western jurisprudence.

Charles C. Batchelder, former Secretary of the Interior of the Philippines, felt that an immediate return of foreign concessions to Chinese rule would be fatal. If Shanghai were turned over to Chinese rules, he believed that no Chinese administration would be able to protect the city from plunder by bandits, Communists and irresponsible generals and the city would suffer the same fate as Changsha.

Lord Eustace Percy, president of the Board of Education during the Baldwin Administration, in his fifth lecture on "Freedom of the Seas," took issue with the view widely held in all countries that it was "better to let sleeping dogs lie" and to leave the contentious problems of belligerents and neutral rights to find their level with the help of tribunals of arbitration.

Fears Danger in Delay.

The danger of leaving judicial tribunals administer a law which is admittedly confused and uncertain was well illustrated in the Dred Scott decision, which made the Civil War inevitable, he said. The World Court or any other arbitration tribunals might well give way to the same temptation in international affairs with the same disastrous results.

After saying that there was a moral issue underlying the confusion of international law about the freedom of the sea "quite as serious as the moral issue about slavery," Lord Percy observed that the "task of fundamentally reconstructing international law on this subject is therefore one which the peoples of the world must undertake without delay." He opposed a "full dress international conference" on the subject and suggested that a first step be taken by placing the matter in the hands of a small research body appointed by the United States and the British Commonwealth of Nations. These experts would lay the ground-work for a reconciliation of divergent "political views and conflicting political interests."

MAKES DRAMATICS A GAME.

Director Says This Method Stirs Interest of Children.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Mrs. E. E. Hollington, in charge of dramatic instruction under the Westchester County Recreation Commission in playgrounds throughout the county, declared today that her work depended for its success largely on making a game of dramatics. In this way the imagination of the child could more easily be caught, she said. The story-telling method is used to arouse the child's interest in the play.

The first play put on in Westchester playgrounds under her direction was presented at Port Chester on Thursday afternoon. She was assisted in the direction of the children by Miss Doris Russell, Port Chester playground director.

SLAYS HOUSEKEEPER WITH GARDEN HOOK

New Jersey Man Then Walks Two Miles to Telephone State Police and Surrenders.

LAYS HIS ACT TO RAGE

Prisoner Says Woman Returned to His Home at Night and Quarreled With Him.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Aug. 16.—Edward Mendel, 54 years old, of the Browntown Road, New Brunswick Gardens 2, is in the Middlesex County jail here facing a charge of murder for killing his former housekeeper, Mrs. Rose Muttner, 48, whom he struck over the head with an underbrush hook last night, according to his alleged confession. Mendel, who said he struck the woman while in a rage, notified New Jersey troopers of his act.

The slaying occurred in Mendel's home, three miles below Old Bridge, and followed a quarrel. Mendel told the police that he had been awakened by the flickering of electric lights and found Mrs. Muttner, who left his employ two weeks ago, in his kitchen. She accused him, Mendel said, of having other persons in the house and accompanied him in a search of the place. The quarrel was continued later in the kitchen, he said.

Mendel said he became enraged at her accusations and struck her three times over the head with the hook. Then he told the State Troopers that he walked to the village of Old Bridge and telephoned the State police at Keyport.

Sergeant J. W. McCormick and Trooper Lewis Patter rushed to Old Bridge and accompanied Mendel to his home, where they found the woman on the kitchen floor. The body was taken to St. Peter's Hospital, New Brunswick.

Mendel was brought to New Brunswick, and Detective Charles Collins of South River, a member of the office of Prosecutor John E. Toolan, was notified. Recorder Louis Shepherd of North Brunswick Township committed Mendel to the county jailer without bail on a charge of murder.

Two postcards from Mrs. Edward W. Hall of New Brunswick, acquitted defendant in the Hall-Mills murder mystery, were found in Mrs. Muttner's personal effects and led police to believe that the woman formerly was a servant in the Hall household. The cards were mailed from Europe, but the postmark was illegible. Mrs. Hall is now touring Europe, but these cards are believed to be several years old.

Mrs. Harry Steiner of 101 West Fifty-second Street, New York City, a sister of Mrs. Muttner, was notified of the death.

NEBRASKA RESERVOIRS TO COMBAT DROUGHTS

State Plans Works Impounding 2,000,000 Acre-Feet of Water on Two Rivers Alone.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 16.—When the next big drought comes in this Western country, Nebraska is going to be prepared for it. The 1930 shortage of water has cost the State about $75,000,000 in its corn crop alone, to say nothing of the loss on other grain crops. And with just a small part of that money the State could pretty well foritify itself against any such tremendous loss in the future.

Nebraska is going to construct a huge system of great reservoirs which will gather its waste waters in the Winter and Spring, thus preventing floods in the early season, and use that water later in the Summer, thus alleviating droughts. Works along the Platte River and Plum Creek alone will impound 2,000,000 acre-feet of water for irrigation purposes in Summer.

The State's plans, already far advanced, will be completed about Nov. 15 for submission to the next session of the Legislature. These plans, ordered by the last Legislature, have been in the making for the past eighteen months under direction of the University of Nebraska, with Professor Clark E. Mickey, hydraulic engineer, in immediate charge.

State and Federal engineers are making surveys of the Platte and Republican River basins and water supply, the latter with the aim of taking part in a general flood prevention plan.

A series of reservoirs along the irrigation ditches now in use east of the junction of the South Platte and North Platte Rivers will be recommended by the State engineers near Gothenburg, Cozad and Lexington, in Western Nebraska, on Birdwood, Plum and Buffalo Creeks and in Rotten Valley.

An idea of the immensity of the reservoir system can be gained from the dimensions of the Plum Creek reservoir which will be five and one-half miles long and two and one-half miles wide, and will hold 300,000 acre-feet of water. Above this lake and on the same stream will be constructed a small feeder reservoir which will hold 200,000 acre-feet of water. The smaller reservoir will alternately be empty and full, but the larger one will be kept full the year round, if possible.

By experimentation, the Board of Engineers has determined that 2,225,000 acre-feet a year of water flows through the Platte at the town of North Platte. About three-fourths of this water passes in the Spring when water is not needed for agriculture and is not only wasted but goes further down stream and helps to make the big floods in the Missouri and Mississippi.

The board will recommend that 1,500,000 acre-feet of this water be stored in huge water reservoirs, on ditches already operating, for release when most needed in the dry months. Two-thirds of the annual flow of the Platte river will be accounted for at this point.

Named Librarian at Rollins College.

WINTER PARK, Fla., Aug. 16.—Miss Alice Hollister Lerch, for thirteen years a member of the staff of the New York Library, has been appointed librarian at Rollins College. Her work in New York has been chiefly bibliographical, in connection with the rarest of Americana, fifteen-century books and books added to the Spencer collection. Miss Lerch is a native of Washington.

ditions show a lack of school and pupil adjustment?

3. What are the factors that operate to cause pupil maladjustment?

4. How adequate and how effective are present organization and practice in preventing, detecting or remedying maladjustment?

5. How have other school systems attacked the problems, and what in their experience may be applied to local conditions?

6. What modification of present administration, &c., and what additional provision shall be made to meet the needs of the present situation?

On the basis of findings already ascertained, the committee urged successfully the launching of an elaborate case study of 1,000 retarded and non-retarded children, in order to determine:

(a) The distribution of pupils of both types in terms of educational history, status and achievement, physical and mental development and status, behavior or personality difficulties, home, environment, &c.

(b) The relative degree to which these factors related to the child are causes of non-promotion and retardation.

The study would employ group and individual measurements and tests of the various elements involved.

Another proposal carried by the committee involves a test study of pupil intelligence. The report said:

"Low mentality is frequently assigned as a primary cause of lack of school progress. It would be desirable to determine the level of intelligence of pupils throughout the city. Practical considerations, however, require a sampling process, that is:

(a) An intelligence survey limited to one school year throughout a major portion of the city, or,

(b) A survey including several school grades for a more limited area; or,

(c) All grades in a relatively limited number of schools.

"This study would yield data showing:

(1) The relation between retardation and intelligence;

(2) The variability in pupil ability;

(3) The per cent of pupils that should be excluded from regular classes;

(4) The need for special classes and special provisions;

(5) The adequacy of present grading and classification."

Thirdly, on the committee's recommendation, the board approved the assignment of five specially qualified members of the staff to train instructors to give mental tests.

Two of the committee's requests, involving the assignment of additional substitutes—one for every twenty-five classes—for special coaching and appropriations, "so that no class need have a register of fifty or more, and so that the number of classes with a register of forty-five to fifty be drastically reduced," the board was unable to meet.

In regard to this request, the board's finance committee declared: "If twenty-five of the most skillful teachers are assigned to individual instruction in the twenty schools where pupils will be under observation and survey, that is as far as we should go until the Bureau of Reference, Research and Statistics (which is in charge of the approved studies referred to above) is able to show that such method of overcoming retardation is effective to an extent that will justify the very high cost."

Also on the ground that the several studies should clear the way for a definite solution, the board refused to add substantially to the visiting teachers' staff, a step suggested by the special committee.

Behavior Clinic Provided.

The outstanding concrete step for the adjustment of cases of problem children is embodied in the establishment of the first behavior clinic. The board approved an appropriation of $100,000 for the hiring of a specially trained staff and the purchase of the necessary equipment.

The board's action, long urged by President George J. Ryan in special addresses to his fellow-commissioners, was based in part on the retardation committee's findings, as summarized in the report accompanying the budget estimate. This report said:

"The special committee on retardation reports that psychological and psychiatric examining bodies or clinics are being developed in practically every large city; that the clinic acts as an initial examining body for problem cases, and its findings and diagnoses are referred for remedial treatment to various school agencies, such as the regular school, the special school, the ungraded department, the visiting teachers, the attendance bureau or a social welfare institution; that in the judgment of the special committee there is great need for an extension of clinical services beyond that now maintained by the department of ungraded classes; that, while working in close cooperation with that clinic whenever problems are similar, the scope of the new clinic should also include the large number of problem children who are not ungraded and should serve all departments of the school system; that the fundamental consideration in the establishment of the new clinic is that accurate diagnosis must precede remedial treatment, and that when a line of treatment is indicated, one or more of the existing agencies can be called upon to provide the service; that the establishment of such a clinic is urged by the New York State Crime Commission."

Following conferences with experts in the field, the board decided to establish a clinic consisting of the following two units:

(a) A main clinic, centrally located, for diagnosis and curative work with acute and chronic cases which arise from day to day, usually among older pupils.

(b) A branch clinic, movable from district to district, for diagnosis and preventive work among younger children when signs of maladjustment first appear; also that provision should be made for follow-up work with the more difficult children (especially of those who are employed) until they reach the age of 17.

On the result of these studies and the experience of the clinic the solution of the retardation problem largely depends. It has not been decided yet where the clinic will be located. Should the experiment prove successful, there is little doubt that additional clinics will be established.

High School Staffs Increased.

Passing from elementary and junior high school to other divisions of the school system, the budgetary estimate shows that the largest single increase in 1931 expenditures—$1,578,489.59—will be for the enlargement of the day secondary school staff. High school registrations have grown at a faster rate than that of any other regular branch of the system. Provision was made for 505 new regular positions and seventy-five openings for teachers in training. Classes remain at twenty-eight pupils, on the average.

Training schools for teachers, whose register has been decreasing recently, are allowed to continue at their present staff level, with the proviso that vacated positions are to be dropped during 1931, so the organization will automatically shrink.

Of the thirty-eight industrial high school positions created by the board and provided for in the estimate all but two will go to the new Brooklyn Industrial High School for Girls, which is expected to open this Fall.

Compulsory continuation schools gain thirty-nine teachers, the additions—as in the case of most other staff expansions—to be distributed over a period of three semesters, beginning next month.

The evening elementary organization is left at its present level, forty-nine schools, two Summer units and thirty pupils for each teacher (based on attendance records). The attendance basis of computation has been much fought by organizations interested in adult education. The pupil load is said to be far too heavy, especially since attendance—instead of register—is taken as the basis.

Aid for Students Asked.

A reform in other fields affecting adult education was urged by a special committee who studied the problem. The committee advocated the opening of thirty additional classes for day training and seventy additional classes for evening work for the foreign-born adults and illiterates. Other requests were made by the committee as follows:

Classes having registers of 15-20 should be permitted for total illiterates.

One all-day school centrally located for illiterates should be provided. The school should have a teacher in charge and about twenty teachers.

Provision should be made for recuiting the illiterate. As experience has shown that success in recruiting always results from a personal interview, it is recommended that provision be made for the employment of fifty substitute teachers who will interview the persons discovered by the 1930 census to be illiterate and tell them where the necessary instruction may be obtained.

More adequate provision should be made for supplying material for proper instruction in day and evening adult classes.

The total estimated cost of these proposals was $148,111.60. Declaring that it was confronted with the paramount duty to provide for the needs of children of school age, the board, at the suggestion of its finance committee, explained its inability to accept the program, saying:

"The Board of Education now maintains 231 day classes and 616 evening classes in English and Citizenship. It is claimed that these classes do not meet the needs of the absolute or partial adult illiterates, whom, it is said, the census of 1930 will reveal to be over 250,000 in number. Whatever the actual number may be, and however desirable it may be to overcome adult illiteracy, your committee is confronted with the paramount necessity of providing large additional sums for children of school age, as appears repeatedly in this report, and it is financially impossible to add, in one year, such a sum as is here requested for instruction of adults.

"With 841 classes already available during the day and evening, the thought arises as to whether, within that sizable number of opportunities, the directors and others in charge may not be able to create more favorable conditions for instruction of adult illiterates, and the Superintendent of Schools is requested to cause a study to be made of such possibilities.

"In order that there may be some provision for experimental work along the lines recommended by the special committee, your committee has allowed ten positions for the establishment of classes for illiterates, and requests the Superintendent of Schools to see that these experimental classes are organized under conditions most favorable to instruction for adult illiterates.

"Your committee also recommends that advantage be taken of the continuous school census enumeration to aid in locating and recruiting adult illiterates for purposes of instruction, rather than to employ a new staff of substitute teachers for such purpose."

As in the case of the evening elementary schools, no provision was made for the reduction of pupil load—not at twenty-eight pupils, based on attendance—of the evening high schools.

Vacation Schools Increased.

Vacation schools were increased by two—one evening and one day high school.

Smaller children again took precedence when the board came to consider, and finally reject, proposals for the extension of community and recreation centres, regular and Summer units. The required sum was more than $70,000.

"The board's committee recognizes the great civic value of this work, and it believes that the school buildings should be opened widely for such groups and for other community or general public purposes," the budget report said. "It is a question, however, as to how far the Board of Education should go in paying the cost of recreational activities for young people who have passed school age.

"The costs of the required branches of instruction have grown enormously, and there is but little money available for recreational activities, no matter how worthy. The committee has not, in this budget estimate, recommended the granting of the application to pay janitorial compensation for community centres organized by local groups for the further reason that it was considered of more importance to carry on the increased provision for playground facilities for smaller children who otherwise would be subject to the danger of street play."

Vacation playgrounds were increased by thirty centres—on a four-year expansion program, and evening playgrounds by fifteen. After-school athletic centres receive 3,500 additional sessions.

No specific appropriation was made for the solution of the unemployment problem among licensed elementary school teachers, but a report of the board's committee pointed out that temporary and permanent vacancies expected to occur during the coming year will considerably reduce the waiting list and possibly bring it down to normal.

Many requests for vocational training—including one for a provision for six junior vocational schools, three for boys and three for girls—were urged upon the board. The budget memorandum on this subject declared.

"It is said that there are many pupils in the sixth, seventh and eighth years who cannot profit by the usual academic type of instruction; that they are usually overage; that they do not fit into any regular course of study; that some fall into habits of truancy and eventually delinquency; that if they go to high school they usually do not succeed and drop out, and then have to seek employment without proper training.

"There is a widespread opinion that this is one of the chief factors in causing retardation, but we are without facts sufficiently definite to support a comprehensive and coordinated program. Therefore, your committee has been constrained to disallow most of the requests, pending the result of the studies projected by the special committee on retardation, and the experience and information to be gained through the operation of the behavior clinic."

Extra Expenses Listed.

To get a complete picture of the financial implications of the school system, one must add to the special and general school funds other items to which the city subscribes to for public education as follows:

	Budget Estimate, 1931.
I. For trust funds of the Board of Education Retirement System	*$451,073.06
II. Memorandum Item: For the redemption of special revenue bonds and tax notes authorized and anticipated to be authorized redeemable out of the tax levy for 1931	1,380,689.26
III. Memorandum Item: For the acquisition of sites and the enlarging and construction of school buildings, corporate stock	39,000,000.00
IV. During the State school year, Aug. 1, 1929, to July 31, 1930, the Controller of the city has certified that expenditures for debt service for the schools for such period aggregated	22,638,707.51
V. Annual instalments, paid by the city into the trust funds of the Teachers' Retirement System, and the administration expenses of such system, certified by the Controller of the city to aggregate	7,616,632.85
VI. Expenditures by the Department of Health for nurse, doctor, clinic service, &c., for school children certified by the Commissioner of Health to aggregate	824,157.14
VII. Expenditures by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity for gas, electricity, power and lamps for the schools, certified by the Commissioner of the department to aggregate	1,420,300.88

FORMER WAR FLIER KILLED.

Col. Harry Abbott Dies in Fall on Coast in Plane He Designed.

Abbott, who had a notable war record, was a veteran parachute jumper. He once was an instructor of aviation in the army of the late Sun Yat-sen, Chinese republican leader. More recently he was an instructor at Mills Field, San Francisco.

DEVISE MUSIC TESTS TO CLASSIFY PUPILS

TONAL MEMORY IS GAUGED

Discrimination of Quality, Intensity and Melodic Taste of Students Is Also Appraised.

Music tests capable of determining with a high degree of accuracy the potentialities of untrained students contemplating musical careers were predicted by the music department of Teachers College, Columbia University, yesterday. Professor Peter W. Dykema, head of the department, who has been working for several years with Professor Jacob Kwalwasser of Syracuse University in the unexplored field of the psychology of music, announced that a series of music tests, corresponding to intelligence tests in the field of general education, had been evolved.

"Although no definite correlation has been established between intelligence and musical ability, we believe that by means of the specialized examinations we have developed, musical education can be limited to those who possess an innate capacity for it," he said. "Just as college authorities grade entering freshmen on the basis of their capabilities as shown by psychological examinations, so will we be able to classify prospective music students."

The examination is recorded on five double-faced, ten-inch phonograph records. The first record tests "tonal memory," the power to retain and compare musical patterns of various lengths. It consists of twenty-five pairs of patterns beginning with four tones and ending with nine tones. From a single hearing of the paired patterns the student is asked to judge whether the pair consists of the same or different halves.

The degree of "quality discrimination" is then measured. This tests the power of a student to detect sameness or difference in quality of tone as produced by different orchestral instruments. A musical pattern is played in the same pitch by two instruments. Two clarinets are played together and then a clarinet and a trombone. Other combinations used are viola and violin, trumpet and French horn, 'cello and viola, and trumpet and English horn. The student must indicate whether the pattern is being played by two identical instruments or by similar ones.

"Intensity discrimination," the capacity to perceive variations in the loudness or strength of tones and chords, is measured by the third record. There are fifteen pairs of tones, followed by fifteen pairs of chords, in the test. All are sounded without difference in pitch or length. Only the intensity is varied and the subject is asked to indicate whether the second sound is stronger or weaker than the first. Although this would seem to be the simplest part of the examination, it is really the most difficult, it was said. The difference between the paired tones is often only five vibrations a second.

Another division of the examination is called "tonal movement." This measures the ability of a student to judge the tendency of a succession of tones to proceed to a point of rest. Thirty patterns of four tones each are employed. Each pattern is an incomplete melodic idea requiring another tone to complete it. The pupil must indicate whether the omitted note should be up or down in the scale.

The last part of the test is known as "melodic taste discrimination." It consists of ten groups of two short melodies. In each group the first phrases of the two melodies are identical while the second phrases are different. The student is asked to judge which of the two second phrases makes the better concluding phrase. The decision is not based on the intrinsic merit of the second phrase, but upon its congruity and compatability as a proper termination of the first phrase.

CAMPBELL'S NAMING BIG STEP IN SCHOOLS

IN CITY EMPLOY SINCE 1903

Educator Rose Rapidly After He Became Teacher in Brooklyn—Has Formed Policies.

The Board of Education's creation of the post of Deputy Superintendent of Schools at its last meeting marked the first important addition to the higher educational administrative personnel in many years. The step made provision for a smooth and continuous administration of the school system in such contingencies as the resignation, disability or absence of the Superintendent of Schools.

Immediately upon creating the office, the board unanimously appointed Dr. Harold G. Campbell as the first to hold the deputyship. Dr. Campbell's official post, which he retains in addition to the new duty, is that of associate superintendent in charge of secondary schools.

The change was merely a formal one to Dr. Campbell, whom Superintendent William J. O'Shea has invariably assigned to act in his place for the last seven years. During these years Dr. Campbell has become more and more influential in the conduct of the schools. He has taken an active part in the formulation of educational policies and in the direction of the schools.

In creating the new post, the board approved a by-law removing the superintendent's power to appoint an associate superintendent to act in his absence, as that practice, if continued, might cause a conflict with the deputy superintendent's functions.

Dr. Campbell's association with the schools of the city began in 1903 when, at the age of 19, he was appointed as a teacher in Public School 25, Brooklyn. Seven years later he began to teach history in Eastern District High School, Brooklyn, and in 1916 he became an administrative assistant of the school.

From there the promotions were rapid. In 1920 he was made principal of the Flushing High School, and four years later he reached the highest rank in the school system with the exception of the superintendency. He was appointed as an associate superintendent of schools and a member of the Board of Superintendents.

Dr. Campbell holds degrees from the Maxwell Training School, Brooklyn Polytechnic, New York University and an LL. D. from Fordham University. He has taught in all branches of the evening schools and has lectured on history and pedagogy at City College, Adelphi, Hunter College and the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. For a time he was president of the Brooklyn Teachers' Association.

Dr. Campbell is married and lives at 257 Madison Avenue, Flushing, L. I.

RUTGERS ADDS MORE BOOKS

Gifts to University Include Early Records of New Jersey.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Aug. 16.—Rutgers University added 12,179 bound books to its library during the past year, making the total of 176,332 catalogued books now in possession of the university, it was revealed today by Librarian George A. Osborn in his report to Dr. John M. Thomas.

Mr. Osborn announced that the additions included many hundreds of gifts. Among these are an autograph of the late President James A. Garfield, presented by his son, Irvin McD. Garfield; important records and documents of the Neilson family from about 1750 to the present time, including manuscript Revolutionary records of Colonel James Neilson and valuable records of the establishment of the first steamboat lines of New Jersey, of the Delaware and Raritan Canal, of the Pennsylvania Railroad and of early industries of New Jersey, the gift of James Neilson '66; an Indian deed of 1741 from John P. Wall, and the dramatic works of Alexandre Dumas, in French, from Percival Wilde.

SEMINARY TO INDUCT DR. ZWEMER OCT. 1

Princeton Theological School Will Install Noted Cleric in Chair of Missions.

EXPERT ON MOSLEM CREEDS

Authority on Mohammedanism Spent 30 Years in Arabia and Egypt—Lectured at Oxford.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Princeton Theological Seminary will induct the Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, internationally known as "the modern apostle to the Moslem world," into the Chair of Christian Missions and the History of Religion on Oct. 1, it was announced today at the seminary. Dr. Zwemer spent more than thirty years in Egypt and Arabia, has written a score of books on Mohammedanism and is the editor of The Moslem World and the founder of the American Christian Literature Society for Moslems.

He will be the first new professor installed since the reorganization of the seminary last year.

The formal exercises will be held during the opening of the seminary's 119th year. Dr. Zwemer will make the principal address and the charge to the new professor will be delivered by Dr. Robert E. Speer of New York City, secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Dr. William L. McEwan of Pittsburgh, president of the board of trustees of the seminary, will preside. The Rev. Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, president of the seminary, will also take part.

The new professor will carry on the long tradition of the seminary as a missionary training school. Five hundred and fifty graduates of the school have engaged in mission work out of a total of graduates of 7,000.

Courses covering varied fields of mission work and involving the study of the ethnic religions, their relations to Christianity, the history of Christianity in the mission field, conditions in Asia, Africa and other missionary territories and related subjects are included in the curriculum plans. Visiting lecturers will be brought to Princeton to discuss missionary problems.

Dr. Zwemer was born in Michigan and received his early schooling at Hope College, from which he was graduated in 1887. He studied at the New Brunswick Seminary and was ordained in 1890. He has received honorary degrees from several institutions, and in recognition of his services in Islamic countries was made a Fellow of the Royal Geographic Society of London. He was the organizer and chairman of the Mohammedan Missionary Conference at Cairo in 1906 and has been active in conferences at Jerusalem and Lausanne. He is a former lecturer at Oxford University, England.

MAPS WORLD STUDY FOR PRINCETON MEN

SCHOLARSHIPS PLANNED

History, Politics, Economics and Languages Grouped—Lectures by Notables on Program.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 16.—The program of the new School of Public and International Affairs of Princeton University was discussed here today by Dewitt Clinton Poole, chairman of the advisory board of the school and a member of its administrative committee. Mr. Poole has come to Princeton after twenty years in the United States Foreign Service.

"The new School of Public and International Affairs," Mr. Poole said, "will provide training for those who contemplate careers in the foreign service of the government or on the foreign side of banking, business, the press or the law. But it is intended that the school shall serve also the future workers in the domestic field who may never leave the United States except on a holiday journey. In our new situation they, too, need to be citizens of the world in knowledge and outlook. No individual and no business is any longer free from the interplay of world forces."

Coordinates Four Departments.

The new school's program will represent a coordination of four departments, history, politics, economics and modern languages, with special courses in geography and public speaking. Two other features in the school's program will be the bringing to Princeton of distinguished Americans and foreigners to lecture and conduct round table conferences on the practical affairs of the world and the encouragement of foreign study, scholarships for which will be provided to deserving students needing financial assistance.

Mr. Poole, in discussing the need for the new school said:

"With revolutionary speed we have left behind the good old days when some native intelligence and a courageous disposition were about all that was needed to win success in the midst of riotous plenty. How is it now? At home, less natural but much more liquid wealth; the development of huge quasi-public corporations almost rivaling government and a concurrent enlargement of operations of government itself. In foreign relations emergence into a commanding position among the nations and the unfolding of business and politics into world dimensions. These changes have descended upon us with disconcerting suddenness, demanding a wider intellectual grasp on the part of our citizens and a leadership that is not only intelligent and honest but educated.

"In this posture of our public and international affairs it has been natural that Princeton should take a decisive step. Historically dedicated to the nation's service, it was almost inevitable that she should accept leadership in meeting new requirements. Now Princeton has disclosed by the establishment of the new school an intention to co-ordinate and enlarge the facilities of study in the public and international field, in pursuance of a definite objective."

Will Open This Fall.

With the completion of Dickinson Hall final arrangements are being made for the opening of the new school this Fall. Dickinson Hall, which was named after the first president of Princeton and after one of the first classroom buildings on the campus which was destroyed in 1920, will be the new home of the school, housing the Departments of History, Politics and Economics. McCosh Hall, in which the Department of Modern Languages will be located, adjoins Dickinson Hall and, with the university chapel, the three buildings form three sides of a quadrangle.

Dickinson Hall was designed by Charles Z. Klauder, who has done many Princeton buildings. It is a two-story structure with a semi-basement containing fifty-nine rooms and offices, including three large lecture halls. It is connected with the university chapel by the Rothschild Memorial Archway.

Five scholarships for foreign study already are being offered by the new school. The five Princetonians, who are in Europe this Summer taking work at approved universities and living in native homes, are Josiah Macy Jr. of Morristown, N. J., and Richard H. Demuth of New York City, who are studying in Germany, and Howard C. Anderson Jr. of Gloucester, N. J.; George W. Duffus Jr. of Pittsburgh and Curtis F. Heath of Trenton, N. J., who are studying in France.

DEPLORES WORD IGNORANCE

Scientists and "mere writers of literature" alike are altogether too unfamiliar with the sources and consequently the etymological meanings, of the words which they commonly employ, in the opinion of Dr. John E. Barss of the Loomis School, who has been teaching at the Columbia University Summer session and who issued a statement yesterday on the importance of a knowledge of the classics.

Dr. Barss's chief complaint is that many legitimate English words are, in his opinion, illegitimate, because their meaning is not the precise translation of the roots from which they are compounded. He speaks disparagingly of the "great genius for manufacturing new words" exhibited by the English language.

"Most of the vocabulary of science is jargon to one unacquainted with Latin and still more so to one ignorant of Greek," he asserts, "and by a strange perversity the student of science is least likely to have the key to the terminology of his own profession while the mere writer of literature is fooled by a mocking spirit which leads him jauntily to employ 'inchoate' in the same sense of 'chaotic,' say 'predicate' when he means 'predict,' or to fall into the pit into which a novelist of no mean power once descended when she spoke of the loafers drowsing in the warm comfort of a village square in Summer as 'hibernating in the sun.'"

Steals $350, Mostly in Quarters.

Special to The New York Times.

GARWOOD, N. J., Aug. 16.—A burglar, who climbed a ladder early today to enter the bedroom of Robert Sendwich, proprietor of the Garwood House here, escaped with $350, most of which was in quarters. The money was taken from a sideboard in which it had been hidden in a canvas bag. The burglar escaped down the ladder after he relocked the sideboard.

Baltimore Cat Prognosticator Fails to Forecast More Rain

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 16.—Napoleon, Baltimore's feline weather prognosticator, seems to see no relief from the drought, which still afflicts Maryland. For three days the cat has taken no reclining position to indicate that rain was in the offing. A week ago the cat predicted showers when he took a nap, lying on his stomach with his head between his paws.

The doings of Napoleon have attracted considerable attention. Each day the cat's mistress receives an unidentified telephone message, asking if Napoleon has slept with his head between his paws.

WILL SIFT HATCH AFFAIRS.

Bureau of Securities Estimates Investors Lost $100,000.

Deputy Attorney General James J. Hamilton of the State Bureau of Securities announced yesterday that books seized in the raid of the brokerage offices of E. W. Hatch & Co., Inc., 122 East Forty-second Street, would be examined tomorrow by accountants to determine how much money had been lost by investors who paid for stock and failed to receive certificates.

Complaints made to the State Bureau of Securities, according to Mr. Hamilton, indicate that the loss to investors may exceed $100,000. The offices of the company were raided by State troopers and Deputy Attorney General David Wohl late Friday night, as the result of the complaint of Mrs. Bertha B. Zabbell of Lake Mahopac, N. J.

Mr. Hamilton said that tomorrow or Tuesday he expected to question Miss G. S. Sheadle, secretary-treasurer of the company, and other officers.

Bureau of Securities attachés said that the questioning of David Lamar, whose activities as a broker has figured in the newspapers, would be postponed until later in the week.

WILL BE HOST TO REDSHIRTS

Nyack Has State Volunteer Firemen's Convention This Week.

Special to The New York Times.

NYACK, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Arrangements are nearing completion here under a committee of 200 citizens, headed by Judge A. S. Tompkins of the Appellate Division, for the entertainment next week of the New York State Volunteer Firemen's Association.

The village is limited for lodging houses for the 1,500 delegates and members of the association, and private homes within a radius of three miles are being listed to provide sleeping quarters.

The convention will open Tuesday morning with the presentation of a gilded key to the village three feet long. The presentation and welcoming addresses will be delivered by Judge Tompkins and Senator Copeland. The key will be received by Clinton D. Jass, president of the association.

The convention will end Friday with a parade of 100 fire companies, thirty-six bands and ten women's auxiliaries.

CAR CLUE IN MORELLO CASE

Police Get License Number of Auto Used by Harlem Slayers.

The body of Peter Morello, known as the Clutch in Harlem's Little Italy, lay unclaimed at the Bellevue Morgue yesterday while detectives continued their search for the two gunmen who invaded his office at 352 East 116th Street Friday afternoon and shot him to death, together with Joseph Perrano. Gaspar Pollaro, a third victim, was seriously wounded.

The most tangible clue obtained by the police after questioning several witnesses was the license number of the automobile in which the men made their escape. An alarm was broadcast for the car, but up to last evening it had not been found. An autopsy by Assistant Chief Medical Examiner Thomas A. Gonzales established that the slayers used three different pistols.

Belgian delegates to the auxiliary congress will include Comtesse de Kerchove, related to the royal family, and Baronne de Broqueville.

MARYLAND COUPLE SLAIN.

Found on Couch With Pistol Under Husband's Hand.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 16.—Lying side by side on a couch, Frank Bartscher and his wife, Hattie, were found dead today in their home at Westport. There was a bullet wound in the woman's temple and one in her husband's throat and a pistol lay on the floor underneath his open hand.

Dr. Louis Demly, who conducts a drug store across the street, said he saw Bartscher about 11 A. M. yesterday and spoke to him, but received no response.

Last night, Dr. Dimly said, a telephone call for Bartscher from New York was received at the drug store. The clerk sent to call Bartscher to the phone reported there was no one at home. This information was passed to the person calling. "Thanks," the voice replied, "that's all I wanted to know."

PLAN TO ENTERTAIN EUROPEAN LAWYERS

PARTY TO VIEW WEST POINT

Will Arrive Here Aug. 30 on Way Back From Chicago Sessions—Columbia to Confer Degrees.

Plans for the entertainment in New York of more than 200 members of the English and French bars, who are coming to this country to attend the American Bar Association meeting in Chicago were made public yesterday by Wilson M. Powell, treasurer of the entertainment committee. The group, which will be here from Aug. 30 to Sept. 4, on the way back from Chicago, includes many of the most prominent members of the profession in their respective countries.

The local program will include receptions, both by the city and by many organizations and individuals, and trips of various kinds, including one to West Point, where a special dress parade of the cadets has been arranged.

The British members of the party will include Sir William Allen Jowitt, Attorney General of England; the Right Hon. Sir John Simon, who headed the recent commission on India; Sir Frank Boyd Merriam, Solicitor General in the last Conservative Government; the Hon. Mr. Justices Talbot, Wright, Maugham and MacNaughten; Sir Roger Gregory, president of the Law Society, and the Right Hon. Viscount Dunedin.

The local committee of seventy-six members, headed by Charles H. Strong, with John W. Davis as honorary chairman, include many of the most prominent lawyers in the city. Some of them are Secretary of State Stimson, Governor Roosevelt, Senator Robert F. Wagner, Dwight Morrow, Henry W. Taft, Charles C. Burlingham, Frederic R. Coudert, James W. Gerard, Martin Conboy, Paul D. Cravath, William Nelson Cromwell, Nathan L. Miller, Charles S. Whitman and Morgan J. O'Brien.

For Sunday, Aug. 31, the visitors' first day in the city, no functions have been arranged except attendance at services at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Temple Emanu-El and the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

The West Point excursion will occupy the following day, and on Tuesday there will be a tour of lower Manhattan, a reception by the Association of the Bar of the city of New York, and a dinner at the Plaza, given by six of the local bar associations. There also will be a dinner for the women guests in the party that evening, given by Mrs. John S. Sheppard and the members of the Ladies Committee.

A tour of upper Manhattan, a garden party at the Roslyn estate of Clarence H. Mackay, a luncheon given by Stephen Baker and a trip to Coney Island will occupy the visitors' time Wednesday. The reception by the city, presentation of honorary degrees by Columbia University, a luncheon by the State Chamber of Commerce, and a reception by the New York County Lawyers Association will fill the concluding day.

"The oil business, so the oil men say, is a losing proposition. Let the government go into the oil business. If one group of mendicants can come to the doors of Congress and with a threat of votes loot the treasury, other groups will follow the example.

"Close to a million, the Federation of Labor says, have been thrown out of employment, not by hard times but by the vast and increasing mechanization of industry by which one man now does the work of ten or twenty a generation ago. Are they not entitled to the same consideration as the wheat farmer? The next step then in this Russianization is a dole to the unemployed."

The criminal law section of the association will meet on Tuesday. A feature will be an address by Calvin Goddard, director of the Scientific Criminal Detection Laboratory affiliated with Northwestern University.

John Landesco, research director of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, will speak on "Gang Life and Organized Crime in Chicago." There will be reports from committees on psychiatric jurisprudence, the medico-legal committee and the committee on "lawless enforcement of law."

The judicial section, meeting the same day, will hear from Justice Frederic R. De Young of the Illinois Supreme Court, Frederick E. Crane of the Court of Appeals of New York and Evans A. Evans of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago.

Public utility law, mineral laws and radio laws have important parts in the sessions. The report of the standing committee on communications, of which L. G. Caldwell is chairman, is an exhaustive analysis and presentation of the development of radio law and discusses all the pending measures on this subject. The problem of international communications, the committee states, is one which bids fair soon to overshadow all others both in importance and complexity.

The report of the standing committee on international law deals with the London naval conference. On this it states:

"The outstanding accomplishment of the London naval conference was that some sort of limit was set to the size of all categories of the greatest three naval powers. Neither the tonnage figure accepted, nor the treaty figures, if built up to, will satisfy public opinion; but that would appear to be comparatively unimportant, provided some limit be prescribed which recognizes a limit to competition in naval construction."

Plans Memorial to Dr. A. B. Baker.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Plans for a memorial to the late Dr. Alfred B. Baker, who for more than sixty years was connected with Trinity Episcopal Parish here as rector and rector-emeritus, have been announced by the Rev. Robert Williams, present rector. The memorial will be a door in the north transept, to be built with funds received from friends of the clergyman. The architect is Dr. Ralph Adams Cram. Dr. Baker died in 1928 at the age of

NITRATE AGREEMENT HELD AID TO FARMER

Dr. J. G. Lipman Says Berlin Compact on Prices Will Stabilize the Industry.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Aug. 16.—The international price-fixing agreement signed in Berlin last week by the German Synthetic Nitrate Syndicate and the Chilean natural nitrate interests will benefit agriculture by stabilizing the oversupplied nitrate market, according to Dr. J. G. Lipman, director of the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station here, who returned this week from Chile.

Competition between European and Chilean interests, he said, was not only causing tremendous losses to the industries concerned, but threatened to prove harmful to agriculture. Farmers have been and are now obtaining nitrate fertilizers at low prices because of the competition, Dr. Lipman declared, but eventually would have to pay more as surviving companies, after competition had been eliminated, were forced to raise prices to recover their losses.

"The interests of agriculture in this competition between rival nitrate industries," he continued, "lies in seeing them receive a reasonable profit for their products. This objective is likely to be attained through the agreement reached in Berlin, which provides for reducing nitrate production to the actual consumption requirements. The agreement further provides that, in so far as possible, each industry shall supply its domestic market."

The nitrate interests, he said, should realize that their prosperity depends to no small extent upon that of agriculture, as farmers who are doing well buy the most fertilizer. To this end, he suggested, the combination of industries could assist agriculture by investigating the most efficient and profitable ways in which the farmer can use nitrogen.

During his visit in Chile Dr. Lipman was made an honorary faculty member of the University of Chile's College of Agriculture and received an honorary degree from the Catholic University of Santiago.

URGES CHECK PAYMENT OF PHILADELPHIA LABOR

Reserve Bank Governor Suggests Conference to Cut Down Payroll Robberies.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 17.—George W. Norris, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank here, has called for constructive action on the National Crime Commission's report on payroll robberies, urging a joint conference of large employers, union labor and the banks, for the purpose of adopting payment of wages by check in Philadelphia.

"A condition which involves the reported loss of nineteen persons killed, thirty-two injured and over $1,000,000 stolen in a limited period of time, is certainly one that calls for remedial measures," he said.

"The report of the special committee of the National Crime Commission, which for over a year has been studying the subject of payroll robberies, is of too much interest and importance to be simply noted, commented upon and then forgotten," he continued. "It should result in radical changes of method, at least in the large cities.

"This loss of life and property has not been due to police neglect or inefficiency. The police departments of all of the larger cities are quite willing to provide escorts for payrolls, but this cannot meet the situation."

Mr. Norris is also president of the Association of Justices of the Criminal Courts.

FAIR AIDS CHILD RESORT.

Nets Over $600 for Mountain Home at Tannersville.

Special to The New York Times.

HAINES FALLS, N. Y., Aug. 16.—More than $600 was raised for the support of the North Mountain Home at Tannersville at the annual fair held this week at Squirrel Inn. The North Mountain Home is a children's fresh air resort on the hills above Tannersville in the heart of the Catskill Mountains, which provides a healthful Summer recreation for several hundred children from the upper east side of New York City.

Mrs. Pim and Miss Worster, proprietors of Squirrel Inn, have given the use of the hotel for the fair for several years. An interesting feature this season was a concert by the Sittig trio of New York.

Members of the committee and those active in the work of the fair included Miss Evelyn Merrihew, Mrs. De Lancey Ellis, Miss May Buckman, Miss Nelson, Miss Tegimeyer, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Thompson, Mrs. Scully, Miss Gregory, Miss Helen Moorehead, Miss Neisel, Miss Gopsill, Miss Minor, Mrs. Wharton, Miss Sanford, Mrs. Dalrymple, Miss Sadler and Miss Herald.

60 HERE TO STUDY STYLE.

A two-week course in stylist training will open tomorrow at the Home Making Centre of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs at Grand Central Palace, the center announced yesterday. Sixty stylists from twenty-two States, including instructors in newly established college clothing departments, have enrolled for the course.

Mrs. Mary Brooks Picken, an authority on fashion and dressmaking, will direct the course, lecturing the first week on the technical side of the subject and its relation to merchandise. She will detail the history of fashions and divulge the sources of current styles.

Lecturers for the second week of the course, which will close Thursday afternoon, Aug. 28, will include Anna Steese Richardson, woman editor; Mlle. Marceline D'Alroy, international stylist; Mme. Helene Volka, fabric and fashion counsel of the centre; Max Herzberg, art director; Mrs. Crete Hutchinson, fashion editor; A. G. Jarvis, and Mrs. Margaret Story, author and lecturer.

Sues Over New Brunswick Post.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 16.—Charging that he was removed from office solely for political reasons, George W. Pressler has challenged the appointment by State Motor Vehicle Commissioner Hoffman of William Gonch of New Brunswick as registration agent in that city to succeed Mr. Pressler. Hoffman has been ordered by Chief Justice Gummere to show cause on Sept. 6 why a writ should not be granted for a review of his action.

WILL VIEW ECLIPSE FROM VOLCANIC ISLE

NAVY MEN ARE IN PARTY

Commander Keppler Heads Group—Eleven Enlisted Men Will Aid Seismic Conditions to Be Noted.

HONOLULU, Aug. 16 (AP).—Noted scientists will view the total eclipse of the sun on Oct. 21 in the Tonga Archipelago, which is approximately Lat. 20 degrees S. and Long. 170 degrees W.

An expedition of scientists from the navy, educational institutions and observatories in the United States left San Francisco on July 31 and is due in Tutuila, Samoa, on Tuesday.

One of the party is Dr. Thomas A. Jaggar Jr. of the Kilauea Volcano Observatory, island of Hawaii, who will study the volcanic and seismic conditions on Niuafou Island, where the eclipse observations will be made.

Niuafou is a small volcanic island 300 miles southwest of Tutuila. Primitive conditions prevail and only two white men and 110 natives live there.

About thirty craters are on the island. Many of them have recently been active, and a major eruption occurred in June, 1929, which destroyed one of the two villages. There are no good anchorages and only one precarious landing place.

Commander C. H. J. Keppler will be in administrative charge. He headed the navy's expedition which observed the solar eclipse of May 9, 1929, from the vicinity of Iloilo, the Philippines.

Lieutenant H. C. Kellers, Naval Medical Corps, who was a member of the navy eclipse expedition at Sumatra in 1926 and also of the 1929 expedition, will be medical officer and in charge of meteorological observations. At the request of the Smithsonian Institution he will collect specimens of the islands of fauna and flora.

Professor S. A. Mitchell, director of the Leander McCormick Observatory at the University of Virginia, will conduct spectographic work. Kempton Adams is his assistant.

Professor R. W. Marriott, Swarthmore College astronomer, will carry out coronal photography with a 63-foot camera, and make observations to test the Einstein theory. His assistant is Dr. Weld Arnold of the American Geographical Society.

J. J. Johnson of the California Institute of Technology will make photometric observations. B. P. Sharpless, junior astronomer at the Naval Observatory, will do coronal photography with a 15-foot camera and other smaller ones.

In addition to this scientific personnel, eleven men of the Navy and Marine Corps will assist in construction work and in taking observations. They include a rigger, an optical repair and instrument man, a carpenter to construct large cameras, an expert photographer, two general assistants, two radio operators, two cooks and an interpreter.

About 115 boxes and cases of scientific instruments and equipment have been shipped to Tutuila, besides camp equipage and food supplies sufficient for twenty men for sixty days and about eight hundred broad feet of lumber for the construction of various cameras. The largest will have a focal length of 65 feet and include a photographic developing room.

MULROONEY TRANSFERS 3 POLICE CAPTAINS

Also Promotes Three Lieutenants to Acting Captains "for Good of the Department."

Police Commissioner Mulrooney announced yesterday the transfer of three captains and the elevation of three lieutenants to acting captaincies. He said the transfers were made "for the good of the department.

Those transferred are:

Captain THOMAS F. WYNNE from the Atlantic Avenue to the Empire Boulevard station in Brooklyn.

Captain PATRICK McGUIRK from the Empire Boulevard station to the Rar Rockaway station.

Lieutenant THOMAS F. DUFFY of the Alexander Avenue station made acting captain in command of the Bronx Park station, replacing Captain Fred Hinners, who has just retired, after twenty-five years on the force.

Lieutenant GEORGE HEITZMAN of the Sixth Avenue station, Brooklyn, made acting captain in command of Traffic E, an old vacancy.

Lieutenant MICHAEL A. WALL of the Third Division made acting captain to take Captain Brady's place.

Promotion to full captaincies has been held up by the pending mandamus proceedings against Lieutenant Daniel Prendergast, who, under the veteran's preference law, outranks those who received acting captaincies. The proceedings were brought in the Supreme Court on behalf of officers whose standings on the promotion lists would be lowered by Prendergast's promotion.

SEES COOKING ART SAFE.

Camp Executive Finds Girls Proficient in Preparing Foods.

Cookery is in no danger of becoming a lost art among the American housewives as long as the Camp Fire Girls continue to exhibit their present interest in the outdoor preparation of foods, according to the belief expressed yesterday by Miss Dorothy Doremus, executive of the Camp Fire Girls' Camps of Greater New York.

Even the children in the camp for girls between 6 and 12, Miss Doremus said, cook their own food on camping trips, and all the girls regard these trips as one of the most enjoyable features of camp life and the cookery as one of the most exciting incidents in the trips. Furthermore, she added, the cooking is no effete process of heating and opening a can, but includes the proper building of fires and the preparation of raw foodstuffs into finished dishes, in some cases without the aid of any utensils.

The older girls, she said, can even roast a chicken without the aid of implements. They wrap it in leaves, place it on a hot stove, surround it with vegetables, cover the whole with more leaves, and after a suitable interval the chicken is ready for eating. Chicken roasted in this fashion is only one of a long list of favorite dishes.

12 'Brunswicks' are Invited To New Brunswick's Fete

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Aug. 16.—Lieutenant Governor W. F. Todd of the Province of New Brunswick, Canada, and the Mayors of the twelve "Brunswicks" in the United States have been invited to be present at the celebration of the 250th anniversary of this city's settlement and the 200th anniversary of the granting of the charter by George II. The celebration will be held here from Oct. 12 to 15.

MAGNETIC STORMS LAID TO RING OF ELECTRICITY

Current Encircles Earth From Time to Time Is Theory of English Physicists.

LONDON, Aug. 16 (By Science Service).—A ring of electric current, surrounding the earth in much the same way as the more material rings of Saturn surround that planet, is seen as the cause of the magnetic storms that sometimes occur upsetting cable and telegraphic communication. This suggestion is made by two English physicists, Dr. S. Chapman and V. C. A. Ferraro of the Imperial College of Science here. They have announced their theory through the pages of Nature.

This current occurs, according to their theory, in a stream of neutral ionized particles shot out from the sun. As the stream advances toward the earth the magnetism of that body sets up electric currents in the stream in its forward surface. The stream then proceeds to envelop the earth, possibly approaching as close as the upper layers of the atmosphere. The flow of the current in a westerly direction in the part of this stream around the earth then sets up magnetic effects that produce the main phenomena of a magnetic storm.

The authors of the theory point out that one of its distinctive features is that the current is close to the earth, only a few times its radius away. After the current ring is formed, they say, it could persist for several days, even after the flow of particles from the sun has ceased.

As magnetic storms are frequently associated with sun spots, it would seem therefore that these particles are shot out of the spots, though this is not mentioned in the announcement of the theory. It is suggested, however, that the stream approaches the earth with a speed of about 1,000 kilometers (620 miles) a second. This would take it across the 92,900,000 miles separating the sun and the earth in about forty hours.

GOVERNOR TO REVIEW GUARD BRIGADE TODAY

Three Major Generals Likely to Visit Camp Smith With Roosevelt for Ceremony.

Special to The New York Times.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y., Aug. 16.—With Major Gen. William N. Haskell, Commanding General of the New York National Guard, the week-end guest of Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt today at his home at Hyde Park, arrangements were announced for a review by the Governor tomorrow of the Ninety-third Infantry Brigade in Camp Smith, Peekskill, at which three Major Generals are likely to be present.

Major Gen. Franklin Ward of Albany, the State Adjutant General, is expected to accompany the Governor and Major Gen. Haskell when the Governor reviews the brigade. Major Gen. William J. Everson, chief of the Militia Bureau of the United States Army, also will be present.

The Ninety-third Brigade, under Brig. Gen. John J. Phelan, includes the Fourteenth Infantry of Brooklyn, under Colonel Frederick Baldwin, and the 165th Regiment of Manhattan, under Colonel William J. Costigan.

One company of each regiment, in full dress uniform, will meet the Governor as he enters camp Sunday afternoon and act as a guard of honor. Thousands of visitors from Manhattan and Brooklyn are expected.

Colonel William R. Wright, division chief of staff, who is in charge of Camp Smith in the absence of Major Gen. Haskell, announced today that Major Gen. Everson is to fly by airplane from the Pennsylvania National Guard camp at Mount Gretna, Pa., to Poughkeepsie and will be taken in Major Gen. Haskell's car from the airdrome there to Camp Smith. An airplane of the Twenty-seventh Division, N. Y. N. G. Air Service, will take him to Sea Gate, L. I., on Monday.

NEWARK BANK SALE SET.

Court Orders Building, Furniture and Fixtures to Go on Sept. 22.

Sale of the building, furniture and fixtures of the Port Newark National Bank, 176 South Street, Newark, which was closed Aug. 8 following a receivership suit, will take place Sept. 22, it was announced in Newark yesterday. An order authorizing the sale was signed by Federal Judge Runyon at his home in Plainfield, N. J., Friday night on application of Arthur T. Vanderbilt, counsel for Theodore Ackerson, equity receiver for the bank.

The land and building are valued at $133,096 and the furniture and fixtures at $36,734 by the receiver. Creditors have been notified that claims against the bank must be filed not later than Sept. 13.

KILLED BY FALLING WEIGHT.

Elevator Repair Man Released Wrong Cable by Mistake.

Ludwick Polasky, 28 years old, whose address is given as 159th Street between Melrose and Courtlandt Avenue, the Bronx, and who was employed as an elevator repair man by Henry Heide, real estate dealer at 313 Hudson Street, was struck and killed yesterday by an elevator counterweight which fell from the fifth floor of a building at 181 Franklin Street.

Polasky was greasing the cables of the elevator. Intending to release the lift cable he released the counterweight cable by mistake and the weights came down on his head.

LISTS RISING VALUES OF FEDERAL WORKS

Hoover Economic Committee Reports 11-Year Total of $4,043,351,000.

AT $352,436,000 LAST YEAR

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—A total of $3,280,065,000 was expended during the years 1919 to 1929, inclusive, for new construction by the various Federal departments, mainly the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture, the Navy Department and the Engineers and Quartermasters Corps of the army, according to a survey issued today by the committee on recent economic changes of the President's conference on unemployment. Repairs and maintenance during the same period amounted to $763,286,000, giving a total for all Federal construction of $4,043,351,000.

President Hoover suggested the survey for the purpose of appraising public works construction as a factor in maintaining the economic balance of the country. It was prepared by Dr. Leo Wolman under the auspices of the National Bureau of Economic Research. The survey covered all phases of construction by States, cities and other governmental units as well as the Federal Government.

Expenditures on new construction by the Federal Government were less last year than they were in 1919, 1920, 1921 and 1922, due to the high level of construction for military and naval equipment after the close of the war.

For new construction more than $716,000,000 was spent in 1919, of which nearly $459,000,000 was expended by the Navy Department. In the next year, the total expenditures had fallen to about $350,000,000, the 1920 naval item being nearly $264,000,000. In 1921, total expenditures declined slightly to nearly $347,000,000, naval construction accounting for about $209,500,000. In 1922, when naval construction expenditures dropped to about $129,600,000, the total Federal expenditure was a little more than $276,500,000.

Advance Again Last Year.

New Federal construction in 1929 cost $266,149,422, repairs and maintenance aggregating $86,287,000, making a total expenditure of $352,436,000, the highest level since 1921.

In 1928, Federal expenditures for new construction, plus repairs and maintenance, amounted to $303,668,000; in 1927, to $289,698,000; in 1926, to $274,462,000; in 1925, to $309,120,000; in 1924, to $310,442,000; in 1923, to $247,545,000; in 1922, to $325,409,000; in 1921, to $420,596,000; in 1920, to $421,846,000, and in 1919, to $788,129,000.

Inland waterways, irrigation and flood control projects in the West, maintenance of channels at ocean ports, river and harbor improvements, grants for State highway construction, the ten-year building program for postoffices and other Federal buildings, the Lighthouse Service, the Coast Guard, floating and land equipment of the navy, army posts, road systems in national parks and forests, veterans' hospitals, penitentiaries, fish cultural stations, custom houses, immigration stations, Indian schools, the Alaskan Railway, the Panama Canal and the public works of the District of Columbia.

1929 Construction Items.

Of the total of $266,149,422 spent last year for new construction, $59,094,884 was expended by the navy, $56,754,535 by the Army Engineers Corps, which does the civilian work of the War Department; $12,787,518 by the Quartermasters Corps, and $91,504,912 by the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture.

Road building, the report stated, has become the leading item of expenditure by the Federal Government. From a level of only $3,752,750 spent by the Department of Agriculture on Federal highways in 1919, the outlays on that account rose to an average of more than $90,000,000 in the last five years.

Expenditures for roads controlled by the department, and excluding amounts spent by the Engineers Corps, were $23,538,932 in 1920, $60,942,866 in 1921, $93,075,012 in 1922, $79,447,720 in 1923, $100,786,460 in 1924, $102,052,823 in 1925, $89,194,519 in 1926, $90,002,525 in 1927 and $89,368,770 in 1928. A total of $101,212,185 was spent by the Federal Government on new road construction in 1929.

New building and ground improvement costs in 1929 were $45,537,094; drainage, irrigation, water power, dams, &c., $29,726,305; floating equipment, $50,221,130; waterways and waterfront improvements, $31,294,407; miscellaneous, $8,158,301.

For the whole 1919-1929 period new buildings and ground improvement costs were $656,603,167; roads, $881,971,767; drainage, irrigation, power, dams, &c., $285,266,381; floating equipment, $1,119,431,730; waterways and waterfront improvements, $295,025,527; miscellaneous, $41,766,155.

SAVES GIRL FROM SURF.

U. of P. Oarsman Then Takes Her to Dance and They Win Prize.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Aug. 16.—Augustus Goetz, 26 years old, of 854 Fourth Street, Ocean City, a member of the University of Pennsylvania varsity crew a few years ago, and Miss Mary Troup, 24, of Norman Towers, Harrisburg, daughter of a wealthy piano manufacturer and prominent socially, won a dance contest at the Ambassador Hotel last night two hours after Goetz had rescued the girl from drowning in the surf at Ocean City.

Miss Troup was bathing in the ocean at the foot of Wesley Avenue after the life guards had gone off duty. She was being carried out by the undertow when Goetz, who was passing near by, jumped into the surf fully clothed and rescued her. Later the couple went to the beachfront hotel here and carried off the first prize.

AMERICANS THRONG TO AIX-LES-BAINS

SOME ARE RESIDENTS THERE

By MAY BIRKHEAD.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 16.—Among the celebrated resorts attracting Americans this year Aix-les-Bains is having its share. New Yorkers include Mr. and Mrs. George Blumenthal, who spent July in Vichy. They are now taking the Aix cure and they plan to visit their Riviera château before returning to Paris. Edwin S. Schenck has just returned to Paris after a month's Aix cure; also Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Schroeder and Mr. and Mrs. Henshaw Metcalfe.

Mrs. E. H. G. Slater of Washington, Newport and Palm Beach is spending the Summer at Aix and then is going to London to visit her sister, Lady Herbert, whose son recently married the Earl of Ilchester's daughter.

Several of our countrymen have permanent residences in the region around Aix and Lake le Bourget. Across the lake in the mountains westward of Aix lies the Château de Peyrieu. It is a remarkable estate, known to many persons on both sides of the Atlantic. Here Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Hoff indulge their passion for hospitality and charity works. This property bore as early as the year 1149 the name of Hugues de Peyrieu.

When the Hoffs acquired it twenty years ago, only the pre-Renaissance donjon was substantially intact. The rest of the structure required extensive restoration, but the whole effect, both inside and out, was so carefully studied that today the restored and enlarged edifice is a beautiful and harmonious structure with an extraordinary cachet, and seen from any angle, near, or far, the château dominating the immense mountain region is an impressive sight.

Another American Resident.

Another American who is a permanent resident of this region is Mrs. Hamilton Paine, who married twenty years ago the Duc de Choiseul and after a divorce bought an eleventh century priory near Lake le Bourget, took a deep interest in its restoration and now is spending the Summer there with her daughter.

The marriage of Marshall Field to the widow of Captain Dudley Coats, scheduled to take place this week, recalls numerous connections of the bride's family on both sides of the Atlantic and the Channel. Captain Coats was descended from a well-known family of thread manufacturers at Paisley, Scotland. He died three years ago. His father, Stuart Auchincloss Coats 2d, was a baronet, the son of Sir James Coats, who in the year 1857 married Sarah Auchincloss of New York.

Captain Coats's brother, James, in 1917 became the husband of Lady Amy Gordon Lennox, the daughter of the Duke of Richmond. Two of Captain Coats's uncles married American women, Alfred Coats taking as his bride Elizabeth Barnewall of Flushing, L. I., and James Coats marrying Anne Caswell of Providence. His aunt, Anne Coats, wedded several years ago the late George Gordon King of Newport, and still another aunt, Alice Coats, married in 1885 Theodore Frelinghuysen of New Jersey.

Mother Was London Hostess.

Mrs. Dudley Coats was Audrey James, daughter of the late William Dodge James of Sussex, England, and New Brunswick, Canada. Her mother was long an outstanding hostess in London, where for many years she was known as the beautiful Mrs. Willy James and belonged to a small group of clever women who were close friends of King Edward. In fact, this monarch was sponsor at the baptism of the first son of the James family, who is Mrs. Dudley Coats's elder brother.

The future Mrs. Marshall Field has been much identified with a small social group particularly intimate with the Prince of Wales. She is noted for her dainty pulchritude, being slender, with fine skin, dark hair, bluish gray eyes and chic dress. Several times she has visited America with the polo and racing set, which includes Lord and Lady Mountbatten, and latterly, like other women of the British aristocracy, she has opened a smart shop in London.

She is a frequent visitor to Paris and to such well-known French resorts as Deauville, Le Touquet and Cannes, where her mother had a villa and entertained extensively, and her father-in-law, Sir Stuart Coats, also had a villa. She is much in evidence in the yachting crowds at Cowes, Deauville and the Riviera.

READY FOR ARCTIC FLIGHT.

W. E. Gilbert Reaches Arctic for Trip With Burwash to Magnetic Pole

EDMONTON, Alberta, Aug. 16 (Canadian Press).—Reaching Fort Hearne, civilization's lonely outpost at the mouth of the Coppermine River and on the shores of the Arctic, W. E. Gilbert, Western Canada Airways flier, will be joined by Major L. T. Burwash, the explorer, and before the end of the week they will be flying toward the north magnetic pole.

After being delayed for days, the Bay Chimo, Hudson's Bay Company vessel, reached the Coppermine Thursday with its load of supplies for the expedition, and was met by Major Burwash, who has been in the arctic regions for some time.

From the Coppermine the vessel will proceed along the route to be followed by the fliers, establishing supply depots at strategic points. The journey of the fliers will require at least three weeks.

Communication with the members of the expedition is being maintained via short-wave radio from Winnipeg, the fliers carrying a transmitting and receiving set of specially designed nature. Each day at noon, Central Standard Time, Pilot Gilbert will broadcast reports of his progress for fifteen minutes.

Broadcasts from the fliers may be heard on a wave length of 22 meters. The call letters of the expedition are G-CASN.

GOELET BALL HELD AT NEWPORT VILLA

DINNER PRECEDES DANCE

Dr. Henry B. Jacobs Is Elected Head of Association Which Manages Bailey's Beach.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 16.—The Summer season's largest party was the ball given tonight by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goelet at their villa, Ochre Court. More than 500 guests attended. As an addition, a small dance floor was laid on the terrace just outside the ballroom.

Ochre Court, one of the largest of the summer residences here, has long been the property of the Goelet family and when it was the home of Mr. Goelet's mother, the late Mrs. Ogden Goelet, it was the scene of many notable social affairs.

Tonight's ball was the first large party to be given there in years and it was Mr. and Mrs. Goelet's first since they became the owners of the estate.

Mr. and Mrs. Goelet opened the evening by giving a dinner for seventy guests and later two orchestras played for the dancing. Besides these a Russian balalaika orchestra played during the serving of supper late in the evening.

Dr. Jacobs Elected.

Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs was today elected president of the Spouting Rock Beach Association at the annual meeting of the board of directors. He succeeds Edward J. Berwind, who has been president of the beach association, which controls and manages Bailey's Beach, for many years. Mr. Berwind recently resigned. Dr. Jacobs' place as secretary and treasurer was taken by William F. Whitehouse while Willing Spencer was elected chairman of the executive committee, which is composed of the president, secretary and treasurer.

Prior to the annual meeting of the directors, the stockholders held their annual meeting and reelected Robert Walton Goelet, R. Livingston Beeckman and Thomas Ridgway to the governing committee. No change of policy was adopted or any radical change in the beach layout decided upon.

A mattress race, the first of the season, will be a feature at Bailey's Beach tomorrow. The prizes are offered by Mrs. Robert Ogden Bacon.

Mrs. and Mrs. Herman D. Kountze are giving a dinner at the Clambake Club tomorrow night in honor of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Kissam of New York, guests of Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombly. Vicomte and Vicomtess D'Anzy who have been viisting Mrs. Kountze at Greystone are concluding their visit Sunday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Oliver O'Donnell have returned on their yacht Murdona.

Mrs. Robert J. Adams is giving a young people's luncheon next Wednesday in honor of the Misses Kate and Jean Brice, who are with their aunt, Miss Helen O. Brice.

Eppley Dance Cancelled.

Because of the death of Marion Eppley's mother the dance which Mr. and Mrs. Eppley were to have given at their home, Beacon Rock, next Thursday night in honor of Miss Leta Morris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis G. Morris, has been cancelled and the invitations recalled.

James A. Moffett, who arrived today from Southampton on his yacht Bidou, gave a tea aboard late this afternoon.

Mrs. Walter B. James, Mrs. John H. Prentice and Mrs. Aymar Johns were luncheon hostesses today.

Guests at the Casino today included T. S. Whitlock, a guest of Kenneth P. Budd, who has come for the tennis tournament; George S. Welda, guest of Mrs. F. Lothrop Ames; Lawrence Smith Butler, who is visiting at the Viking; Stephen Whitney Derham of New York, visiting Major and Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, and Seymour Johnson of New York, visiting Mr. and Mrs. Seton Porter and E. Pennington Pearson.

Casino Governors Meet.

Arthur Curtiss James was reelected president of the Newport Casino at the annual meeting of the board of governors today. William F. Whitehouse was re-elected vice president and Henry O. Havemeyer, secretary and treasurer. The executive committee which is made up of the three officers and William H. Vanderbilt was also re-elected.

Mrs. William Goadby Loew and Mrs. Francis L. V. Hoppin were among those giving luncheons today at their Summer homes. And the officials of the Newport Horse Show gave their annual horse show luncheon at the Clambake Club.

Miss Julia Berwind at the Elms last night gave a dinner for a large group of young people in honor of Miss Doris Duke, who next Saturday night will join the ranks of the season's débutantes at a dance to be given by her mother, Mrs. James B. Duke, at Rough Point.

Mrs. Eugene S. Reynal was a dinner hostess at the Clambake Club, and dinners were also given by Mrs. F. Lothrop Ames, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden A. Fahnestock and Mrs. Tiffany Saportas at their Summer homes.

Mrs. Henry Symes Lehr will be the guest of honor tomorrow afternoon when her hostess, Mrs. Lawrence Taylor Paul will give a tea at Paulholme.

The brief visit of Vice President Curtis as the guest of Mrs. George Mesta at her Summer home, The Rocks, was brought to a close late tonight, when after a dinner given in his honor by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Curtiss James at Beacon Hill House, he left by automobile for the home of his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Webster Knight 3d, in Providence.

Mr. Curtis attended a reception this morning by the Newport County Woman's Republican Club at the home of its president, Mrs. Paul Fitzsimons.

Mr. Curtis and his hostess also visited Bailey's Beach for a short time, and were guests at a luncheon at Beach Mound given by Mr. and Mrs. Eugene S. Reynal. They also spent part of the afternoon at the final session of the Newport Horse Show at the Portsmouth Fair Grounds and then attended the children's fund fair being held at Oakland Farm, the home of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt.

St. James, Madison Avenue and 126th Street—Morning, a union service of this and five neighboring congregations with a sermon by the Rev. George M. Stockdale, the pastor of the host church.

Cornell Memorial, Seventy-sixth Street, between Second and Third Avenues—Sermons morning and evening by John S. McConnell, an evangelist. He will also preach each evening this week.

Presbyterian.

First, Fifth Avenue and Eleventh Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Dr. George Alexander, the venerable pastor; evening, service on lawn led by George G. Cameron, of the Church of Scotland.

Brick, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-seventh Street—Morning, last of a series of sermons by the Rev. Dr. Harold Leonard Bowman, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Portland, Ore.

Fifth Avenue, at Fifty-fifth Street—Sermons morning and at 4:30 o'clock by the Rev. Arthur E. Howard, pastor of St. Stephen's Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, who is a son of the Rev. Dr. Henry Howard, the senior co-pastor.

Central, Park Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Dr. John Hutton of London, editor of the British Weekly.

Park Avenue, at Eighty-fifth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Roswell Parkhurst Barnes, the assistant pastor.

Rutgers, Seventy-third Street, just west of Broadway—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Dr. John R. Mackay on the topic, "The Trails of Life." Dr. Mackay, who is a professor in Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah, was formerly for eighteen years pastor of the North Presbyterian Church, this city.

West Park, Amsterdam Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Andrew G. Truxal, a professor in Dartmouth College, on "Universal Peace Dream Approaching Reality."

Second, Central Park West and Ninety-sixth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Paul M. Reid, the assistant pastor.

North, 155th Street, just east of Broadway—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Douglas Clyde Mackintosh, a professor of theology in Yale University.

Fort Washington, 174th Street near Broadway—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Gordon Mattice, the associate pastor, on "Victory" and "Lessons From the Life of Paul."

Protestant Episcopal.

Cathedral of St. John the Divine, Amsterdam Avenue and 110th Street—Services at 11 and 4 o'clock, with sermons by the Rev. Cranston Brenton, sacrist of the cathedral.

St. Thomas's, Fifth Avenue and Fifty-third Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Dr. John Poyntz Tyler, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Missionary District of North Dakota.

Church of the Transfiguration, "The Little Church Around the Corner," Twenty-ninth Street, just east of Fifth Avenue—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Harrison Rockwell, rector of All Saints' Protestant Episcopal Church.

Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Forty-sixth Street, between Broadway and Sixth Avenue—Sermon by the Rev. Walter C. Klein.

Church of the Incarnation, Madison Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Franklin J. Clark, Secretary of the Department of Missions of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Grace, Broadway and Tenth Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Clarence H. Horner, rector of St. Clement's Protestant Episcopal Church, El Paso, Texas, who until a few years ago was on the staff of the local church.

Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue and Tenth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. John Williams, who is in charge for the Summer.

Ascension Memorial Church, Forty-third Street, just west of Times Square—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Walter Shafer on "A Well"; evening, a sermon by the Rev. Lawrence B. Larsen on "The Second Advent."

Trinity, Broadway, at the head of Wall Street—Morning, sermon by the Very Rev. Roland F. Philbrook, dean of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Cathedral, Davenport, Iowa; 3:30 o'clock; evensong without sermon.

St. James, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. George G. Burbanck, rector of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church, Richmond, Ind.

Holy Apostles, Ninth Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. A. E. Lyman-Wheaton of Jersey City. Divine worship will be preceded at 10:30 o'clock by a children's service.

St. Stephen's, 120 West Sixty-ninth Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Samuel H. Prince of Dalhousie University, Halafax, N. S.

St. Margaret's, East 156th and Dawson Streets, the Bronx—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Lyman P. Powell, the rector, on "The Burning Bush."

St. Ann's, 140th Street and St. Ann's Avenue, the Bronx—Morning, sermon by the Rev. W. A. Archibald Shipway, rector of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church, San Diego, on "A Character Sketch of Martha."

Reformed.

Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Dr. James Gordan Gilkie, pastor of the South Congregational Church, Springfield, Mass., on "Does God Guide Individual Lives?" and "Limiting the Load on One's Mind."

Marble Collegiate, Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, secretary of the Commission on Evangelism and Life Service of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

West End Collegiate, Seventy-seventh Street and West End Avenue—Morning, sermon by the Rev. Dr. T. Porter Drumm, pastor of the North Reformed Church, Newark, N. J.

Middle Collegiate, Second Avenue and Seventh Street—Morning, sermon by the Rev. J. Frederic Berg, pastor of the Reformed Church of Flatbush, Brooklyn.

Bethany, First Avenue and Sixty-seventh Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Paul R. Dickie, the pastor, on "James the Courageous" and "The Protestant and the Bible."

Roman Catholic.

St. Patrick's Cathedral, Fifth Avenue and Fiftieth Street—Low masses at 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 o'clock; high mass at 11 o'clock, with sermon by the Rev. Joseph A. Tytheridge of the cathedral staff. The celebrant of the mass will be the Rev. Robert E. Woods of the staff.

Radio.

WJZ—At 3 o'clock, sermon by the Rev. Dr. J. Stanley Durkee, pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, on "Shadows"; 5 o'clock, sermon by the Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell on "The Lord's Prayer."

WKBQ—At 7 P. M., sermon by the Rev. W. A. Archibald Shipway of San Diego, Cal., on "The Importance of Independence."

WABC—At 8 A. M., sermon by the Rev. Dr. H. M. Hancock, pastor of the Wakefield-Grace Methodist Church, White Plains, N. Y., on "Heroes of the Church."

Miscellaneous.

Wayside Gospel Tent, Claremont Avenue, just south of West 122d Street—Sermons at 3 and 8 P. M. by the Rev. George Rittenhouse, an evangelist, under the auspices of the Committeee for Wayside Evangelism and the Evangelistic Committee of New York City, on the topics "When We Meet the King" and "Seven Glories of the Golden Age."

Church of the Truth, 11 West Forty-second Street—Lecture by Walter G. Lanyon on "Out of the Night."

Jewish Science Association, worshipping in the True Sisters' Building, 150 West Eighty-fifth Street—Morning, sermon by Rabbi Morris Lichtenstein on "The Influence of the Theatre."

Church of the Strangers, 309 West Fifty-seventh Street—Sermons morning and evening by the Rev. Dr. Paul Manfield Spencer, the pastor, on "Living Water" and "Matthew."

STATE DOG LICENSES DUE TO GIVE $1,000,000

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Aug. 16.—Owners of 452,076 dogs in the State outside of Greater New York have paid in about $950,000 in license fees, and it is the expectation of the Department of Agriculture and Markets that before the end of the present year $1,000,000 will have been collected. Police authorities are now checking up the dog population in cities and towns, with a view to having every dog licensed.

Compared to the enumeration made in the Summer of 1929, a falling off in the number of dogs is shown. The total at that time was 461,240, but it is pointed out that this enumeration was made in the Summer, when many dogs had been taken to Summer homes and camps by residents.

Up to 1928 there was an annual increase in the number of dogs listed. In 1920, 253,409 dogs were reported to the department; in 1921 there were 263,882; in 1922, 288,960; in 1923, 312,295; in 1924, 343,651. By 1928 the number had increased to 428,240.

The last listing made was for a six months' period from July 1, 1929, to Jan. 1, 1930, the new license year being the calendar year 1930. For that reason the census was taken in the Summer months. Now it begins in January.

In the towns of the State, enumerators are appointed by the town boards, and in the cities police make the enumeration, a payment of 20 cents being made for each dog listed. In cities the amount of the fees goes to the police pension fund. Enumerators are required to prepare lists containing the name and address of dog owners, the number of dogs and whether they are kept in kennels. When this list is made up the enumerators are to leave with the owner a blank application for a license, although failure to do so does not excuse the owner from liability.

The license fee of $2 and a tag fee of 25 cents is charged for each male or spayed female dog and $5 license fee and 25 cents for tag for each unspayed female dog. An application for a kennel license must be filed with the town or city clerk and include information with regard to the registry name and number of each dog in the kennel, as well as other information.

The license fee for the kennel is $10 and a 25-cent tag fee for each dog listed in the application.

STARTS $15,000,000 SHRINE.

MONTREAL, Que., Aug. 16 (Canadian Press).—On the west side of Mount Royal a quiet but important ceremony took place yesterday when Brother Andre of St. Joseph's shrine, laid the first stone of what is to be a magnificent church.

The general lines of the future basilica will be of an architectural style borrowed from the Italian Renaissance. The church will take about ten years to construct and will cost $15,000,000. Its pews will seat 4,000 persons, while the large aisles will provide accommodation for about 10,000 additional people.

Brother Andre, who is 85 years of age and whose fame is worldwide because of cures asserted to have occurred at his shrine through the intervention of St. Joseph, has seen the shrine grow from a tiny wooden chapel to the present large edifice which in turn will be overshadowed by the new basilica.

MUSSOLINI PUSHES LAND RECLAMATION

Checks Migration to Cities as Area for Cultivation Exceeds Capacity of Workers.

LAND OWNERS ON INCREASE

Total Rose From 1,500,000 in 1925 to 3,900,000 Last Year—Cereal Production Mounting.

When the Spring plowing began in Italy it was found that the area of territory made available for cultivation was far above the capacity of the number of workers available to cultivate it. Early in May the provincial prefects were asked by the Ministry of the Interior to have all municipalities of 25,000 population or more to curtail the migration from the rural districts, thus reducing the number of "pavement-fortune hunters." This is being done by requiring the newcomer to produce a special employment certificate showing a city job has already been obtained. If he has not got one he goes back to the land.

How the plan has worked statistics from Rome show, although for other reasons the immigration to the Eternal City has dropped from 60,000 in 1928 to 24,000 in 1929 and to 8,000 in the first six months of the present year, while the first month under the certificate rule showed that 1,500 persons had been engaged to work in Rome from outside. The certificate rule is only one of many measures to keep Italians on the land, where, owing to the great irrigation and reclamation projects of the government, their labor is badly needed.

Electrification Goes Ahead.

The alternative which presented itself to the Fascist Government in the Autumn of 1922 was, whether it should encourage industry at the expense of agriculture, or allow the former a natural development and expand the latter. The old régime had been attempting to realize the first with ever-increasing importations of coal, raw minerals and foodstuffs. The Fascist régime did not follow this policy; it began a systematic electrification of the water power, developing its energy from 4,700,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1922 to 10,580,000,000 in 1929, and, at the same time, began an intensified expansion of agriculture by a series of decrees, laws and orders, the principal one of which is the "Bonifica integrale" project, which began to operate early in 1929, and by which nearly 5,000,000 acres are being rendered arable at a cost of $420,000,000.

Also three systems of cultivation had been put into practice—"coltivazione per economica o a mano proprio," or small farms run by the owners themselves; "colonia parziaria," or larger farms run on a co-operative basis between landowner and resident peasants; and "affitto," or rented territory, run by syndicates or corporations and employing a large number of workers. The "bonifica integrale" project principally affected the large owners whose once extensive domains had been allowed to deteriorate. Among these owners is the former Ambassador at Washington, Don Gelasio dei Principi di Caetani, who owns most of the famous Pontine marshes between Rome and Naples.

All the projects of the Ministry of Agriculture are said to have been measurably aided in their inception by the International Institute of Agriculture, founded by a Californian, the late David Lubin, in 1905. King Victor Emmanuel III gave him a palazzo for the institute among the pines of the famous Borghese Gardens. Aside from the world-wide statistics gathered and published, the institute in 1918, the year before Mr. Lubin's death, started an Italian section, from which particulars were to be had in regard to the agricultural values, active and potential, of every province of the peninsula.

Arable Area Increased.

The effect of the intensive expansion of agriculture has been noticeable not only in the increase of produce, but also in the trade balances since 1925, and particularly since 1927. In the first place the arable area has been constantly increased. The acreage of the entire peninsula amounts to 76,633,803 acres, of which 56,699,014 acres were being devoted to various forms of agriculture in 1922, and 3,127,500 to industry. Since then about 500,000 acres has been added to the cultivated lands and about half that amount to the industrial area.

Distinctive arable lands, that is tilled land, vineyards and orchards, omitting pastures, increased from 32,148,000 acres in 1925 to 32,350,000 acres in 1929. In the same period the number of landowners, owing to the triune system, particularly affected by the breaking up of the large estates, and the "mano proprio," or small farm plan, has increased from 1,500,000 to 3,900,000.

In 1927 Premier Mussolini, through the Ministries of Interior and Agriculture, directed an intensive cultivation of wheat and of potatoes, so that the large imports of the first should be diminished and be replaced, if not possible in kind, then by the potato. From that year until 1929 there was an increase in the product of all cereals from 83,609,000 to 100,459,930 quintals (one quintal being equal to 220.46 pounds), led by wheat, which, increased from 53,291,000 to 70,943,700 quintals. The yield of potatoes increased from 19,453,000 quintals to 20,111,500.

However, neither productively nor commercially was an opposite tendency to that shown during the old régime at once produced, for the value of imported cereals increased from, 3,448,188,000 lire in 1929 to 3,941,642,000 in 1928 (the figures for 1929 are not available), while the export of cereals dropped from 739,972,000 lire to 574,191,000. On the other hand, the importation of agricultural machinery increased from 53,637,000 lire to 56,866,000 and exports of it from 7,040,000 to 8,661,000, and in a list of fifty items coal ceased to be a leading import.

200,000 Workers Required.

Premier Mussolini's pet project in agricultural development is said to be the "bonifica integrale," or land reclamation project. To realize this he has been obliged to invoke several drastic laws, penalizing landowners who were loath to have their non-arable lands improved, offering prizes for large families and harvests, &c. The intransigeants were principally members of the Sicilian aristocracy. In Central Italy, including that region just visited by an earthquake, landowners formed a syndicate engaging to provite $2,500,000 per annum for ten years, and, with the encouragement of the government, they induced agrarian banks to anticipate $1,500,000 yearly of this sum. The budget for 1929 also had an item of more than $11,750,000 for this use.

The exact area in process of reclamation in various regions is 4,768,027 acres. Of this more than 2,000,000 acres have been drained, and an equal number is in process of drainage, leaving a balance under 800,000 on which work is still to be done. But the drainage is not all. After that the soil laid bare must be "set" or "recovered," and so it is calculated that it may be fifteen years before all the land thus reclaimed can be placed under full cultivation. Then it is estimated that there will be an augmentation of the agrarian wealth of the country from $2,000,000,000 to twice that figure, while there will remain from $500,000,000 to $750,000,000 invested in Italian soil. It is also expected that by 1935 Italy will raise all the wheat she consumes.

Aside from the people already on the land being reclaimed, whose families have been the principal source of emigration to the cities and abroad, the project requires 200,000 workers. In June only about half that number were employed. Hence arose the unusual method employed to keep the rurals from seeking employment in the cities, and the various schemes to induce the unemployed of the cities to seek jobs in the country.

lons of coal tar per ton, as compared with ten gallons yielded by high temperature carbonization processes, and 25,000 cubic feet of 200 British thermal unit gas. The finished product, which we have named 'Prestcoke,' because of its compactness in weight, weighs fifty pounds per cubic foot, as compared with only twenty-three pounds of ordinary coke."

Invented by C. S. Lomax.

The new process is the invention of Clarence S. Lomax, chemical engineer, who graduated from Cornell in 1891. Mr. Lomax invented the coke oven in 1914, and numerous other chemical inventions, chiefly metallurgical. He has been engaged with gas carbonization since 1896 and with low temperature carbonization since 1922. He was joined in his work by Mr. Poyer in 1925, who has brought his experience of twelve years in the Edison laboratories to the final development and perfection of the process.

Mr. Poyer is the grandson of William Pitt Edison, brother of Thomas Alva Edison. After studying for a time at the University of Michigan, he joined the staff of engineers at the Edison laboratories, where he remained for a dozen years. Later he acted as assistant to the chairman of the board of all the Edison industries.

Prestcoke has only 1 per cent moisture, as compared with 4 per cent for anthracite, 12 per cent for bituminous, 35 per cent for lignite and 50 per cent for peat. It also has an average ash of only 9 per cent, as compared with 17 per cent for anthracite, and is free from clinkers.

In the manufacture of Prestcoke the processes which nature is known to have used in changing bituminous coal to anthracite are precipitated. The raw product of Illinois and Indiana mines, consisting of nut-coal sizes no smaller than two inches, is carried by conveyors to the coal bin at a height of forty-five feet, from where it is fed automatically into the specially designed carbonizer, the construction of which is for the present a close secret.

"This carbonizer," Mr. Lomax said, "is one which works on the direct heating principle recommended by the Bureau of Mines as a result of its experiments in trying to make a smokeless fuel out of lignite, a soft form of coal even younger geologically than bituminous. It is constructed along the lines of the mechanically stoked gas producer, working with the machine under suction."

Process Resembles Nature.

In nature anthracite coal was produced by tremendous pressure on the bituminous beds, the pressure generating terrific heat, which caused the gases contained in the soft coal to be driven off, at the same time condensing the material left into a lustrous, dense, hard coal. The process here is very similar.

When the bituminous coal is fed into the carbonizer it is subjected to a progressive heating until it rises to 700 degrees centigrade. This removes the largest quantities of the highly valuable coal tar and gas, which are made to go into a separator where the liquid and the gas part company for the first time in millions of years and go, one to a huge tar tank and the other to an even more ponderous gas tank.

When the soft coal has been pumped of two-thirds of its volatile contents, while still retaining a full third to prevent it from turning into ordinary coke, it is forced by the new carbonizer out of the furnace into a quencher, where the burning char is extinguished by an ingenius new process. It next goes into a grinding machine, where, after the clinkers have all been taken out, the char is ground into a powder of just the right consistency, neither too coarse nor too fine. After being allowed to cool to a certain temperature the powder is then mixed with the asphalt binder and goes through the briquetting machine.

Mr. Lomax explained that the process achieves two results never before accomplished. It automatically takes solid char from the bottom of the carbonizer while it still has 12 per cent volatility left, and it produces a char that has very little coke structure so that it is easier to grind for briquetting.

Have Found New Binder.

"One of the many drawbacks," he said, "to the briquetting of fine coke has heretofore been the extreme abrasive properties of coke. Coke is even more abrasive than stone and hence it is very difficult to produce a binder to make it cohere. This difficulty we have now overcome.

"In our process the coal is progressively heated and agitated when in the plastic state by mechanical action and this action prevents the formation of coke structure and produces a spongy char which is easily pulverized. After it is ground the material is heated and then mixed with asphalt in proper proportions for briquetting. The heating is done so that the asphaltic binder can be mixed with the ground char, so that a strong, structural briquet can be formed.

"In this manner we have succeeded in producing a practically non-breakable briquet, which ignites as easily as bituminous coal but burns with the same characteristics as anthracite, and is at the same time much lower in ash quantity than anthracite."

For a hundred years or more the coking process has been carried out at temperatures ranging from 750 to 1,250 degrees Centigrade in beehive ovens, causing millions of dollars worth of valuable by-products, such as dye-stuffs, drugs and chemicals of many varieties, and vast quantities of fuel gas to go up literally in smoke each year.

The smoke nuisance has been one of the great problems confronting the large cities of the Middle West, yet the high cost of anthracite compelled them to use bituminous coal mined in their immediate vicinities. Scientists and engineers, looking toward the future, have also been concerned with the rapidly diminishing supply of anthracite and have devoted much thought and research to the development of a suitable substitute.

With the development of the new process Messrs. Hitchcock, Lomax and Poyer point to the estimated supply of bituminous coal under the surface of the American continent as so much potential anthracite coal, promising an abundance of smokeless fuel for thousand of years.

SPECIAL PRISON ASKED FOR THE DEFECTIVE

Present Institutions Cannot Care for the Mentally Ill, New Jersey Official Finds.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 16.—William J. Ellis, Commissioner of the State Department of Institutions, declared today that New Jersey needs a specialized institution for defective delinquents. There has been a large increase in the number of adult male offenders during the last ten years, he reported.

Such an institution, he pointed out, would permit transferring from penal and correctional groups of prisoners those requiring special medical and custodial supervision.

"On July 1, 1930, the number of adult male offenders in State institutions numbered 946 as against 1,501 in 1920," said the report. "During the last decade 11,661 adult males convicted of crime in the New Jersey courts were committed to the State penal and correctional institutions.

"In developing a State program for meeting the penal and correctional problems, special attention must necessarily be directed toward the mentally deficient group, including also the psychopathic and constitutional defectives, who are not good risks for release from the penal and correctional institutions.

"It is an unwise public policy and in every respect poor business to release this type of offender under parole conditions without a long period of special institutional care.

"One of the outstanding needs in New Jersey is the development of a specialized institution for defective delinquents, thus removing from the penal and correctional group the type of prisoner with whom these institutions are poorly prepared to cope."

FINDS JULY 4 MISHAPS CUT.

New Jersey Department Reports 498 Accidents, Five Fatal.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 16. — A marked trend toward a sane Fourth of July in New Jersey was shown today when a bulletin was issued by the State Department of Labor reporting that there were only 498 Fourth of July accidents and 32 fires resulting from fireworks.

Only five deaths resulted from the mishaps and fires, which were of minor character, the bulletin declared.

Notwithstanding an ordinance prohibiting the sale of fireworks, Jersey City had the largest number of mishaps, reporting 116. Newark was second, with 89, and Camden third, with 65. Both cities also have a ban on the sale of fireworks. Bootlegging of the explosives was believed to be the cause of most of the accidents.

Four of the five deaths occurred in an explosion at a Neptune Fireworks Manufacturing plant, which caused property damage of $15,000. The other fatality was in Passaic, where a case of lockjaw was reported.

2,300 MEN AT WORK ON STATE HOSPITAL

$10,000,000 Start on 85-Building Program at Brentwood Is Nation's Largest Project.

NATIVE LABOR EMPLOYED

22 Structures to Be Completed in Next Year—Prospective Total Cost Is $35,000,000.

Special to The New York Times.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., Aug. 14.—Twenty-three hundred men are employed on State hospital buildings under construction at Brentwood, near here, the largest building program now under way in the United States.

Recent contracts call for the construction of twenty-six buildings, costing upward of $10,000,000. Thirty-one more are planned for 1931, with twenty-five more in the following year. Three buildings were completed last year, and the 1,200-acre site will have within the next three years more than eighty-five buildings, with accommodations for 10,000 patients. The total cost is expected to mount to approximately $35,000,000.

All Buildings Fireproof.

The present contracts call for the completion of the twenty-two buildings by Sept. 1 of next year. All are well along and will be enclosed before cold weather sets in, so that inside work may proceed. The buildings are all fireproof, constructed entirely of brick, with steel interior trim. The only wood used is in the heavy oak doors, and this is so enclosed in metal as to be fireproof. More than 35,000,000 bricks are being used in the buildings now under construction.

Of the 2,300 men employed on the job a large number are residents of Huntington, Bayshore, Babylon, Islip and other Long Island towns and villages.

High wages are the rule, the bricklayers drawing $15.40 a day, the carpenters $12, hod carriers $9.90 and common laborers $5, all working five days a week.

Work now under way is covered by two main contracts. General construction work on the buildings is being done by the Turner Construction Company of New York, who began last May. Four buildings and all tunnel work have been assigned to M. Shapiro & Son of New York. W. Taverner Corporation of New York has the contract for all electrical work. Plumbing contracts were let to the J. J. Byrne Company of Manhattan, and heating work is being done by Almirall & Co. and the Heat Control Service Corporation, both of Manhattan.

While every effort is being made to comply with the State labor laws which require that preference on State jobs be given to residents of this State, contractors find that it is next to impossible to keep out workmen who do not meet this requirement.

300 Ask for Work Daily.

No aliens are employed and there is a set rule that in order to obtain employment an applicant must show a membership card in some New York State labor union. Such a membership card is taken usually as evidence that the applicant is a citizen of the United States.

As many as 300 men a day are applying for work on the grounds, it is reported by officials in charge, and some are being discharged each day for various reasons. On one day recently forty-four men lost their jobs, some because of inefficiency and others for other reasons. Among those who have applied for work recently are good workmen who have resided for some time in New York State, but who hold membership in labor unions in other States. All such are rejected or are replaced later if they do succeed in getting a job.

Disgruntled workmen who have been discharged are said to be responsible for many of the rumors that are being circulated that aliens and residents of other States are employed on the job while bona fide residents are turned away.

A few days ago one such workman, loitering on the grounds, approached Governor Roosevelt, who was inspecting the work, and sought to convey the impression to the Chief Executive that unfair discrimination was being shown in the employment of men and that a "white man could not get a job there."

This, the Governor assured him, could not be true, but he promised to investigate, which he did later, finding that every effort was being put forth by the contractors to live up to the State labor law.

Will Relieve Congestion.

The new institution, which will be the largest in the State, will be known as Pilgrim State Hospital for the Insane. It is named in honor of Dr. Pilgrim, one of the State's leading authorities in mental diseases. A weekly paper published in the interests of those employed on the job is known as "Pilgrim's Progress."

The State Department of Mental Hygiene has named the first head of the new institution, W. W. Wright, now superintendent of the Marcy State Hospital for the Insane, near Utica. Dr. Wright spent some time this week on the ground at Brentwood, inspecting the layout of the building and going over plans for their equipment. He expressed himself as highly pleased with the work under way.

Each of the two other State hospitals for the insane in this section of Long Island is reported to be 50 per cent overcrowded and the two at present house 14,000 patients. At the Central Islip State Hospital, only a few miles from Brentwood, there are 7,500 patients and at Kings Park there are reported to be about 6,300.

A $1,000,000 addition to the Kings Park Hospital, scheduled to begin next month, is expected to relieve conditions there somewhat. Although the Brentwood institution will be in open country, largely surrounded by scrub oak, it will be accessible by improved highways from all directions. The present unimproved highway, known as the Crooked Hill Road, leading from the Commack-Brentwood highway to the hospital grounds, is listed for immediate improvement under a program by the towns of Huntington and Smithtown, the money to be taken from Lowman act funds, derived from license fees.

Unable to Work, Ends His Life.

NYACK, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Discouraged by his failure to procure work or get back his old job as a telegraph operator with the Western Union, which he had held for fifteen years at Miami, Ariz., Edward Miller Holland, 48 years old, paralytic and unable to walk, shot himself last night in his room at the home of his brother-in-law, Charles Christensen, captain of the Nyack ferry. He died today at the Nyack Hospital.

Du Pont Employes Are Feted For Safety Record in Plant

PARLIN, N. J., Aug. 16.—Employes of the local plant of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Company were fêted today for having established a record of 3,500,000 man hours without incurring a single injury. The record six-month period ended on July 25 when an employe fell from a ladder and was seriously hurt. The former record of a du Pont plant was 2,950,000 man hours.

The employes were entertained at a clambake this afternoon. The menu included 44,000 clams, 2,600 fish, 8,000 frankfurters and 4,400 ears of corn. The affair was described as "the biggest bake the State ever had."

So far 357 persons in this city have registered in advance of the regular registration period in October.

OXONIAN MAY BE DEPORTED.

J. V. Murray Completes Term for Receiving Stolen Autos.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Aug. 16.—J. Vincent Murray, who was graduated from Oxford University in England and later obtained a legal education in this country, is facing deportation proceedings following his release from the New Jersey State prison at Trenton, where he has completed a three-year term for receiving stolen automobiles. The effort to deport him is based on charges that Murray may become a dangerous criminal and a menace to society. He is to have a hearing Monday before Federal Judge William N. Runyon.

Murray contends that he was not born in England, but in California, and asserts that he has been deprived of some of his legal rights. His attorney is Miss Louise Shapiro of Morristown.

RAILWORKERS' WAGE ROSE 33% SINCE 1915

MAXIMUM REACHED IN 1920

Income Level for 1929 Close to That of Ten Years Ago—Engineers Lead Pay Group.

Real wages of railroad workers on all Class I railroads in the United States, after allowing for the changes in purchasing power of the dollar, were 33 per cent higher during the second quarter of 1929 than they were in 1914-1915, according to analyses made public yesterday by the National Industrial Conference Board. This figure is on the basis of average weekly earnings, and the average hourly earning was said to show a considerably higher increase due to the reduction in hours of work.

Hourly earnings of all wage-earners for the last quarter of 1929 on the Class I roads averaged slightly more than 64 cents, according to the announcement; weekly earnings averaged $31.80, and weekly hours of work averaged forty-eight. The study and analyses are part of a general study entitled "Wages in the United States, 1914-1929."

Of the various groupings of workers, the board reports that all train and engine service labor averaged 92 cents an hour and $48.13 a week. Shop labor averaged 80 cents an hour and $37.62 a week for skilled and 38 cents an hour and $17.97 a week for unskilled. Road passenger engineer was the most highly paid occupation in the train and engine service groups, with $1.59 hourly earnings and $66.15 weekly, while yard firemen were the lowest in that grouping, with averages of $38.43 a week, although the hourly average for road freight brakemen, 72 cents, was lower than the yard fireman's hourly average.

"With reference to the trend of earnings since 1914-1915," the conference board says, "it will be noted that average hourly earnings reached their maximum in 1920, when they were 159 per cent above 1914-1915. In 1921 they declined slightly, and in the following year more markedly. Since 1923 there has been an upward movement accompanied by fluctuations, so that by 1929 earnings were again close to the 1920 level.

"In the last quarter of 1929 average hourly earnings were 154 per cent above 1914-1915. The development of average weekly earnings has been similar to that of average hourly earnings, except that the maximum earnings in 1920 were only 125 per cent higher than in 1914-1915; after 1920 the reduction was somewhat more gradual than in the case of hourly earnings and the subsequent low point was not reached until 1924. In the last quarter of 1929 average weekly earnings were 110 per cent above 1914-1915, and, therefore, not quite so close to the 1920 level as hourly earnings."

examination services rendered by hospitals, outpatient departments, social and welfare organizations with a view of determining how acceptable these procedures are and to find an acceptable procedure.

"The committee also proposes to conduct a thorough investigation into the amount and character of health examination work being carried on by the leading industrial concerns in the metropolitan area.

"A sustained propaganda will be directed toward winning the general practitioner to the value of the health examination in general office practice. A campaign of public propaganda will also be waged along approved lines in accordance with the budgetary means available."

In addition to Dr. Rongy, the chairman, the executive committee in charge of the work includes Dr. Iago Galdston, secretary, an official of the New York Academy of Medicine, and the presidents of the five county medical societies. They are Dr. George W. Kosmak, New York; Dr. Luther F. Warren, Kings; Dr. Harry Aranow, Bronx; Dr. Edward A. Flemming, Queens, and Dr. Charles R. Kingsley, Richmond. There also are ten other representatives of the various county medical groups on the executive committee.

NASSAU DEDICATES ROOSEVELT STATUE

AIRPLANES DROP FLOWERS

Spanish War Veterans Participate in Exercises Which Are Followed by a Parade.

Special to The New York Times.

MALVERNE, L. I., Aug. 16.—The dedication and unveiling of a memorial monument to the late Theodore Roosevelt and to Spanish-American War veterans of Nassau County took place today at Lakeview. The monument was unveiled by Mrs. Roosevelt, who made the principal dedicatory address.

Among those present at the unveiling were Mr. and Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Roosevelt, Kermit Jr., Assemblyman Edwin W. Wallace and Captain Edward Green of Mitchel Field.

Expressions of regret over their inability to attend were sent by President Hoover, Theodore Roosevelt Jr., now in Porto Rico, and Otto H. Kahn.

While the memorial was being unveiled by Mrs. Roosevelt low-circling aviators dropped flowers on the scene.

Mrs. Roosevelt, in her address, declared that her late husband always had felt that Nassau County was "his property," and that Long Island was "his island" and New York State "his State."

Turning to the children present at the ceremony, Mrs. Roosevelt said:

"He always felt he belonged to you all, to every little boy and girl present now. His only desire was that you follow his principle—that of Americanism."

She declared that the late President spent his happiest moments at Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay.

Presentation of the monument was made by Assemblyman Wallace and acceptance on behalf of the Spanish-American War veterans of the county by Alfred Pfost, president of the Evangelical Church of the Good Shepherd. The monument has been raised between the church building and the parsonage.

Colonel William H. Dahlgren of Lakeview, member of the Hubbell Camp, Spanish-American War Veterans of Brooklyn, was in charge of the ceremonies.

Following the unveiling there was a parade in which Spanish War veterans, Veterans of the World War, auxiliary units, firemen and several bands participated.

FAKE DROWNING STORY LANDS MAN IN JAIL

21 Policemen Search Five Hours for Three Men Falsely Reported Lost From Motor Boat.

Gustave Andersen, 46 years old, a mechanic, living at 523 Eighth Avenue, Brooklyn, was sentenced to ten days in the Richmond County jail yesterday by City Magistrate Croak at Stapleton, S. I., for falsely reporting that three men had been drowned from his motor boat during the storm on Friday night in Princes Bay and for giving the police unnecessary work.

Andersen, wet to the skin and partly exhausted, reported to Joseph Penyak at Princes Bay on Friday night that his motor boat had been overturned and that three of his companions had been dorwned. Penyak telephoned Police Headquarters at St. George and a police launch, with a sergeant and four policemen, was rushed from St. George fifteen miles to the scene, as was also the emergency wagon with sixteen patrolmen. While waiting for them to arrive Penyak called also upon two volunteer life-saving stations for help. Yachtsmen also put out in small boats and a vigorous search was made by all for the motor boat and for the three men. After four hours' search the motor boat was found fast on a reef near Prince's Bay beach. In the boat was an empty bottle which had contained alcohol, according to the police.

After the harbor police had grappled the bay for five hours they became suspicious and questioned Andersen further. He stuck to his story until he was arraigned in court, when he told Magistrate Croak that no one had been drowned and he didn't know how he came to tell Penyak such a story.

2 RACING YACHTS ARRIVE.

Transylvania Also Brings Prof. J. H. Teacher, British Surgeon.

Professor John H. Teacher, noted surgeon and a member of the faculty of the University of Glasgow, was a passenger on the Transylvania of the Anchor Line, which arrived at 8:45 P. M. yesterday from Glasgow and London with 635 passengers. Professor Teacher will attend the annual meeting of the British Medical Association to be held in Winnipeg, Canada, Aug. 25 to 28.

The ship carried two six-meter yachts, with which Stuart Black and Murray Parker, Scottish sportsmen, will compete in the international races in Long Island Sound starting Sept. 1.

James G. Nicoll, general manager of the Scottish Union and National Insurance Company, and his family were among the passengers. Miss Grieda Bone, daughter of the vessel's commander, Captain David W. Bone, author of sea novels, arrived as a quota passenger. Miss Bone is an artist. She will seek citizenship here.

HOME TOWN TO HEAR DAVIS.

'Jim the Puddler' Will Open Campaign for Senator at Sharon, Pa.

Special to The New York Times.

SHARON, Pa., Aug. 16.—Back in his home town, where he won his first fame as "Jim the Puddler," Secretary of Labor James J. Davis will open his campaign for the United States Senate next Saturday.

Dignitaries of the State and nation will come to Sharon for the occasion. But equally as important—at least to Mr. Davis—are the facts that his father, a Welsh miner, 80 years old, and the Sharon Band in which "Jim the Puddler" once tooted a horn, will be on hand.

Vice President Curtis will make one of the main speeches of the day, outlining Secretary Davis's services under three Presidents and his accomplishments as a Cabinet Officer.

Letter Mailed to Washington In 1926 Is Just Delivered

Leverett S. Lyon of Washington, D. C., was engaged in writing a book on economics in January, 1926, when he wrote to an author in this city seeking permission to reprint a chart. On Jan. 7 of that year a letter granting the requested permission was mailed to Mr. Lyon. The letter was received last week.

The book was published more than four years ago. Meanwhile the letter was slowly making its way on its four and one-half-year journey. The postmarks on the envelope, which Mr. Lyon exhibited yesterday, read "Hudson Terminal Station, Jan. 7, 1926," while a second postmark on the reverse side read "Hudson Terminal Annex, Aug. 7, 1930."

BISHOP DARLINGTON IS BURIED HERE

50 CLERGYMEN AT SERVICE

Jeweled Cross Carried Before the Coffin as Funeral Party Enters Church of Bishop's Son.

Funeral services for the Right Rev. James Henry Darlington, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Harrisburg, Pa., who died Thursday morning in Kingston, N. Y., were held yesterday morning in the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Fifth Avenue and Ninetieth Street, of which his son, the Rev. Dr. Henry Darlington, is rector and which the Bishop had helped to dedicate.

Among the telegrams Mrs. Ella Louise Bearns Darlington, the widow, received was one from President Hoover, sent from the White House. It read:

> Mrs. Hoover and I are deeply grieved to learn of the death of your distinguished husband, and send you our profound sympathy and prayers that you may be given strength to bear this affliction. Bishop Darlington's long and important labors in the spiritual life of the people will be remembered with general gratitude.

Tribute From Governor Fisher.

The following telegram was from Governor John H. Fisher of Pennsylvania:

> I am grieved at the death of Bishop Darlington. This community [Harrisburg], the State and Church which he so faithfully served have suffered an irreparable loss. My tenderest sympathy goes out to you and your bereaved family.

The Prince of Bearn, France, sent a cablegram and his daughter was among those at the funeral. A telegram from Chancellor Elmer Ellsworth Brown of New York University, where the Bishop had lectured, said the flag at the university would be at half staff during the services.

Among others who sent messages of sympathy were former Governor and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot of Pennsylvania, former Governor John K. Tener of Pennsylvania, Bishop William T. Manning, Frederick Watson, British Consul General at Philadelphia, and Ogden Reid.

500 at the Funeral.

More than 500 persons attended the funeral. There were fifty clergymen from the dioceses of Harrisburg, New York and Long Island. Among those of other communions was the Rev. Dr. George Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church.

There was no sermon. A memorial service will be held in Harrisburg this Fall. The Rev. Lewis Nichols, rector of St. Paul's Church, Lock Haven, Pa., officiated, he being the president of the standing committee of the Diocese of Harrisburg. He was assisted by the Rev. Dr. Oscar F. R. Treder, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Harrisburg, and former dean of the Cathedral of the Incarnation, Garden City, L. I., and the Rev. Clifford G. Trombly, rector of St. James's Church, Lancaster, Pa. The blessing was given by the Right Rev. James Craik Morris, missionary Bishop of the Panama Canal Zone.

The honorary pallbearers were:

Melville H. Bearns, William Francklyn Paris, E. F. Hyde, Alfred H. Morris, Thomas Williams, General Oliver B. Bridgman, Frank Melville, William S. Pettit and Charles M. Schwab, New York; Albert K. Smiley, New Paltz, N. Y.; General Charles M. Clement, Sunbury, Pa.; Robert Hartman, Lancaster, Pa.; Carl B. Kefferstein, Washington, and Canon William Sheafe Chase, Rector of Christ Church, Brooklyn.

French Ceremony Followed.

The French America Association had the jeweled cross, Bishop Darlington's insignia of membership, carried on a white satin pillow just behind the coffin as it was borne up the aisle. When the coffin was placed in the chancel before the altar the pillow bearing the cross was placed at its head. This is following the custom at the funeral of a Bishop in France. In the processional and recessional the jeweled cross was carried by the Rev. Robert Redenbaugh, curate at the Church of the Heavenly Rest. The coffin was covered with a purple pall, on which was embroidered a white cross.

A double quartet, with Dr. J. Christopher Marks, choir director emeritus, at the organ, rendered selections that were favorites of the Bishop. As the choir and clergy walked up the aisle the music was "Those Eternal Bowers," by Morley. Other selections in succession were "Sov'reign Ruler of the Skies," by Gottschalk; "All That the Father," "I Heard a Voice From Heaven" and "The Strife Is O'er."

The Mourners.

In the front pews were the Bishop's widow and their three sons, all clergymen, Henry, Gilbert and Elliott; their daughters-in-law, Mrs. Henry Darlington and Mrs. Gilbert Darlington, and their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ellis Fisher. Near by were other relatives, including the brothers of the Bishop, Charles F. Darlington and Dr. Thomas Darlington of this city.

After the services the body of Bishop Darlington was escorted to Woodlawn Cemetery by motorcycle police and placed in a vault to await the decision of the family as to the final resting place.

Of the scores of floral tributes only one automobile load was taken to the cemetery. The others were sent to St. Luke's Hospital and the Hospital for Ruptured and Crippled. The tribute from the little grandchildren of the Bishop was a wreath of Darlington roses, a variety named some years ago for him.

GUSTAVE FROHMAN, STAGE VETERAN, DIES

PRESS AGENT AT 17 YEARS

He Managed Road Tours of Stars for Many Years—Once Secretary to Horace Greeley.

Gustave Frohman, who was well known as a theatrical manager before his brothers, Daniel Frohman and the late Charles Frohman, started their careers, died early yesterday morning at his home, 37 West Seventy-second Street, after an illness of four weeks. Mr. Frohman, who was 76 years old, had been in retirement since 1916.

Gustave Frohman, the second of the three Frohman brothers, was born in Sandusky, Ohio, and began his career in the theatre at the age of 17, when he was appointed advance man for Callender's Georgia Minstrels. Later he managed J. H. Haverly's Georgia Minstrels. In the early '80s he was associated with the Mallory Brothers in the management of the Madison Square Theatre, and was among the first to develop the road as a source of profit for original New York attractions. Subsequently he managed William Gillette in "The Professor" and "The Private Secretary," and in 1884 was one of the founders of the Sargent Dramatic School, now the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. In 1885, with Steele Mackaye, he opened the old Lyceum Theatre.

In addition to bringing his two brothers into the theatre, Mr. Frohman was generally credited with having been instrumental in bringing David Belasco to New York and starting the career of Marc Klaw, whom he first employed as an advance man.

For several years before 1895, when he joined his younger brother Charles as company manager, Mr. Frohman offered his own productions. Among the latter was "The Witch," in the cast of which was Marie Hubert, whom he later married. During the twenty years in which he was associated with the productions of Charles Frohman he managed many of the leading stars of his brother's famous organization.

As a boy in New York, Mr. Frohman served as office boy and later as secretary to Horace Greeley. He also was known as one of the first press agents in the city. His long and colorful career in the theatre also embraced a period as supervisor of stage acts for the vaudeville circuit organized by Keith, Proctor, Williams and Hammerstein.

Mr. Frohman is survived by his widow, Marie Hubert Frohman; his brother, Daniel Frohman; three sisters, Etta and Emma Frohman and Mrs. D. H. Davison, and his two sons, Philip Hubert Frohman, an architect of Washington, D. C., and Louis Henry Frohman of New York. Funeral services will be held at the Campbell Funeral Church at 2 P. M. on Tuesday.

OLD-TIMERS MOURN EX-SENATOR ROCHE

Political Associates and Others at Funeral of Dispenser of Charity.

A score of political associates and other friends of a generation ago were among those who attended funeral services yesterday for Patrick H. Roche, ex-State Senator, former café proprietor and fight enthusiast, in St. James's Roman Catholic Church, 28 James Street.

After the requiem mass, friends lingered to recall the charitable manner of the Senator.

With his pockets full of dimes and quarters he would leave the Hotel Breslin, Broadway and Twenty-ninth Street, where he lived for many years, and walk all the way to City Hall, distributing the coins among children and beggars. He was well-to-do as a result of his real estate ventures.

Reminiscenses of Roche's café, formerly operated on the site of the Hermitage Hotel, interested many of his old cronies. The café was a rendezvous for actors, sportsmen and politicians. The exact age of Mr. Roche was a matter of conjecture among his friends. Some said he was 70, and even 82 was mentioned.

The Rev. Charles E. Finnegan was celebrant of the mass; the Rev. Joseph Strom, deacon, and the Rev. A. Mayoral, subdeacon. Among the relatives present were Mrs. Henry Graff, a niece; John J. Drumm, Thomas F. Drumm and James Byrnes, nephews, and Mr. and Mrs. George Brennan.

Others present included ex-Representative Harry H. Hanbury, former Deputy Police Commissioner Thomas McAvoy, Representative Thomas H. Cullen, Municipal Court Judge David Morris, ex-Assemblyman Thomas Barry, Superintendent of Schools William J. O'Shea, John W. O'Connor, retired Deputy Chief Inspector of Police; John J. Hickey, ex-patrolman; ex-Alderman William McGarry, James Divver, Charles Riley, Thomas Heffernan, Stephen O'Connell, Dennis J. Sullivan, John W. Donovan, Robert Hubbard, Oliver Lakin and Sam S. Blume.

Burial was in Calvary Cemetery.

MRS. CHARLES T. PIERCE.

Mrs. Caroline Low Pierce, wife of Charles T. Pierce, a Brooklyn manufacturer who for several years was Commodore of the Riverside (Conn.) Yacht Club, died yesterday at her home in Riverside. Funeral services will be held at 12 o'clock noon tomorrow. Burial will be in Greenwood Cemetery, Brooklyn.

Mrs. Pierce was born in Brooklyn, a daughter of Captain James and Ellen Richardson Low. She was well known for her philanthropic work, and in her early years was a yachting enthusiast, sailing a yacht with considerable ability. Her home in Riverside was noted for its horticultural display.

She was married to Mr. Pierce in 1879. They celebrated their golden wedding anniversary last year. Mrs. Pierce was a charter member of the Brooklyn Colony of New England Women, a member and former Regent of Putnam Chapter, D. A. R., of Greenwich, Conn.; president emeritus of Colony House, Brooklyn, and a member of the Riverside Garden Club.

DR. ALEXANDER AISMAN.

Dr. Alexander Aisman, associate urologist of the Jewish Hospital, died yesterday at his home, 960 St. John's Place, Brooklyn, after a long illness. He was 39 years old. Funeral services will be held at 10:30 A. M. today. Burial will be in Mount Hebron Cemetery.

Dr. Aisman was born in Russia, and was brought here when an infant. He was educated in this country and Europe. He was graduated from Bellevue Medical College in 1912, since which time he had practiced in Brooklyn. He had been on the medical staff of the Jewish Hospital for nearly eighteen years and was a Fellow of the American Medical Association and a member of the Urological Society, the Kings County and New York State Medical Societies and Cassia Lodge, F. and A. M. Two years ago he was one of five Brooklyn doctors who made a tour of European clinics and studied under Vienna specialists.

He is survived by a widow, two children, his mother, a brother and five sisters.

Reece's Rival to Run in Tennessee.

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn., Aug. 16 (AP).—Samuel R. Price, defeated by Representative B. Carroll Reece in the race for the Republican nomination to Congress from the First District, announced tonight that he would be a candidate in the general election. Terming the primary of Aug. 7 "a farce and a fraud," Mr. Price said he was "a candidate until after the November election, and until the ballots are counted as cast."

SPROULL—The sad intelligence of the sudden death of John T. Sproull at Nuremberg, Germany, on Aug. 3, 1930, was received by the officers and directors of the Marine Midland Trust Company of New York with deep regret and sorrow.

John T. Sproull was elected president of the Varick Bank of New York many years ago. The Coal and Iron National Bank absorbed the Varick Bank in 1904 and Mr. Sproull continued as its president up to Feb. 1, 1923, when he was elected chairman of the board of directors.

In 1926, upon the merger of the Fidelity Trust Company of New York with the Coal and Iron National Bank, Mr. Sproull became chairman of the executive committee of the Fidelity Trust Company, which office he held until Feb. 15, 1928, when he was elected chairman of the advisory committee.

John T. Sproull was a genial, industrious man, well trained by long experience, in the banking business. He never departed from the true fundamentals of his profession. While progressive, he was not spectacular, and was content to rest his reputation upon adherence to the sound and conservative principles of the banking business. Untiring in his efforts to promote the success of the institutions with which he was identified, conscientious in his devotion to their welfare, he, nevertheless, took time for the cultivation of Christian virtues, which were admired and appreciated by his most intimate friends. He gave much thought and attention to advancing the interests of the Christian Endeavor Society, of which he was one of the leaders. He met his advancing years with cheerfulness and courage, and, being in the possession of good health to the last, he was privileged to enjoy them to an unusual degree.

His friends on this board and on the former boards of the Coal and Iron National Bank and the Fidelity Trust Company of New York mourn his loss, and by this minute desire to express to his widow their keen sympathy for her in her bereavement.

Resolved, That this appreciation be spread in full upon the records of the Marine Midland Trust Company of New York and that a copy thereof, suitably engrossed, be sent to Mrs. Sproull.

STORE RETRENCHING MAY HIT PROGRESS

Effort to Reduce Costs Might Cause More Harm Than Previous Laxity.

SAVINGS ARE QUESTIONED

When Just a Fad—Retaining Control Systems, Price Lines and Personnel Gains Is Urged.

The possibility that unjustified expense reduction and retrenchment may sacrifice the progress achieved in more scientific merchandising in recent years commanded attention in retail circles during the week. A canvass of opinion among retail authorities disclosed a growing realization that danger lurks in the tendency "to throw everything overboard" to cut down costs of operation.

Just as many retailers permitted expenses to get out of hand during the last two years, the pendulum was said to be now swinging too far in the other direction. The result may be, it was asserted, that many stores may be carried away by an expense reduction mania that will seriously curtail or even eliminate the benefits of the comparatively recent adjuncts to retailing, including the raising of personnel standards and training for better selling, improved merchandising procedure and the stressing of merchandise quality.

Loss in Eliminating Them.

All of these activities result in substantial expense to the store. As one merchandising executive said: "They may have been overdone in some cases, abused in others, but essentially and fundamentally they are right and cannot be abandoned without tremendous loss."

The view was emphasized that "those who at one fell swoop discard all they have gained in the last ten years are going to find themselves inadequately organized and insufficiently staffed when the turn in business comes, as it is inevitable that it will. Whereas those who retain the fundamental structure and effectiveness of their service will find in a period of business revival that they are fit to go ahead of their competitors."

The consensus of views stressed the importance of a sane policy of expense reduction, based on adequate reasons in each instance, and not expediency, in which the saving of a few obvious dollars will eventually result in the hidden loss of a good many more in unbalanced merchandising, less effective selling and in consumer dissatisfaction and loss of good-will. Chipping away the foundation was held not to be good business under any conditions.

Fundamentally, the problem of sane expense reduction was one of good management, according to another retail executive. He saw retrenchment among retailers today as a fad and in some cases a basis for boasting that so much and so much has been saved. These "savings" he regarded as questionable in many cases and have been made against the better judgment of some executives in the organizations affected, who have realized their fallacy.

Owners Carried Away.

Most of these expense cuts, he asserted, have been made on orders "from the top," store owners themselves having been carried away by the strong momentum of the trend. It is a current test of good management, anxious to build a well-balanced business, he asserted, as to whether it is sifting all expense reduction so carefully that justified functions and services are not being impaired.

Primarily, it was brought out, store organization should not suffer from ill-advised expense reduction. Unnecessary jobs of executives and some others should be eliminated. They should not have been on the payroll in the first place, it was argued. But this should not be broadened into a policy that will react to the detriment of personnel generally. The wisdom of wage reductions was seriously questioned, because of the effect upon personnel morale and the continued building up of a better trained and effective sales staff, now needed more than ever.

Under the heading of scientific merchandising procedure, the view was general that every effort should be put forth to maintain unit stock control, price lining and better buying along price lines. Anything saved in the abandonment or curtailment of these things, it was contended, will result in losses infinitely greater, the more so because they may not be evident on the surface.

In Doubt on Stylists.

Not so general, however, was the feeling regarding the retaining of stylists. These recent additions to the retail world were said in many cases to have hardly fulfilled the glowing expectations made at their advent. In fact, they have added costly burdens in the form of costly merchandise mistakes, and many stores have already dropped them. It was also held a serious mistake to replace good buyers with cheap ones. The saving in weekly salary may cost the store hundreds of times that amount in markdowns.

It was strongly maintained that any reduction of the normal services afforded the customer was treading on somewhat dangerous ground. In some cases it may be found that recently added services may be dispensed with without injury. Consumers patronize department and other stores for service, as well as merchandise, it was held, and sacrifice or impairment of the major services would entail consumer dissatisfaction and loss of good-will.

Finally, as one related phase of the matter, it was held that retrenchment should involve no decline in the quality standards of the merchandise offered the consumer. The headlong rush of many stores in recent weeks to feature sales was seriously questioned as "acts of expediency" that are likely to be damaging boomerangs upon store prestige, merchandising practice and effect on clientele.

Marking Rules in Effect Tomorrow.

The new marking regulations, promulgated under the tariff act, have been received from Washington and will go into effect tomorrow. Importers do not anticipate very much difficulty under the new rules as custom officials are expected to be lenient for a time and to confine themselves to warnings instead of holding up merchandise.

The Merchant's Point of View

The change in weather proved stimulating to retail trade during the week and sales made appreciable gains for the first time, in many instances, since before the holiday last month. The increases were sizable and in a number of cases business ran ahead of a year ago by good margins. The trade was well distributed over seasonal items and clearance goods, particularly house furnishings, with some early buying of Fall and school attire.

This spurt in trade was especially welcome because of the setback suffered in July. The preliminary figures issued by the Federal Reserve Board disclosed that sales last month for 519 stores were 9 per cent under those for the same month last year for the country as a whole. All reserve districts showed losses which varied from 3 per cent in the New York area to 18 per cent in the Chicago reserve territory.

Reporting on the four weeks ended Aug. 13, the largest mail-order chain system gave sales as 8.7 per cent under the same period in 1929. This would indicate that, despite the drought and the decline in prices, unit volume is holding up fairly well.

The question of chief concern now in the wholesale merchandise markets is whether this week will see a delayed buying peak or whether the crest has already been passed. Orders placed so far for Fall, with few exceptions, are about 25 per cent under a year ago. While this decline is explained in part by lower prices and a rather marked trend to the lower price ranges, unit volume is also reduced. Manufacturers and wholesalers in many lines are predicting freely that the cautious buying of retailers will result in shortages. In the better lines requiring more time to produce this may very well turn out to be the case.

Upward Trend Noted. With the drought broken in some of the areas which were affected most, the tendency late in the week was to revise earlier notions of the damage and the effect on business. The relief steps appear opportune and adequate and, in fact, offer a rather distinct contrast to the handling of the industrial reaction and widespread unemployment. The estimate of the Department of Agriculture disclosed shortages only in corn and hay and, despite the dry spell and its implications, farm product prices receded further during the week.

Although the farm situation attracted most attention during the week, reference to the weekly business index printed on this page shows the first gain in ten weeks, a development which doubtless will be received with even greater interest. Wholesale commodity prices failed to reflect this gain, however, and the Annalist weekly figure declined to 121.6, with losses in six groups and fractional gains only in food products and fuels. The index for the previous week stood at 122.2.

From the steel industry come reports, finally, that no great improvement in prospects is visible. Automobile manufacturers have been reducing prices in order to stimulate a demand that continues to lag, and the outlook for operations is dubious. Contract awards in building are running so far this month about 24 per cent under those of a year ago, which reduces the July decline but does not portend a real upward movement. The reduction in factory employment in this State for the month June 15 to July 15 was 4 per cent, as against the usual seasonal drop of 1 per cent. The number of workers was reported as less last month than at any time since the index of the State bureau was started, in June, 1914.

Previously it was estimated here that the present slump would probably rate between that of 1924 and the collapse in 1921. That is the case now, and it is likely that, while some of the usual seasonal gain from this point on will be manifest, the recovery may prove irregular and take some time to regain normal.

Exports Slump Further. The effort to discount the effect of the new tariff on our export trade which has been apparent in official and other circles must find small comfort in the figures which were issued late in the week on foreign trade in July. The value of exports fell to $269,000,000, which was 33 per cent under the total for the same month last year and the lowest for the same month since 1915.

With all due allowance for the world-wide collapse in commodity prices, it seems safe to assume that the growing restrictions placed on exports from this country in retaliation for our tariff boosts and the marked antagonism in some of our important markets created by the same unwarranted action are whittling down our sales more than business conditions abroad would otherwise require.

By comparison, the British trade figures for July disclosed a loss in exports of 23 per cent, the chief feature of which was a further slump in shipments of textiles aggravated by the boycott on British goods in India.

In the import category for the United States, the total dropped to $219,000,000, or 38 per cent below the value of receipts for July, 1929. The favorable balance was, therefore, $50,000,000 last month. The net loss in gold, however, amounted to $20,641,000, which was explained by increased foreign loans.

Price Stragglers Found. The question of prices to pay or of prices to offer is the dominant one in most business quarters. Distributers are testing out values the public will most readily accept in order to gauge what prices they themselves will pay. On the other hand, many producers are striving to get their offerings within the quotations that will bring the largest amount of business.

There is, however, a rather notable tendency among some manufacturers to dodge the price issue. They may belong to groups which for years have been fixing and maintaining prices or to others that have the problem presented by a branded line. The stationary price of bread, taking the drastic decline in wheat and flour, may be offered as an example of how little recognition is given in some quarters to lower raw material costs. Building materials of many kinds evidence the same type of resistance to possible reductions.

In the highly competitive merchandise lines there are few outstanding instances of such resistance to lower prices, though here and there examples may be found. Floor coverings, for instance, represent a line on which prices were made several months ago at practically unchanged levels, and, according to trade authorities, these quotations will be maintained until the next opening late in the year. Since raw material costs in this industry are supposed to be almost double what labor is paid, and raw material costs are down, the only inference possible is that the producers have decided to "stand pat."

The notable increase in private brands points to the increased competition which national brands may expect where prices have not been adequately revised, and other "stand pat" manufacturers may wake up to restricted markets or new rivals if they continue to hold up possible economies. Inasmuch, also, that the effort to maintain prices involves, as a rule, curtailing operations, business recovery to that degree is delayed.

Retailing Science and Art. In the course of replying to the statement of Selfridge & Co. of London that British retail progress has outstripped that in other countries, Lew Hahn, head of the chain that bears his name, had several highly pertinent remarks to make last week concerning the present department store situation.

He cited as his belief that most department store managers realize that they have made a mistake in judging the extent to which retailing can be developed into a science. He hazarded an estimate that perhaps 10 per cent of it is science and 90 per cent an art or else nothing. To support this estimate he pointed to the outstanding merchants of the past, who knew nothing about the present systems but possessed shrewd merchandising intuition.

While Mr. Hahn's view is undoubtedly sound, it is doubtful whether the majority of progressive merchants today would accept his ratio for art and science in retailing. It would be brought up that some of the most successful stores today are those which certainly employ more than 10 per cent of science in their operations. And again, of course, times have changed and the achievements of the past were attained against much more mediocre competition. It would be interesting, but scarcely possible, to observe a contest between the old school and new school types of retailing.

In fairness to Mr. Hahn, it must be stated, however, that he urged keeping all the new tools that are worth while, even while the neglected art of retailing is learned over again. He also stressed the weakness of figures alongside a knowledge of the facts from which the figures are obtained.

HOME FURNISHINGS SHOW.

Exhibit of 24 Ensembles to Be Held Here Starting Aug. 25.

An exhibit of twenty-four ensembles, including wall and floor coverings, upholstery and drapery fabrics, will be presented at the Grand Central Palace for one month, starting Aug. 25, by the Home Furnishings Style Forum. Admission to the display will be free. The ensembles, which comprise merchandise from leading manufacturers, are being compiled by a group of prominent stylists, decorators and merchandising executives.

The executive committee of the forum has obtained color charts from manufacturers and retailers and is making an analysis of the best-selling designs, textures and colors. From these a master color chart will be compiled. An advisory council of retail executives has been formed. The list of patrons and patronesses includes people prominent in retail educational fields.

WHOLESALE ORDERS UP.

Gain for Week and Near Last Year's, Credit Queries Indicate.

Buying at wholesale in the merchandise markets last week, as reflected in the number of inquiries received by the Credit Clearing House, gained considerably over the previous week and was only a shade under the corresponding week of last year. With the average weekly inquiries on merchandise orders in the wholesale market during 1927 taken at 100, the index of the clearing house last week stood at 100 per cent, compared with 91 per cent for the previous week and 101 per cent for the same week of last year.

The average order for the week just ended was $370, as against $432 for the week previous. Changes in recommendations during the past week were approximately 72 per cent greater than those of the same week in 1929. Overbuys for the week were active.

WHOLESALE SEASON HARDEST IN DECADE

VOLUME DOWN 20-25%

Drop in Units Smaller—Inventories Are Low and Deliveries May Suffer Later.

In several respects the current Fall wholesale season will go down in economic annals as one of the most difficult periods for manufacturers and wholesalers that they have experienced in close to a decade. Conditions are not nearly as bad as those following the post-war commodity collapse, a survey by a reporter for THE TIMES in the wholesale market indicates, inasmuch as several redeeming elements, notably the absence of unsettling stocks, are present.

While the improvement in retail sales during the week developed a slightly greater degree of optimism, the wholesale buying season thus far has been distinguished chiefly by cautious purchasing by the rank and file of retailers, a substantial reduction in the number of buyers arriving here since June, uncertainty regarding the stability of wholesale prices and considerable complaint that the ready-to-wear styles lack sufficiently new features.

Only Part of Needs Covered.

Estimates made yesterday by representatives of the leading buying offices here of the volume of advance orders thus far give evidence of the tendency of many retailers to delay their purchases. While it was held difficult to give accurate figures regarding the volume of buying, few stores have done more than cover part or most of their September needs. This condition, it was believed, will lead to early reordering, provided, of course, that retailers are favored by good selling weather in the weeks directly ahead.

The tendency to hold stocks down, which is another way to describe delayed purchasing, coupled with the price decline in a number of lines, formed the basis for the estimate of several buying executives that orders to date are running about 20 to 25 per cent under a year ago in dollar volume, with the decline in the number of units much smaller or, in frequent instances, unchanged. A substantial number of stores, including some of the largest, were reported as placing orders about equivalent to last year. Buying of lower-price lines has been an outstanding feature, although better grade merchandise has not been neglected.

This week a heavy influx of buyers is expected, inasmuch as Labor Day, marking a retail mile-post for actively launching the Fall season, is but two weeks away. In several quarters, however, the view was expressed that the peak of buyers' arrivals for the season has been reached. Last year's Fall peak was reached during the week ended Aug. 13, when THE TIMES's lists reported 1,501 buyers here. This figure is close to 20 per cent higher than the largest number for this season, 1,231, reported during the week ended Aug. 5. This was followed last week by a drop to 1,153. To retail economy measures is attributed the decline in buyers here, a development increasing the importance of the resident offices.

Lack of Heavy Stocks.

Rated as the greatest safeguard for the stability of the wholesale market, and one which differentiates it notably from the post-war period, is the lack of heavy inventories. Producers of most lines handled by department stores and similar retailers are sailing closer to the wind in the matter of stocks and orders for materials than probably ever before. Every once in a while, however, an unsatisfactory situation is disclosed, such as that developing recently in hosiery, rayon and velvets, where heavy stocks led to price reductions and unsettlement.

This generally clean condition of stocks, however, resident buying executives are pointing out to clients, may lead to difficulties in obtaining prompt deliveries later on, particularly in view of the effect of the religious holidays next month upon production. Should a heavy influx of orders calling for prompt shipment reach manufacturers at one time, closely after the retail season has opened up, delays ranging from two to four weeks at a critical period in consumer buying may inevitably develop. Emaciated stocks and assortments produce no turnover.

Governing practically all retail operations this season has been the effect of the severe drop in commodity prices. Retailers have bought so that they will be able to offer lower prices to the consumer. This has tended to shift buying to sources which can meet the price demand, with selections of "good numbers" scattered throughout the length and breadth of the markets. Resistance has been put forth to lower levels by some producers, who maintain the offering of better quality is a superior method. Retailers have been only partly convinced by this reasoning, and general revision of price ranges in ready-to-wear has been urged as a beneficial step.

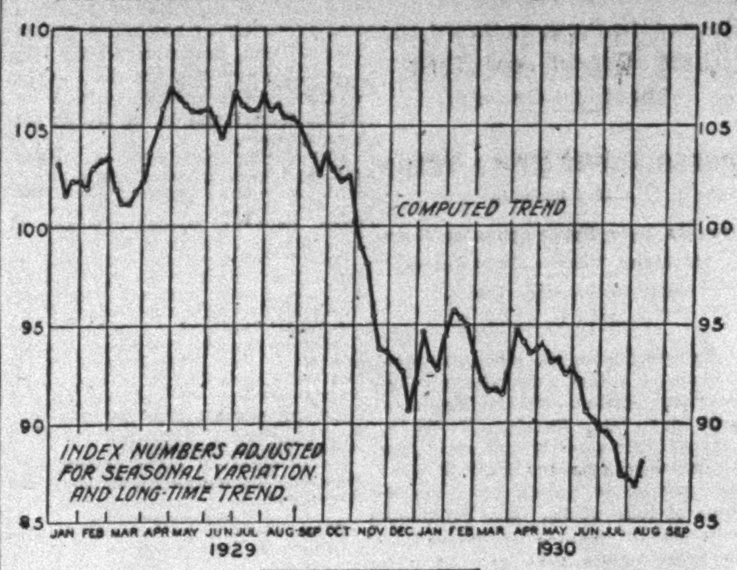
Retarded Advance Buying.

This division of opinion on price policy undoubtedly developed early uncertainty regarding the stability of wholesale prices and retarded advance buying. Statements that commodity prices are scraping bottom are beginning to assume more weight and influence.

The view that the absence of radical style changes will hamper consumer buying has been challenged with the assertion that the new styles, unlike those which started the Fall season a year ago, are decidedly wearable and salable. In addition, within the next ten days the new models reflecting the latest Paris openings will be available. Values in both coats and dresses were held decidedly superior to those of a year ago.

In the final analysis, the outcome of the Fall and Winter season will remain in consumer hands. The time is fast approaching for buying decisions, and by the end of September an early gauge will be had of the probable course of the new season. The effect of lessened buying power, wage cuts, unemployment, drought and other adverse factors will be encountered, but many retailers and manufacturers expect the season to be better than some forebodings have indicated. They point out that retail sales for the first seven months of this year were off only 5 per cent.

Weekly Index Scores First Gain in Ten Weeks As Automobile and Power Outputs Increase



For the first time in ten weeks the weekly index of business activity shows a gain for the week ended Aug. 9. It now stands at 88.1 (preliminary), as compared with 86.9 for the week ended Aug. 2 and 105.9 for the week ended Aug. 10, 1929. The principal factor in the rise was, of course, the sharp gain in the adjusted index of automobile production; but there was also a substantial increase in the adjusted index of electric power production and no change in the preliminary adjusted index of freight car loadings. These gains were partly offset by a further decline in the adjusted index of steel mill activity.

The preliminary adjusted index of freight car loadings for the week ended Aug. 9 is 84.2, as compared with 84.2 for the preceding week and 101.7 for the corresponding week last year. The actual number of cars loaded with revenue freight is estimated to have been about 909,000, as against 918,335 in the preceding week and 1,090,616 in the corresponding week last year.

The following table gives the combined index and the component series, each of which is adjusted for seasonal variation, long-time trend and variations in cyclical amplitudes:

	Week Ended
	Aug. 9, 1930.	Aug. 2, 1930.	Aug. 10, 1929.
Freight car loadings	*84.2	84.2	101.7
Electric power production	93.8	92.9	104.6
Steel production	79.8	82.4	124.5
Automobile production	73.0	39.4	127.1
Combined index	*88.1	86.9	105.9

CALL FOR LOW PRICES TO AFFECT QUALITIES

Bureau Officer Sees Producers Meeting Retail Demand With Inferior Goods.

Indications are that more low-specification merchandise will be produced and offered this Fall than in many seasons past because of the retail demand for lower-price goods, it was asserted yesterday by Frank Stutz, general manager of the Better Fabrics Testing Bureau. Pressure for lower prices will outrun the extent of the drop in commodity levels, he warned, with the result that manufacturers will feel obliged to take the reduction out of material content and workmanship.

In the past two weeks, Mr. Stutz added, his organization, which functions under the auspices of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, has had requests from three of the largest retail organizations in the country for quotations on contract testing, which, he said, was a clear indication that retailers are realizing the value of more precaution in the buying of merchandise. Two large stores here, he said, are considering a plan to install branches of the bureau as adjuncts to store buyers and to the receiving department to see that incoming merchandise agrees with sample.

"Retailers," Mr. Stutz declared, "should inspect deliveries more closely this year. The strong demand for low-price merchandise will leave but one alternative for it to be met at a profit to manufacturers. That is: 'Give them less than they pay for.'

"The situation therefore is such that no one will benefit by the drop in commodity prices unless steps are taken to establish a basis of trading where the specifications of tests of the merchandise form the common denominator of value. This is a more vital need of the trade as a whole than ever before because the manufacturer is held to economic values in fixing prices. The retailer does not operate on this basis, but permits the psychology of the tempo of the times to govern his appraisal of those values.

"The pressure of business conditions such as the stores have been experiencing creates a demand on the retailers for depressed prices and distress merchandise, which in turn creates a panic among the manufacturers. The trouble is that the producer is talking one language and the retailer another, with the result that purchase approaches a barter basis. The manufacturer says: 'I must get this price.' The retailer rejoins: 'The price is what I want to pay.'

"Thus there is no basis of understanding which reconciles the difference between the market price and the offered price. Economic values lose their appeal or meaning in accordance with what is 'high spot' competition. Hosiery, for example, was once made and sold as hosiery. Then it became a price football, subject to price chiseling, with the resultant unsettlement prevailing today.

"As I see it, testing and specifications will be the eventual common denominator of translating economic or basic cost into retailer or consumer values."

CHAINS TO COOPERATE.

Association Has Urged Its Members to Aid Trade Inquiry.

Requests by the Federal Trade Commission for further data from the chain store systems will be met by the fullest cooperation, it was stated yesterday by R. W. Lyons, executive vice president of the National Chain Store Association. "In initiating so comprehensive a survey and coming as it did as an entirely new thing to the chain store systems, it is not surprising that the commission has found it necessary to seek supplementary reports and information," Mr. Lyons said.

"As far as our members are concerned, and they comprise the leading chains of the country," he added, "our attitude, as it has always been, will be one of fullest cooperation. We have urged that the chain systems go the limit in supplying the requested information. However, it has been our understanding that not lack of data but the small appropriation for the work has hitherto prevented the commission from properly analyzing and interpreting the figures."

Oppose First-Class Mail Rise.

A committee of the National Retail Dry Goods Association will be appointed to consider the proposal to increase the rates on first-class mail from 2 to 2½ cents an ounce. The association feels that this rise, to be asked by the Postmaster General when Congress convenes in December, is unjustified. It points out that of all the classes of mail handled, first-class mail alone yields a profit.

FUR REORDERS TAKEN; SCHOOL WEAR SOUGHT

Early Duplicates Are Expected in Market—Lace Wool Hats Offered.

A highlight of the week's buying activity was the repeat orders received on popular-price fur merchandise, reflecting the good results retailers have had in their August sales, according to the résumé especially prepared for THE TIMES of the market report of Felix Lilienthal & Co. Activity in schoolgirl apparel was also a feature. Purchases of other ready-to-wear were well maintained and retailers by now have covered their early seasonal requirements to a considerable degree. Early reorders are likely if weather conditions prove favorable. A note of warning of delayed deliveries later on, particularly of the new and better grade merchandise, requiring time for production, was sounded.

"Manufacturers working on coats to retail at $100," the report continues, "are very busy with incoming orders and reorders, and in most instances are far behind in their deliveries. Many of our stores which opened their August fur sales report excellent business, not only on the $100 furs but also on Hudson seals, American broadtails, finer caraculs and Jap weasels. Manufacturers' delivery requirements on reorders today are two weeks.

"In dresses, cantons, flat crêpes and dull-surface satins in black and brown are favored. Adjustable waistlines, bolero treatments and unusual bodices are featured. Lingerie details in ecru and beige tints are a recurrent trimming note. Formal afternoon dresses are of satin and metal lamés in simple but elegant stylings and with long sleeves. The tailored daytime dress of sheer woolen is, from present indications, a type that will enjoy wide popularity in the Fall wardrobe. The $10.50 dress market was more active, with buyers showing more tendency to buy.

"The coat with the sectioned tunic came forward during the week. This type can be had with or without fur border from $29.50 and up, according to the fur used. The elaborate fur-bordered coat has developed in popularity also. This type can be had with caracul collar or border at $26.50. The coat with a muff, instead of cuffs, has been taking well lately. The low-placed flare is shown among the newest silhouettes, but is only being purchased in sizes 12 to 18 at prices from $29.50 up.

"In millinery, lace wool hats are being shown by some manufacturers, to be worn with the dresses made of the same material. Body hats of suède felt, velvets and all types of turbans in the new tricot and chenilles are also good. This will be worn to a great extent with the tweed coat and ensemble. We believe that the following colors will be good: black, all brown tones, cricket green, guardsman blue and rubitone."

Boys' Wear Makers to Meet.

The Boys' Wear Institute has called a meeting of boys' apparel manufacturers, to be held Thursday evening, Aug. 21, at the Governor Clinton Hotel, according to an announcement yesterday. Louis Silverbaum, boys' wear buyer of R. H. Macy & Co., Inc., will preside.

URGES CONSENT CUT IN BANKRUPTCY ACT

J. L. Herzog of Jewelers Board Would Alter Requirement in Trust Sections.

SUGGESTS 90 PER CENT

In Place of Present 100—Only 51% Required in Cases Handled in the Courts.

Revision of the bankruptcy act to make acceptance of common law adjustments by 90 per cent of creditors legal instead of the present required 100 per cent where reputable trade organizations are in control, was urged yesterday by Joseph L. Herzog, chairman of the National Adjustment Committee of the National Jewelers Board of Trade. Mr. Herzog, in commenting on President Hoover's order to investigate bankruptcy practices, criticized the present procedure, in which only 51 per cent of consents are required when situations largely administrative are handled by lawyers and the courts, and 100 per cent when controlled by business organizations.

"Financial embarrassment is a commercial disease," Mr. Herzog declared. "Petitioning in bankruptcy can be likened to a major operation, one to be avoided whenever possible. One of the most valuable alternatives is the organization of creditors under the auspices of some recognized trade or credit organization for the purpose of investigating and, in the cases of honest debtors, of effecting extensions, compositions or liquidations. Comparative to these, which are termed common law adjustments, the present bankruptcy procedure is decidedly cumbersome and relatively confiscatory. This is borne out by the facts that average dividends in bankruptcy cases are reported to be approximately 8 1-5 per cent.

Leaves Bankruptcy Stigma.

"Were there no such advantages in adjustments undertaken by trade organizations as greater economy, greater directness and greater simplicity," Mr. Herzog continued, "there would still remain in the case of an honest debtor tremendous savings in morale and prestige in escaping the stigma of bankruptcy. One would believe that public policy would place a premium on the orderly supervised common law adjustment, whereas the present law often throws almost insurmountable obstacles in the way of adjustments by requiring the consents of creditors 100 per cent in numbers and amount. Only 51 per cent are required when they are effected through bankruptcy procedure.

"While there may be obvious reasons that the percentage of required consents, when there is no court control, should be somewhat higher than when under the supervision of the courts, there does not seem to be any logical basis for an adjustment under a trade control requiring the consent of every single creditor, and regardless of the amount of his claim. This works to defeat justice by inviting preferences or unnecessary bankruptcy. If 90 per cent of creditors are convinced that an adjustment is equitable, no great hardship can be suffered by a 10 per cent minority of a different opinion. Neither under the supervision of a reputable trade organization is there any danger of conspiracy between creditors and debtor, as has so often occurred in bankruptcy cases. If conspiracy were possible with 90 per cent, then in all likelihood it would be so with 100 per cent.

"Who are those who refuse to consent in an adjustment approved by a predominant number of creditors?" Mr. Herzog asked. "The refusal to consent, almost without exception, can be traced to a desire to take advantage of power thus put in the hands of a negligible minority. A single creditor involved for a comparatively insignificant amount may become the arbiter and possess the weapons with which to levy tribute in the form of exacting preferential payments or consigning some wholly worthy debtor to bankruptcy and cocreditors to increased losses.

"Within the twelve years' experience of the adjustment committee of the National Jewelers Board of Trade, the most consistent dissenters have been some credit indemnity companies, creditors involved in negligible amounts, or houses which are notorious for a policy of non-cooperation with a view of exacting preference.

"The present practice would seem to force the administration of embarrassed estates away from where they largely belong. The correction of this anomaly would be one important step in the direction of making it possible for business to function within its own sphere," Mr. Herzog concluded.

TARIFF CHANGES.

New Zealand Tax on Oils and Wood Up—Argentina Allows Entry of Packed Apples.

The weekly summary of changes in foreign tariffs, prepared especially for THE TIMES by the local office of the Department of Commerce, follows:

Additional alterations in the New Zealand customs tariff, effective Aug. 13, are reported by Trade Commissioner Julian B. Foster, Wellington. Among the articles subject to increased import duties are tobacco, flavoring essences, logs, laths, shingles and rough-sawn timber, spices, mineral lubricating oils and vegetable and animal oils in containers of less than one gallon. The import duty on watches was decreased.

An Argentine Presidential decree of Aug. 11, 1930, modifies the regulations governing the importation of fresh fruit to permit the importation of apples packed in barrels throughout the present crop year. The previous regulations had prescribed certain packing regulations, the effect of which was to exclude barreled apples.

Must Indicate Value and Price.

The attention of exporters to Australia is called to the fact that the recent tariff changes included a provision which makes it necessary to indicate on invoices of goods subject to ad valorem, alternative or composite duties the current domestic value and selling price respectively of outside containers, since these are now separately dutiable.

British Guiana recently increased import duties on sugar of all kinds from $2 to $6 per 100 pounds under the general tariff and from $1 to $3 per 100 pounds under the British preferential tariff. The duty on confectionery has been increased from 50 to 60 per cent under the general tariff and from 16 2-3 to 20 per cent under the British preferential tariff.

The Costa Rican Consul General in New York advises that under Costa Rican consular regulations commercial invoices may be substituted for consular invoices only if they conform to the latter, not only in respect to the details presented but also in respect to size, color and printing of the invoice form. The Consul General further points out that the certification of a commercial invoice requires more time.

Cuban Rates on Cars Higher.

A Cuban Presidential decree increases the rates of import duty on wooden lasts for footwear, wooden heels for shoes, and box cars and all kinds of cars for railways except passenger coaches for street railways and mine cars.

Italy, during the 1930-31 season, will allow the importation of 200,000 quintals of potatoes for seed purposes only. The importation of potatoes is ordinarily forbidden. It is further ruled that these potatoes must originate in localities immune from diseases or parasites, and cannot enter Italy later than March 31, 1931.

Firms in New York and vicinity desiring detailed information regarding any of the above-mentioned changes may obtain it from the district office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, 734 Custom House.

Smaller Establishments, in Good Locations, Nearing Equal Terms With Large Stores.

New developments in "advertising at the point-of-purchase," as effected by Jos. S. Arvid Co., Inc., of New York, are now enabling independent retail stores, show rooms, sales agencies, and banks to repair much of the disadvantage they have suffered from not being able to match advertising dollars with the big fellows.

By means of ample funds and a nation-wide program, moreover, the Arvid Company has been able to get their complete service to the individual merchant down to charges varying between $4 and $8 a week.

The Arvid Company's pamphlet—"Actually Selling the Passerby"—tells the interesting story of how a group of experts (whose aggregate experience runs almost the entire gamut of business) got together, selected and trained a staff of merchandising writers, and are now assisting an impressive circle of merchants to realize on the rentals, fixtures, merchandise and displays into which the are putting so much of hard-earned money.

Auto dealers, bakeries, banks, barbers, beauty shops, book stores, bus companies, butchers, confectioners, delicatessens, druggists, dry goods stores, dyers and cleaners, floor coverings, florists, furriers, grocers, hardware, insurance, jewelers, laundries, leather goods, men's and boys' wear, millinery, opticians, radios, real estate, restaurants, shoes, sport goods, toys, stationers, valeterias, women's wear, will find the pamphlet of most timely and practical interest.

BUSINESS AWAITS EFFECT OF DROUGHT

Hesitancy Marks Situation for Week, but the General Trend Is Downward.

SOME ENCOURAGING SIGNS

STEEL CONTINUES TO LAG

With the exception of automobile and electrical production, all the principal indices of business activity pointed downward last week. The rise in automobile output came as a result of the reopening of plants, including Ford factories, after the midsummer shutdown. While it lifted the index of production sharply up from its recent levels, it did not restore it to the levels which obtained prior to the shutdown. The gain in electrical output was more than the amount seasonally due at this time and lifted the adjusted index of electricity production to the best figures since the first week of June. This was the most encouraging sign of improving business to appear recently, but it will not be accepted as a forecast of a general upturn until it has been corroborated by further sustained gains.

The steel industry continued to present an unfavorable picture. Ingot production of the industry as a whole dropped to 52 per cent last week, compared with 54 per cent the previous week and 56 per cent for the four weeks preceding that. Operations of the United States Steel Corporation continued unchanged at 63 per cent of capacity. There was a further reduction in the composite prices compiled by The Iron Age which carried the price of steel down to 2.156 cents a pound, the lowest since February, 1922, and the price of pig iron to $16.88 a gross ton, the lowest since 1915.

Outlook Obscured by Drought.

The outlook for the steel industry has been obscured by the drought. Until such time as the full effects of this can be measured, buyers are withholding their commitments. It is argued that since the automobile industry, one of steel's best customers, has been sustained thus far this year principally by sales of light cars, the impairment of rural purchasing power by the drought will have a serious effect upon automobile operations, and consequently upon steel.

As for the drought itself, scattered rains throughout the affected area relieved the situation, but it was uncertain at the close of the week whether the dry spell had been completely broken. The confused point of view which obtains as to the ultimate effects of the drought was illustrated by the uncertain movements of grain prices. The close of the week found grain prices generally lower. Cotton fell to a new low price and copper prices were reported shaded to 10¼ cents a pound by customs smelters. As a result there was a further drop in the general price level. The Annalist index of wholesale commodity prices was off 0.6 point to 121.6.

Bank Clearings Again Down.

Bank clearings were lower on the week with respect both to the previous week and the corresponding week of last year. Building contracts for the first week of August, as reported to the F. W. Dodge Corporation, showed a daily average of $13,537,800, which was 24.3 per cent below the figures for the corresponding week of last year and still further below the comparable figures for the two preceding years. The week's record of failures showed some improvement. A total of 441 was reported to R. G. Dun & Co., a drop of eleven from the previous week and comparing with 368 defaults in the corresponding week of last year.

Reports by telegraph to THE NEW YORK TIMES from the various Federal Reserve districts reflected the general cautiousness that is being displayed by business pending a clearer view of the significance of the drought and the prospects for Fall recovery.

In the stock market the week was mostly given over to reaction, but a sharp upturn occurred during the final trading sessions. How far the rally was occasioned by the overcrowded position of the short interest and how far it represented a more hopeful attitude toward business prospects remained a matter of conjecture.

AUTUMN SALES MARK TRADE.

Improvement Expected Here With Approach of Fall Season.

Trade in the New York area last week was featured by the usual Fall sales in various lines. Thus far there has been little indication of a general pick-up in business, but buying is expected to improve with the nearer approach of Autumn.

The stock market underwent a sharp reversal of trend in the last two days of the week, when prices rose on closing out of short commitments. Money continued generally easy, although the call loan rate was slightly firmer at 2½ per cent. The continued activity of the Federal Reserve Bank in behalf of easy credit was shown in an increase of $30,000,000 in holdings of United States Government securities and an advance of $20,000,000 in holdings of bills.

Of ninety-six lines of business in New York City reporting to Bradstreet's last week, one was better than, twenty were equal to and seventy-five were below the levels of a

Small Chain Companies Lead Larger Rivals in Holding Gains

The part played by the small chain-store company in maintaining the sales averages for the entire industry appears from an analysis of the records of the first fifty companies reporting for July and the seven months. Six of the fifteen largest companies showed decreases for the seven months, while only three of the next fifteen in point of sales totals showed decreases.

For July, when the sales of all the companies were more than 3 per cent below the same month last year, only four of the first fifteen companies reported increases. In the next fifteen companies, however, seven showed increases. It is explained that the smaller companies are in a better position to increase their sales volume through expansion, while the larger companies find sound expansion a slower process.

TRUSTS SHOW TREND TO DIVIDEND STOCKS

DEFINITE INCOME SOUGHT

Recent Reports for Half-Year Seen as Indicating Need for Adjusting Portfolios.

Readjustment of their portfolios to conform more to their capital structures has been one of the problems with which investment trusts have been faced as a result of declining opportunities to take advantage of market appreciation to produce income, it has been noted in financial circles recently.

Because trusts have not been in a position many times this year to sell securities in their portfolios at prices higher than those at which they were purchased, the significance of dividend income has become far greater than many of the trusts expected, it is said. The result of this has been to buy stocks which would insure at least sufficient income to meet obligations, particularly on senior securities, it has been pointed out.

One economist has said that an investment trust may market different classes of securities in proportion to the securities of those classes held in its portfolio. If, for example, a trust devotes one-third of its portfolio to bonds, it may sell proportionately that amount of bonds, on the theory that the interest which must be paid is secured by the income from the bonds.

This is, to a large extent, the principle on which the British investment trusts are set up, and it has been temporarily imposed upon trusts in this country by the failure of the stock markets to show the appreciation on which American trusts originally were based, it is asserted.

Slump Alters the Situation.

In the beginning, American trusts based their greatest hopes of prosperous existence on the rising value of securities. This was particularly true among those formed in 1928 and the first nine months of 1929, and has been sufficiently justified, as a basis, by the enormous appreciations which had been realized up to and throughout that period, bankers say.

Since then, however, with the sharp and sudden declines last Fall and the failure of any substantial recovery in values since that time, the picture is changed, observers have noted. The income from appreciation is gone temporarily, while the necessity for meeting obligations on preferred stocks and bonds still remains.

The question as to whether present conditions give to the trust which has been organized without any senior securities outstanding and without a dividend obligation on its common stock an advantage over those which have one or all of these obligations has been raised. It has been pointed out that the former type may be in a position to devote its investment power to the purchase of securities in which it may have definite confidence for the future, regardless of whether or not those are income producing securities.

Chance of Creating Reserve.

On the other hand, it is said, the trust devoting a percentage of its holdings to income-producing securities has a surer chance of creating

LATE MOVES IMPERIL OLD RAIL TRADITION

BELIEF UPHELD IN PAST

Van Sweringens Get Missouri Pacific, While Baltimore & Ohio Acquires the Alton.

A venerable tradition of the railroad field threatens to go by the board as a result of recent carrier activities, it was said in informed circles last week. These developments were the acquisition of control in the Missouri Pacific Railroad by the Van Sweringens and the purchase of the Chicago & Alton by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. The tradition that they affected was that Eastern and Western railroads should terminate at the Mississippi.

This belief had been upheld vigorously by the railroads in the past. Failure of the Gould transcontinental system early in the century was in part ascribed to the fact that it violated this railroad lore by crossing the "Father of Waters." More recently L. F. Loree sought to break the general opinion in railroad circles by the formation of a fifth trunk line, but he also was unsuccessful.

Whenever it appeared likely that an Eastern railroad would move from the path laid out by the unwritten law, the Western roads would retaliate by diverting their traffic to Eastern lines that had adhered to the old methods. This was an effectual way to maintain the tradition untarnished.

Blow to Old-Time Rail Views.

The old view received a blow, however, when the Interstate Commerce Commission announced its final consolidation plan in December. This revived the fifth-trunk-line idea in substantially the same form as put forward by Mr. Loree. Both the commission and Mr. Loree favored linking the Lehigh Valley with the Wabash, the effect being to form a system extending from New York to Kansas City and Omaha. This demonstrated that the commission believed the tradition was in a way to become obsolete.

This year it became known that O. P. and M. J. Van Sweringen of Cleveland, owners of the Chesapeake & Ohio and allied lines, the Nickel Plate and the Erie, had extended the mileage of roads under their control to more than 20,000 by purchase of the Missouri Pacific. This put them in control of lines extending from New York to Denver and El Paso, with connections to Salt Lake City and San Francisco. Later it became evident that they were anxious to acquire the Western Pacific and full contral of the Denver & Rio Grande Western.

Mindful of the Mississippi bugaboo, the Van Sweringens made it clear that no consolidation of their Eastern with their Western systems was contemplated. However, the fact that they control aEstern and Western systems is still a matter of discussion in the railroad field, and the eventual linking of their two systems is not considered impossible.

B. & O. Crosses the Mississippi.

Recently the B. & O., which had originally sought the Wabash for a Western extension, but to which the commission allocated the Chicago & Alton, bought the latter road. This put the B. & O. across the Mississippi to Kansas City. In this case, the attitude of respect to the tradition maintained by the Van Sweringens was disregarded. Control of the C. & A. was made by direct purchase by the B. & O., and the management of the latter road intends putting the two roads into a single system.

This change of viewpoint in respect to the Mississippi tradition has suggested to railroad men some striking possibilities. They point out that the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad have long had close traffic relations and that nothing in law prevents their uniting into a transcontinental line. In the same way, it was pointed out that merger of the Union Pacific with the New York Central would be at least as logical as acquisition of the Chicago & Alton by the Baltimore & Ohio.

These suggestions are admittedly visionary, but ten years ago the idea of 20,000 miles of line being under control of two brothers would have been considered visionary, and the advances since made toward consolidation were then mere subjects of speculation.

OIL PRODUCERS URGE CUT IN STORED STOCK

Withdrawals Over Long Period Viewed as Essential to Revival of Industry.

SUPPLY EXCEEDS DEMAND

Proration Held to Be Inadequate, as Surplus Has Increased 50,795 Barrels Daily.

Although the various proration agreements in effect to restrict the production of crude oil throughout the country have resulted in a decline of approximately 525,000 barrels daily in the current supply of petroleum since August of last year, many executives of the oil industry believe this method of controlling the output fails of its full purpose until it is successful in reducing the flow to a point where a substantial withdrawal of oil from storage can be assured.

In spite of this nation-wide curtailment of production, there was an increase of 50,795 barrels daily in oil stocks during the first six months of this year, according to the latest revised figures of the American Petroleum Institute. No radical change in the outlook for the industry is expected, regardless of how rapidly the demand may increase, until the current supply, both domestic and import, actually is kept below current demand for a considerable period, it is explained.

Intensive efforts on the part of the leaders of the petroleum industry during the last few years have finally resulted in bringing the output of crude oil down almost to the amount of the current demand. However, owing to the huge quantity of crude oil and its products in storage and the enormous potential production that has been developed in the meantime, the industry continues in a more or less unsettled state, with the prices of crude oil and also of its refined products at unusually low levels. Before a general improvement can take place, it is argued, there must be not only a steady withdrawal of stocks over a period of months but the important factors also must be thoroughly convinced that the proration agreements will be observed strictly by the producers.

Huge Stocks Unnecessary.

The price of crude oil, which to a great extent governs the prosperity of the industry, is gauged not so much as to the amount in storage, but as to the outlook for production in the future, it is said. However, it is asserted that with improved transportation facilities and the known underground reserves, it no longer is necessary to carry huge stocks above ground. These stocks, it is estimated, are now costing the industry, at a minimum, $175,000,000 annually in insurance, interest, evaporation and storage charges, exclusive of inventory losses. That this last item is important is shown by the fact that there was an inventory loss of about $30,000,000, or more than 80 cents a barrel, on the 36,000,000 barrels of crude oil carried in storage by the Sinclair Crude Oil Purchasing Company, which was absorbed by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana through the recent purchase of this company.

Although the proration agreements have brought about some changes in the ideas of the leaders of the industry in the past few years, it is said the industry is still suffering from old theories and experiences that required producing the oil as fast as possible. It is not the policy of the coal industry or any other mining industry to place on the market as quickly as possible after discovery the mineral product regardless of the cost. If such was the case, the market in almost any mineral would be completely demoralized, it is stated. The general

ELECTRICITY RATES HELD FAIR TO ALL

FINDS SACRIFICE OF PROFIT

The logical conclusion from electric light and power rate data and discussion is that existing rates for different classes of service are not inconsistent nor discriminatory, according to L. R. Nash of the Stone & Webster Service Corporation.

"The basic policy under which the electric power business is carried on, subject to regulatory restrictions, does not differ substantially from that found in other enterprises, although this consistency is not always understood," Mr. Nash says.

"A survey of the electric power industry leads to the conclusion that it is not seeking maximum present profits but that it is making substantial sacrifices through comparatively unprofitable rates to build up a volume of business which may become profitable in the future. The reductions in rates which have been made and are being made clearly embody this intent."

Decline in Residence Rates.

As an illustration of this downward trend, Mr. Nash says that average residence rates per unit in the United States show a decline from 14.4 cents in 1900 to 8.7 cents in 1913, 8 cents in 1920, 6.80 cents in 1927, and 6.55 cents in 1928. The estimated average for 1929 is 6.20 cents. Commercial and industrial rates have shown less consistent trends because of the greater effect on them of fluctuations in fuel, investment and other cost.

Taking up criticism of the relative rates charged for different classes of electric service, Mr. Nash says that in 1928 the following consumption and rates applied to average customers for different classes of service:

Averages for U. S. A., 1928.	Kw. H. per Month.	Rate per Kw. H.
Industrial	6,400	1.44 cents
Commercial	275	4.55 cents
Residential	38	6.55 cents

Industrial service, including wholesale power and power sold for railroad electrification, amounted to about two-thirds of the entire sales of the industry to ultimate consumers; commercial service, including lighting and small power, required about one-sixth of the total sales, and residential service, including domestic use and some farm service, amounted to about one-eighth of the total.

Increment Cost Reasonable.

Rates for wholesale power are in most cases highly competitive, Mr. Nash says, and while the yield is relatively low on an allocated investment, it is nevertheless clear that the increment cost of this service is less to a reasonable degree than the revenue derived therefrom, increment cost meaning the actual difference in over-all cost of service with and without the business in question.

Service in the so-called commercial class is not generally subjected to keen competition, and domestic service is generally considered as noncompetitive, although many home appliances provide close competition between electricity and gas, ice and other products.

"In spite of the difficulties of allocation, relating not only to investment but also operating expenses," Mr. Nash says, "a number of companies have made estimates embodying the best judgment of their skilled engineers, accountants and executives. In general, the results indicate that the maximum return upon allocated investment is derived from commercial lighting and small power,

Net Earnings of 95 Utility Systems Advance; Up 5.06% in June and 4.13% in First Half Year

Gross earnings of ninety-five public utility systems, operating gas, electric light, heat, power and traction properties, increased 3.28 per cent in June, compared with the corresponding month last year, according to Department of Commerce figures announced yesterday. June gross earnings were put at $189,000,000, against $183,000,000 in June last year. Net earnings were $83,000,000, against $79,000,000, a gain of 5.06 per cent.

For the first half of the year gross earnings totaled $1,191,500,000, against $1,154,750,000 in the first half of 1929, while net earnings were $528,500,000, against $507,500,000, showing gains of 3.18 per cent and 4.13 per cent, respectively. The compilation includes virtually all utility companies in the country, except telephone and telegraph corporations.

Trends in the gas industry were mixed in the first six months of the current year, according to reports received by the American Gas Association from companies representing 90 per cent of the manufactured gas industry and 70 per cent of the natural gas industry. Manufactured gas sales increased 2 per cent from the first half of 1929, while revenues gained 1.4 per cent. Natural gas sales, decreased 4.8 per cent, and revenues 4.2 per cent.

Depressed conditions in industry and general business have retarded the rate of growth of the gas utility industry, which was 8 per cent for manufactured gas and 20 per cent for natural gas in 1929, compared with 1928.

In both gas divisions, substantial declines were registered in industrial-commercial sales, the analysis shows. Manufactured gas companies, however, offset their decline by substantial increases in house-heating sales.

A contrasting analysis shows that in the first half of 1930, compared with 1929, manufactured gas sales gained 2 per cent, natural gas sales declined 4.8 per cent, bituminous coal production decreased 9 per cent, coke production dropped 10 per cent, crude petroleum output fell 5 per cent, pig iron production declined 16 per cent, steel ingot production decreased 21 per cent, automobile production fell 32 per cent, freight car loadings dropped 9 per cent and electric power production gained 1.7 per cent.

Revival of Business in Fall Is Expected by Many Employers and Trade Observers.

U. S. STEEL LEAD FOLLOWED

Whatever other means may be adopted to put corporations back upon a large paying basis, general wage-cutting will not be the method employed, according to business executives, Wall Street observers and business statistical bureaus. Most authorities regard the danger of wage-cutting as past with the approach of Fall, when a revival of business is generally expected. They regard the worst that has happened as being fully stated in the report of the Bureau of Labor, which covered reductions through June 15. This report showed a small percentage of wage reductions, although it indicated that the average income of workers had been reduced to a large extent through part-time operations and cuts in operating forces.

The United States Steel Corporation is credited generally with having pronounced a policy against wage-cutting about three months ago, just when serious consideration was being given to the subject by executives.

Farrell's Stand on Wages.

James A. Farrell, president of the corporation, said in his talk at the annual meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute:

"I heard a man say the other day that wages should come down. I said, 'Oh, no; wages are not coming down; you can make up your mind to that fact. If you are going out to sell your goods and eliminate your profits, and expect to get it out of the men in the mills, why, you are greatly mistaken.' "

Several times since then when Mr. Farrell or other executives of the United States Steel Corporation were asked regarding the attitude of the corporation on this matter, inquirers were referred to this statement as "still holding good."

The report of the Labor Bureau shows that in the month ended Jan. 15 only one steel plant reported a reduction in wages, and this was only 2.5 per cent and affected only forty-two employes. The following month no reductions were reported and in the month ended March 15 four plants reported reductions averaging 2.3 per cent and affecting 492 employes. In the month ended April 15 three reported cuts, averaging 2.2 per cent and affecting 494 employes, and in the month ended June 15, the last period covered by the report, six plants reduced wages an average of 4.5 per cent and 1,600 employes were affected.

In all, the number of wage earners in the steel industry who have been affected by reductions is 2,679, less than 1 per cent of the total number employed.

In reductions in working forces and hours the effect of the business depression has been far greater. Of 1,775 plants making iron and steel, 1 per cent were idle in June, 47 per cent were running half-time and the remainder were running on full time. Only 22 per cent, however, were operating with full normal forces.

Effect of Wages on Industry.

The Standard Statistics Company, in a report on a survey made recently, said:

"In spite of the fact that wage reductions, by both direct and indirect methods, have been fairly numerous during recent months, the majority of industrial employers, while perhaps of the opinion that a general downward readjustment of labor rates is justified, are opposing such a movement because of the retarding influence they believe it would exert on a trade revival.

"Although other wage cuts probably will be made in the early future, it is at the present time questionable that a widespread slashing of rates will be witnessed.

"Employment in manufacturing industries, which currently is 13 per cent less than a year ago, is expected to register gradual improvement between now and Winter. Resumption of more nearly normal operations in the automobile, iron and steel and numerous other trades is likely to result in a re-engagement during the near term of many persons released earlier this year and in the extension of working time of most of those now employed. At the same time harvesting and marketing of leading

New Danish Company to List Phone Numbers of the World

Publication of telephone numbers for the whole world, until now in private hands, will be undertaken by a corporation formed for that purpose in Copenhagen. The 1930 edition of the ATI, as the Annuarie Telephonique Internationale is called, will contain about 50,000 names representing thirty-eight countries. Although most of the names are European, there are given names in North and South America, Australia, the Dutch East Indies and other places.

The company will have capital of $125,000, of which $95,000 will be 7 per cent preferred stock, and the balance common stock.

INVESTORS TURNING TO HIGH-GRADE BONDS

Aggregate of Issues Marketed Since Jan. 1 Far Exceeds That of a Year Ago.

PRICES UP SEVERAL POINTS

Resumption of Activity After Labor Day Expected to Follow Present Lull.

Return of the "old-time active bond market," which has been awaited ever since the stock market slump last Autumn, may or may not materialize, according to investment bankers, but the belief is expressed freely that 1930 will stand out as one of the most active years that the bond market has had in some time. Despite the present lull in new bond financing, which is expected annually at this season, the aggregate of issues marketed thus far this year continues far ahead of that offered last year and the price levels of high-grade domestic and foreign bonds are several points higher than they were a year ago.

The view is held in many banking quarters that sentiment regarding investments has changed considerably during the last few years and that the old-time conservative investor whose strong-box was lined chiefly with prime bond issues is inclined to keep at least a portion of his funds invested in standard dividend-paying stocks. With the recent declines in stock prices, it is argued that both stocks and bonds are being considered in terms of yield and that private investors are not always buying bonds simply because they are bonds.

Bankers and others who have made public their views on the return to the old-time bond market do not all have precisely the same conception of such a market. If it means a market where investors largely ignore stock and think wholly in terms of mortgages, debentures and notes, it is likely that the return of such a market is far distant.

Buying by Institutions.

At present the demand for bonds is largely from insurance companies and other institutional buyers. Private investors, as a group, either lack the capital to invest in bonds because of losses in stocks or because they are awaiting a turn in the stock market which will enable them to switch to the bonds. Bond salesmen during recent months have not had much success in distributing issues to small investors.

As is always the case, a sharp rise in bond prices usually influences hesitating buyers to step into the market, and the prices thus paid are usually well above the lows. Cheap money usually has the effect of stimulating the bond market, but money rates have been low for some months without causing any great rush to buy bonds.

However, the gradual upward movement of bond prices has grealty improved the tone of the market this Summer, so that, with the seasonal gain in activity which usually comes soon after Labor Day, it is expected that the bond market will give a good account of itself. One of the reasons for the steadiness of late has been the fact that investment bankers are not inclined to market issues which might be doubtful sellers. For this reason a glance at the list of new issues put out this year reveals that the bonds for the most part have been high grade.

Tide Water Associated Oil Interests Form Holding Company as Sinclair Deal Goes On

The Mission Securities Company has been formed under Nevada laws with nominal capitalization as a holding organization for the 1,076,000 shares of common stock of the Tide Water Associated Oil Company, which was recently purchased by Bancamerica-Blair interests, and executives of the Tide Water Associated Oil Company from the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

The Mission company has contracted to buy for $21.47 a share, payable in three instalments, the Tide Water Associated stock bought from Standard of New Jersey on June 2. The first instalment was paid when the Nevada company signed the agreement to purchase the stock. The succeeding instalments are payable on June 1, 1931, and June 1, 1932.

The investment, at the price named, is $23,101,720. Officers of the new company represent directly the officials of the Tide Water Associated Oil Company and their friends.

Merger negotiations between the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Corporation and the Tide Water Associated Oil Company have been going on for more than five months. It is believed that it is Sinclair's plan to consummate the merger with the Prairie Oil and Gas Company and the Prairie Pipe Line Company and then to proceed with plans for acquisition of the Tide Water Associated Oil Company.

Standard of New Jersey received its holdings in Tide Water Associated through an exchange of its stock in the Tide Water Oil Company when Tide Water Oil and Associated Oil were consolidated in 1926. The New Jersey company held about 40 per cent of the common stock in the old Tide Water Company, which was reduced to about 20 per cent in the consolidated company.

The reason for the sale of this stock by the Standard Oil Company never has been given, but in some quarters it is believed the stock was disposed of in order that the New Jersey company could consummate a merger with the Standard Oil Company of California in the event that the proposed merger of Standard Oil of New York and the Vacuum Oil Company finally is approved by the Federal courts. The holding of such a large block of Tide Water Associated stock, it is asserted, might prevent a merger of these companies.

SHORT SELLING NOW POSSIBLY A RECORD

STOCK LOAN RATES CITED

AMATEUR BEARS IN FIELD

Condition Regarded as Factor of Potential Strength for the Market.

Short-selling of stocks by amateur bears, coupled with successive raids on security values by bear pools, has resulted in the accumulation in the last few weeks of possibly the largest short interest in the history of the New York Stock Exchange, according to brokers in Wall Street. Several authorities estimated the short position last week at 5,000,000 shares, which would be several times the size of the short interest during most of the panic of last Fall, when an investigation by the New York Stock Exchange disclosed that short commitments on the worst days of the break did not exceed one-seventh of 1 per cent of the total stock outstanding.

There are 1,269,861,000 shares listed on the Stock Exchange. A short interest of 5,000,000 shares would therefore be approximately two-fifths of 1 per cent of the number of listed shares.

The chief indication of the existence of an unusually large short interest at the present time, brokers say, is the number of standard issues which are lending flat on the Stock Exchange. At the close of the market on Thursday, out of a group of 340 active issues on which loan rates are furnished daily to Stock Exchange members by the loan group, 183 issues were lending flat, and two issues were lending at a premium. The entire group of railroad issues, representing a market value of more than $9,000,000,000, was lending flat, with the exception of two issues, Wheeling & Lake Erie common and preferred, which were lending at premiums of one thirty-second and one-sixteenth of a point, respectively. Borrowers of the latter issue were compelled to pay a daily premium of $6.25 for each 100 shares.

Strength Seen in Situation.

With the possible exception of May and June, there has never been a time when the short interest has been so large, brokers declare. During the slump last Fall it was the absence of an adequate short interest, following several years of rising security prices, which caused acute weakness and the absence of a cushion of bids under the market, bankers explain. The large short interest existing at present is therefore regarded as a factor of potential strength.

Among the active issues which have been lending flat recently have been Case Threshing, International Harvester, Vanadium Steel, Gillette Safety Razor, Allied Chemical, Air Reduction and standard rails, such as Santa Fe, Pennsylvania, New York Central and New Haven. While it is not unusual for inactive stocks such as Crucible Steel and United States Steel preferred to lend flat even in bull markets, the spectacle of standard industrial issues lending flat is extremely uncommon, brokers say. In addition to the stocks which are lending flat, there is a large demand for many other standard issues, such as United States Steel common, American Can, Warner Brothers, Bethlehem Steel, Johns-Manville and Westinghouse Electric, which have been lending at 1 per cent, or 1½ per cent less than recent call money rates.

It is customary for standard industrial issues to lend at or slightly lower than the call money rate, and for standard rail stocks to lend from one-half of 1 per cent to 1 per cent less than the rate for industrial issues. When the lending rate on a stock is considerably less than the call rate, it is an indication, brokers say, that the stock is hard to borrow, and possibly that there is an unwieldy short interest.

The reasons for the fact that railroad stocks are lending flat at the present time are three in number, brokers assert. The first is the large short interest which has been built up in rail stocks this year, as a result of the decline in the earnings of these issues, it is said. The second reason advanced is the withdrawal of rail issues from Wall Street through investment buying. The third is the desire of brokers to "sweeten" their loan envelopes with railroad stocks, thus diversifying the collateral upon which they obtain loans. These three factors have been responsible for an increase in the borrowing demand for rail issues and a decrease in the supply.

Private Borrowing Extensive.

While the lending rates fixed by the loan group on the floor of the Stock Exchange are an indication of the size of the short interest, only a part of the bear contingent borrows its short commitments through the loan group. Many of the large bear operators, it is said, prefer to borrow stock privately, thus keeping their market position secret. These bear operators, for example, sell United States Steel—or any other issue—only through commission houses which are known to have a long position in the stock sufficiently large to enable the seller to borrow the shares without going to the loan group or to another broker.

Many of the largest bear operators have maintained their short position for several months, disregarding temporary rallies. The success which these men have had on the short side has stimulated many smaller traders to follow their example, brokers say. The nervousness of these amateur bears is held to have been largely responsible for the squeeze which developed on the Stock Exchange in Friday's late trading, when several active issues advanced at the rate of a point a minute.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Move Irregularly at Week-End—Wheat, Corn and Cotton Go Lower.

The week ended yesterday in both financial and commercial markets with a good deal of uncertainty. Only in cotton was there a distinct and positive movement; its price fell more rapidly than on any other day of the week, making the week's total decline 1 cent per pound, or nearly 8 per cent. Wheat and corn declined, wheat losing all of the previous day's recovery and corn not quite one-half. The stock market moved with little reference to these other staple markets; it was engaged in an effort at readjustment of its own; which, however, made no great headway yesterday. The vigorous advance of the day before was followed by rather numerous advances yesterday, of smaller scope; but the movement was irregular and there were some declines.

Wheat's decline for the week was 6 cents a bushel; corn has lost about 1 cent. In the week's confused series of events and estimates bearing on the harvest outcome, the two reassuring facts are the ending of the drought and the evidence that there will be no shortage of food crops as a whole. It is even possible that the damage to the corn crop may have been overdrawn, at least in the descriptive dispatches and in the conjectural estimates of loss since July 31, when the data for the official forecast was compiled. It is never possible to know the extent to which apprehension that the destructive influences will continue may have colored judgment in such cases. That the September government estimate will be lower than last week's is a matter of reasonable certainty, in the light both of present knowledge and of past experience with exactly similar corn-belt droughts. But the doubtful question is the actual scope of this month's additional impairment, and the Chicago corn market, at any rate, appears to lean to the view that it has not been as great as was at first imagined.

From the Labor Department's index of wholesale prices for July, a comprehensive idea of the very recent movement of such values can be obtained. It shows, more clearly than any other compilation, how generally the continuous downward movement of prices affected the different commodity markets. Out of 550 products used in the compilation, 236 scored some decline last month and 257 were unchanged. Few except the less important articles of commerce escaped the downward adjustment. Whereas farm products as a group fell 6½ per cent last month, nonagricultural commodities were reduced 2¼ per cent and finished manufactures 2½. For all commodities, the month's decline of 3¼ per cent brought the general average 14¼ per cent below that of July, 1929, which was that year's highest.

The average is down 16 per cent from September, 1928, and is slightly more than 8 per cent under the lowest of the "deflation period," reached by the bureau's computation in January, 1922. In this the government figures do not agree with all the private estimates, but they are generally recognized as statistically the more accurate. Its present average is the lowest since July of 1916; but prices in the Autumn of 1916 had already risen nearly 20 per cent above the 1913 average, and they still, therefore, retain that much of the war-time enhancement.

In the Labor Bureau's employment figures for July an increase of unemployed had been expected, both because of the trade reaction itself and because of the traditional decline of manufacturing activity in midsummer. The 2½ per cent reduction of numerical employment fulfills the expectation, but the reduction in total payrolls is much greater. Earlier in the year the index numbers of employes and of payrolls were reduced each month in about the same percentage, indicating that the rate of wages was not being cut; in March the payroll index actually rose while the employment index fell. For July, however, while numerical employment decreased 4⅝ per cent, payrolls were cut 9⅞ per cent.

INVESTORS TURN TO HIGH-GRADE BONDS

tional and city governments and corporations located in almost every quarter of the globe. With little public appetite for foreign loans existing at present, the best of these applicants have obtained short-term bank loans which involve no public financing. These may later be refunded by long-term bond issues or by renewals of the loans for short periods.

The municipal bond market has taken the lead in recent weeks, due to conditions peculiar to that market. The supply has been short, so that the normal demand for this time of year has dried up most of the offerings. High-grade municipals now afford yields of less than 4 per cent, many considerably less, with a few slightly more, depending largely on the amount of financing the communities have done recently. The result has been that many States and municipalities have received higher prices for their obligations during the last few weeks than they have in recent years.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

News, Comment and Incident, On the Stock Exchange and In the Financial Markets.

With a total turnover on the Stock Exchange of less than a million shares, the market yesterday lapsed back into the rut out of which it was lifted by the rush of short covering on the afternoon before. Fluctuations were irregular and all but meaningless, reflecting nothing more than an interplay among Wall Street professionals. The speculative element which has been resisting operations for the fall for some time professed to be satisfied with the tone of the market. Some of the more active issues extended their recovery of the day before, but only moderately. A few stocks active enough to command attention fell back slightly, so that the net result for the day was something of a stalemate. The bearish faction was not aggressive, although some tapewatchers saw evidence of further thrusts at vulnerable spots. Most professionals who sold short on the drought news seemed to have adopted a prudent attitude for the time being.

Postponed Until Autumn.

Certain Wall Street operators who have been credited with the recent abortive "bull campaign" were represented yesterday as having withdrawn from the stock market until after Labor Day, convinced, it seems, that nothing can be accomplished in the way of bidding up stocks until then. Wall Street gossip predicted that they would resume operations early in September. Their attitude, if it is correctly stated, is no different from that of other Wall Street figures who have less interest in the market but who feel that signs of business revival, if it is to come, will not make their appearance until after Labor Day.

A New Scare Needed.

The abatement of the drought has left the hitherto successful "bear party" without a timely selling argument, some brokers declared yesterday. With a seasonal upturn in business in the offing, even of less than usual animation, it was insisted that the bears now have little in the news developments to talk about. One of the mysteries to Wall Street has been the disappearance of the tariff argument as a reason for lower security prices. There was some discussion last week as to whether it may not cut some figure later on, in connection with views of possible political reversals in the Fall elections. Wall Street rarely resorts to the "election argument" before September or October.

The Radio Report.

Six months' results for the Radio Corporation were more disappointing to the market than had been anticipated. The failure to earn the full senior preferred dividend was due to a $7,700,000 shrinkage in total income, while expenses, reserves taxes and other charges declined only $3,200,000. An operating profit was achieved despite this condition, due to liquidation of heavy inventories accumulated for the Winter trade, which remained unsold as a result of the stock crash. President Sarnoff recently announced that this liquidation had been completed and that new production was starting from scratch. The poor showing was naturally ascribed to the trade reaction and the shrinkage of expenditure by the average consumer; but it caused some reminiscence of December, 1928, when Radio's old common stock sold at 420.

Financing the Farmers.

The stern situation faced by farmers in several States as a result of the drought is recognized by Wall Street as one which must be tackled by the banking interests of the country as a whole, since a doubt has been expressed that rural banks will be able to carry the burden of loans unaided. The problem of carrying the farmer between crops is always with the country banker, and when one season's crops are interfered with the burden of financing is sharply increased. News from Washington yesterday, that the President's next move will be to summon bankers of the affected States to confer on plans for financial relief, was interpreted yesterday to mean that all plans for permanent relief will be governed by the result of the conference.

Railway Rates and Revenues.

The railway rate structure, which in recent years has tended to provide increasingly lower tariffs, was said by railway men again to have become a major problem. The readjustment of class rates in the East has yet to have its effect accurately determined, according to these railroad men, although Washington advices have held that it would provide increased revenues. The Interstate Commerce Commission increased rates in the West, but immediately authorized a decrease in grain rates that offset the advance in rates. Meanwhile, certain rates have been reduced where they might benefit the drought-stricken areas. Hence, it was said, the railroads are about where they started, and meantime this year's sweeping decline in net earnings has to be met.

Corn and Wheat Prices.

Old-timers in the grain market were unable to recall any period in which the price of corn has sold, as it did last week for September delivery, 6 to 8 cents above the price of wheat. Even in 1917, when corn went to $2.24 in September, wheat touched $2.30. There were one or two days when the two sold at practically the same price, but the circumstances were entirely peculiar. In the shortage of 1924 corn rose to $1.24½, but wheat went to $1.53. In the 1901 corn crop failure, when prices averaged much lower, corn rose from 39 cents to 63¾; but wheat, despite a fairly large crop, sold up to 77. In the corn failure year 1894 the average price of wheat was 49.1, of corn 45.7. It was not generally believed in the grain market last week that the present abnormal discrepancy between the two can long continue.

London Stock Exchange Problems.

The general tightening up of regulations regarding trading in new issues and the conduct of the brokerage business which is in prospect on the London Stock Exchange, is being watched with considerable interest on this side of the water. The investigations regarding the listing of new issues come as an aftermath of the Hatry failure, which was one of the most disastrous in the long history of the Exchange. From an American viewpoint, one of the most interesting questions to be brought up is that of relaxing the ban on advertising by members of the Exchange. The rule against advertising has been so rigid that the annual year-book of the Exchange does not contain a single advertisement of a London Stock Exchange firm, although cards of New York Stock Exchange houses are prominent in the volume.

Last Week's Movements of Gold.

Movements of gold at the port of New York last week were again chiefly exports. A total of $8,809,000 gold was sent to France in the middle of the week, while $166,000 came in from Latin America, of which $110,000 was from Panama and the remainder from scattered countries. Gold continued to arrive at San Francisco from the Orient, two shipments, both from China, aggregating $1,043,000, being received during the week.

TARIFF ON SILVER IS URGED IN CHINA

Prof. Hsu Also Favors Gold Export Embargo to Aid Money Stabilization.

HITS NATIVE SPECULATION

Economist Challenges View That Oversupply and Short Demand Cause Silver Slump.

The fall in the price of silver that recently has carried that metal to the lowest quotations in history has attracted attention as one of the most serious accompaniments of the current world-wide depression. As a result of the decline the purchasing power of that large section of the world's population resident in China has suffered serious curtailment and it is remarked that Europe and the Western Hemisphere cannot fail to feel the reactions of China's drastically reduced ability to buy abroad.

In most discussions of the decline in silver it has been assumed that the development was world-wide, the result of overproduction and underconsumption of the metal. A Chinese authority, Professor Paquan S. Hsu, recently has challenged this point of view, however. Professor Hsu regards the fall in the price of silver exchange as largely a product of speculation on the Shanghai Gold Bar Exchange. He proposes as remedies for the situation an embargo on the export of gold from China and the placing of a flexible tariff on silver imports ranging up to 50 per cent.

According to Professor Hsu, whose views have been widely published in China, production of silver has been normal. Consumption of silver in India has not greatly decreased, he contends, while in China it has actually expanded. He concludes that the chief influences upon Shanghai silver exchange have been the international balance of payments, the movement of the Japanese yen, the London bar silver price and the gold bar speculation.

Stresses Gold Bar Speculation.

Gold bar speculation he considers the most important factor. Until recently, he asserts, the yen rate has exercised the most virulent influence upon silver exchange through the speculation in the gold bar. That is to say, most of the speculation in gold bar has been carried on in anticipation of the yen movement. Whenever there was a rise in the yen there was a corresponding rise of the gold bar or a decline in silver. Recently, due to the lifting of the gold embargo in Japan and the return of the yen to parity on a gold basis, movements of the yen have ceased to be the governing factor in silver exchange.

Turning to the subject of gold bar speculation, Professor Hsu recounts that the gold bar price rose steadily all during 1929 and reached a high point of 476 on Jan. 7 of this year when speculators, bankers, business men and all interested parties began to be nervous. There was no agitation, however, he says, until the gold bar took another jump from 476 to 496 on Jan. 8.

"It was on this memorable day in the history of the Shanghai Gold Bar Exchange," Professor Hsu says, "that the vanquished speculators, after shedding tears, broadcast the stories of the gold bar manipulation which finally culminated in the form of an agitation against speculation and for measures to bolster up the silver exchange. It may be added that were it not for that memorable sudden ascension of the gold bar price on that day, the public agitation might have come much later or might even have been postponed indefinitely."

Rumors of Dumping by India.

This speculation in the gold bar, Professor Hsu says, was accompanied by the circulation of rumors of all kinds such as levying of import duties on silver by the United States and India and dumping of India's demonetized coins.

While Professor Hsu agrees that in principle it is indisputable that China's monetary system should be thoroughly overhauled, he considers the suggestion untimely at present. In a country which is politically unstable and economically backward, he says, the adoption of the gold standard will simply complicate the situation and will cause violent fluctuations of the new monetary unit.

"Our people are too poor," Professor Hsu asserts, "to undergo the change which will inevitably involve untold sufferings and sacrifices on the part of the mass during the transition period." He finds other suggested remedies inadequate to meet the crisis and advances the proposal that an export ban on gold be established and an import tariff on silver. As a necessary part of the mechanism of applying these measures he advocates the establishment of a central exchange bank.

"The gold export ban," Professor Hsu says, "is designed to check the influx of silver for dumping purposes and for buying gold in this market on the one hand and will decrease the value of gold on the gold bar exchange, thus strengthening the silver exchange.

Strict Enforcement Urged.

"The import ban on silver, when enforced, will immediately raise the silver exchange value and depress the gold bar price. The ban should be strictly enforced when it is on, and could be lifted when the situation warrants."

Professor Hsu considers the imposition of a duty on silver a good compromise substitute for a total import ban. It should be high enough at first, he says, to allow for a further possible decline in silver, and could later be adjusted. He suggests that a 50 per cent duty would not be excessive, and that a minimum of 30 per cent might serve the purpose.

The suggestion of an embargo on gold exports from China is of particular interest to the United States because a substantial part of the increase in the gold stocks of this country in the last seven months has resulted from the influx of gold from the Orient, much of it, particularly of late, having come from China.

Professor Hsu advocates strict enforcement of these measures as they become effective and readjustment when conditions change. He suggests that a tribunal composed of government officials, business men and economists be established and vested with discretionary powers to regulate the importation and exportation of gold and silver, to supervise the tariff on silver when occasion demands and to supervise all other matters pertaining to the problem.

Decrease in Individual Account Debits Shown in Report for the Week of Aug. 13

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Debits to individual accounts, as reported to the Federal Reserve Board by banks in leading cities for the week ended Aug. 13, aggregated $11,190,000,000, or 13 per cent below the total reported for the preceding week and 36 per cent below the total reported for the corresponding week of last year.

Aggregate debits for 141 centres for which figures have been published weekly since January, 1919, amounted to $10,518,000,000, as compared with $12,139,000,000 for the preceding week and $16,574,000,000 for the week ended Aug. 14 of last year.

practice is to map out the ore body and market the mineral product as it is needed.

Owing to the old practice of bringing the crude oil to the surface as fast as possible to keep an adjoining operator from obtaining it, principally due to its movable character under ground, the education of producers to the proration idea has not been without difficulties. A few years ago the idea of prorating the output of an oil field was believed impossible of application. Now the policy has been adopted in practically every important producing area in the country, although it is still far from being popular with the producers. However, most of the leaders in the industry are getting nearer to the idea that proration is needed more than ever, not so much for the conservation of the petroleum, however, as to enable the industry to get a fair price for its products.

Some Oppose Prorating Plan.

Although many of the executives of the oil industry believe the solution of its problems under present conditions can best be solved by means of prorating output, this opinion is not shared by all important factors despite the fact that they have cooperated in this undertaking from the start, it is said. Consequently, in some quarters there is a feeling that many of the proration agreements will be broken after the heavy consuming season of this year ends. These men assert that proration agreements create only an artificial situation, which must end sooner or later with a rather disastrous effect on the industry. Artificial situations in practically every other industry, where created, it is stated, have ended disastrously. As a result some in the oil industry would like to see proration ended and the industry put back squarely on an actual supply-and-demand basis, believing the longer it is delayed, the more damage eventually will be caused.

For the oil industry to get on a stable basis, it is stated, the supply must be kept slightly below demand in order that the huge amount of oil in storage can be appreciably reduced. During the first six months of this year proration agreements were in effect in practically all the important producing areas, but apparently these had no material effect on prices, since the prices of nearly all oil products during this period were considerably below those of the previous year, when production was materially higher. Despite the increased demand for petroleum products over last year, prices are lower, although the daily average supply of all oils last August, both domestic and imports, was 3,428,000 barrels, against 2,903,000 barrels in June of this year.

During the first six months of this year proration was not fully effective, as supply exceeded the demand by 1.75 per cent. In view of the amount of oil in storage, the industry as a whole was not willing to add further to stocks if this could be possibly avoided. So long as demand is less than supply under existing conditions, proration agreements are almost useless in aiding prices, it is said. Even if the demand and supply were equal, little effect on prices would probably result. In other words, in order for proration to accomplish the purpose intended it is absolutely necessary that the supply be kept below the demand so that some relief from the huge amount of oil in storage can be brought about.

Increase of Storage Supplies.

The record of the industry since the World War has shown prosperity going hand in hand with the decline in the ratio of stocks in storage to the demand. An increase in this ratio almost always has been followed by a depression and lower prices in the industry, it is pointed out. On the other hand, a relatively moderate decline in this ratio figure has an effect on both sentiment and profits in the industry. Regardless of how rapidly the demand increases, conditions will continue in a more or less demoralized state, it is believed, so long as supply exceeds demand, although this may be only by as much as 1 per cent. Likewise, even with a moderate increase in demand, the industry, it is asserted, can be brought to a sound condition if supply can be kept only 1 per cent under demand until a sizeable withdrawal of stocks can be accomplished.

During the past few years the amount of oil in storage has been increasing steadily despite the increase in consumption. Stocks of all oils in this country on June 30 last amounted to 697,329,000 barrels, or about 63 per cent of the indicated demand for the next twelve months, or almost eight months' supply. The lowest ratio of oil stocks to demand since 1922 was at the end of 1926 when the ratio had fallen to 58.39 per cent. This was just prior to the development of the Seminole oil field and was the most prosperous year in the oil industry since immediately following the World War. Since the forepart of 1929 the ratio of stocks to demand has held fairly steady around 63 per cent, largely due to proration.

Fluctuation in Demand.

For the six-year period ended with 1929 the demand for all oil products has shown an average annual increase of 6.61 per cent. For the first half of 1930 the demand showed an increase of only 1.94 per cent, compared with the similar six months of 1929. For the first half of this year there would have been an actual decrease in demand, it is stated, had it not been for a 9.77 per cent increase in the demand for gasoline as compared with the first six months of 1929. During the first half of this year the demand for fuel oil declined 6.12 per cent, lubricants 6.49 per cent and kerosene 5.13 per cent, compared with the first six months of 1929.

There are two opinions of the effect of a general business depression on the oil industry. One is that the sale of motor fuel is little, if any, affected by the decline in other lines. The other is that the oil industry is more dependent on general business conditions than most persons think. In support of the later view attention is called to the decline in the sale of fuel oil and lublicants during the first half of this year.

From now on the oil industry expects the demand for its products to increase, for, it is said, the demand could not get much worse. Provided that during the next twelve months the demand should continue to gain at the rate of 1.94 per cent, the rate for the next six months ended on June 30, last, and the industry is able to hold down the supply to the June rate of 2,903,000 barrels daily, it is estimated that about 74,287,000 barrels could be withdrawn from storage. Also, if the supply is maintained at only 1 per cent less than the demand and the increase of 1.94 per cent in demand should continue, the ratio of oil stocks to demand would decrease from 62.68 per cent at present to 60.49 per cent at the end of the first twelve months and to 58.34 per cent at the end of two years, although the actual withdrawals from storage during these periods would average less than a million barrels monthly.

HINDSIGHT

Reviewing utility investments, most investors realize the largest profits come through buying early in the development of large utility systems because of the certain expansion which has always followed.

There is now opportunity for such an investment in

JULY GOLD OUTPUT LOWER IN ONTARIO

RECORD FOR YEAR POSSIBLE

Noranda Mines Increasing Production With Gain in View for August—Copper Refining to Begin.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Aug. 16.—Although total production of Ontario gold mines was down approximately $64,000 in July from the total for June, $2,888,302 last month, comparing with $2,952,116 in the preceding month, rate of output still remains considerably above that of 1929, indicating that a new record in gold production in 1930 is a strong possibility. The total for the seven months ended on July 31 is $20,056,172 against $19,221,683 for the corresponding period last year.

Porcupine increased production from $1,347,189 in June to $1,467,220, again passing Kirkland Lake, which produced $1,365,743 last month, compared with $1,552,921 in the preceding month. The grade at Porcupine also shows improvement, moving up to $7.04 a ton in July from $6.56 in June. The grade is down at Kirkland Lake, the difference being accounted for by the fact that Lake Shore completed its year-end clean-up in June.

Mint Receipts From Ontario.

July receipts at the Royal Mint, Ottawa, of crude bullion from Ontario totaled 97,246 crude ounces, containing 72,092 ounces of gold and 11,083 fine ounces of silver, having a total value of $1,494,003. The values of the crude gold and silver bullion recovered by months this year and last from the mines of the province, as reported to the Ontario Department of Mines, follow:

Gain for Noranda Mines.

Noranda Mines is stepping up its gold production, and this month it may reach approximately $200,000, against $160,000 in July, says The Northern Miner. Copper output varies between 6,500,000 and 7,000,000 pounds monthly. Smelter tonnage averages 2,000 tons daily. The concentrator has been worked up to a tonnage of 650 daily. Employment of its full 1,000-ton capacity waits upon the completion of ore pockets at the new No. 4 shaft, about two months hence.

In July Amulet Mill produced 1,972 tons of copper concentrates, averaging 19 per cent copper, which was shipped to Noranda Smelter, and 2,875 tons of zinc concentrates, averaging 53 per cent zinc. A total of 5,159 tons of zinc concentrates were shipped during the month to Tidewater and one cargo of 3,500 long tons has gone forward to Belgium. The mill treated a total of 9,894 tons of ore, the daily average considerably exceeding the rated capacity of the plant.

The first custom copper to be refined in Eastern Canada will go into process shortly at the new copper refining plant of the Ontario Refining Company at Copper Cliff. It is reported that shipments of blister copper from the Branby Consolidated Mining, Smeltering and Power Company will be received here this month for refining in transit. Formerly Granby copper has been refined at the Tacoma (Wash.) refinery of the American Smelting and Refining Company.

NEWSPRINT OUTPUT GAINS.

But Canada's July Figures Show Drop in Operations Ratio.

MONTREAL, Aug. 15 (Canadian Press).—There has been very little alteration in the position of the newsprint industry, according to the report of the Newsprint Service Bureau giving production in Canada in the month of July.

While the July output of 216,978 tons of print paper showed a slight improvement from the 213,634 tons reported for June, the ratio of operations had a fresh decline, reaching a low of 71.3 per cent, as contrasted with 73 per cent in June.

The July production was about 13,000 tons less than it was a year ago.

For the first seven months of 1930 to the end of July print paper production in the Dominion was 1,500,341 tons, a ratio of 72 per cent, as compared with 1,540,343 tons in the same period of 1929 on a ratio of 84.1 per cent.

In July United States mills turned out 102,840 tons and shipped 103,018 tons. The operating ratio was 72.8 per cent, while mill stocks remaining were 29,284 tons. For the seven months United States output on a ratio of 80.3 per cent, shipments were 777,992 tons, while in both instances reductions were indicated as compared with the corresponding period in 1929.

HIGH-GRADE RAILS LEAD BONDS UPWARD

Industrial Securities Are Also in Good Demand, Some Being Near Peaks.

MOVES FEW IN FOREIGN LIST

Oil and Steel Issues Are Irregular in Trading on the Stock Exchange.

The listed bond market yesterday was chiefly a repetition on a small scale of the general trend of the week. Leading railroad and public utility securities were in good demand, several advancing fractionally to new high prices for the year, while the second and third grade issues were irrgeular. Industrial bonds rarely rise or fall as a group, net changes in the individual issues reflecting conditions peculiar to each corporation. A few of the best industrials are selling at or close to the highest prices for the year to date.

Among the active railroad bonds, Morris & Essex 5s of 1955 advanced a half point to a new high for the year at 108⅛, while the 4½s of 1955 mounted a point to a new high at 102. Several Chesapeake & Ohio issues reached new peaks for the year, and New York, Chicago & St. Louis 4½s moved up fractionally, touching 99 at the close for the first time this year. Reading 4½s of 1997, Series B, gained a point, selling at 101¾, a new high. The heavily traded Southern Pacific 4½s of 1968 closed at 99⅞, a fresh peak, and Great Northern 4½s of 1977 made a top at 99½, up a half point for the day.

In the industrial list the infrequently traded Francisco Sugar 7½s of 1942 dropped 2 points to a new low at 80. Warner Brothers Pictures convertible 6s held unchanged at 91¾, as did General Theatres Equipment convertible 6s of 1940. Paramount-Famous-Lasky 6s of 1947 sold off a half point. Oil and steel issues were irregular in light trading.

Foreign bonds were not productive of any changes of importance in the two-hour trading period. French Government and municipal issues were firm at levels just under the best prices of the year to date. German International 5½s were slightly higher, as were the new Austrian International 7s. South Americans were dull.

Net changes in United States Government securities were strictly routine, the range being 2-32 higher to 3-32 lower.

$24,773,000 BONDS CALLED FOR AUGUST

Two Municipalities Join List of Those to Cancel Debts Prior to Maturity.

Bonds called last week for redemption in August in anticipation of maturity were all municipal issues and few in number. The total for the month is now $24,773,000, against $41,124,000 called for redemption in July and against $120,291,000 in August, 1929, at corresponding dates.

Paving bonds of Albuquerque, N. M., and local improvement bonds of Seattle, Wash., were the only additions made last week to the list for August.

Calls announced last week for future months included several large foreign issues, a large public utility loan and numerous small industrial lots. Among these issues are $18,663,000 Est Railroad of France external sinking fund 7s, due in 1954, called at 105 for Nov. 1, and Kingdom of Iceland sterling 7s, dated 1921, amounting to $46,000, called at par for Sept. 1.

Bonds called for redemption in August include $10,296,000 industrial, $5,964,000 public utility, $797,000 State and municipal, $7,584,000 foreign and $132,000 miscellaneous. In accompanying tables compiled by THE NEW YORK TIMES are listed bonds and stocks called for redemption at various dates.

FOR COURTESY ON CARRIERS

Head of Public Relations Committee Says It Makes Friends.

Every railway executive and employe should seek better relations between the railways and the public, it was said recently by John M. Fitzgerald, chairman of the committee on public relations of the Eastern railroads. These men should be well informed, particularly with regard to their own lines, said Mr. Fitzgerald.

"As the public is required to use rail service," Mr. Fitzgerald continued, "it properly demands an efficient service. Shippers and passengers are entitled to courtesy as a matter of right. They will accept friendship to the extent and in the same spirit in which it is offered. A patron may evidence little interest in a freight rate or a passenger fare, but his mental attitude toward the railways is often determined by the manner in which the transaction is handled.

"Hence railway employes can do more than merely perform the duties for which they are paid. They should render service in a manner which will inspire both the confidence and the friendship of railway patrons. Service may win traffic to a line, but a friendly interest will usually make the shipper an ally.

"The public is essentially fair-minded. Patrons are willing to pay fair and reasonable rates for good service. But they desire a clear understanding of that service. They want to know what we are doing and why we are doing it. When something happens that a shipper does not understand he is likely to become very critical."

WHICH industries have the best prospect for future rapid growth? Which are threatened by obsolescence of their products and have only a fair chance, and which an indifferent one?

We have prepared a booklet "Obsolescence" that gives an intelligent appraisal of these questions almost at a glance. Illustrated with an important chart which indicates where various industries stand with relation to the future.

TIME TO BUY?

Has the substantial stock market decline since mid-April really placed individual securities on a sound bargain level?

Or, as is claimed by some, are we face to face with a further six to twelve months period of depression?

These questions, of utmost importance to all investors, RIGHT NOW, are discussed, definite recommendations given, in a NEW Advisory Bulletin, available GRATIS.

ALONG THE HIGHWAYS OF FINANCE.

Mr. Rockefellers as a Holdout.

When Harry F. Sinclair completes his big oil merger, linking the Sinclair Consolidated Oil Corporation with the Prairie Oil and Gas Company, the Prairie Pipe Line Company, and possibly the Tide Water Associated Oil Company, he probably will have John D. Rockefeller as one of his largest stockholders. This arises through the circumstance that Mr. Rockefeller owns about 10 per cent of the stock of Prairie Oil.

Wall Street finds the situation interesting, recalling that the Rockefeller interests waged war against Colonel Robert W. Stewart because of his connection with the same series of oil investigations in which Mr. Sinclair was involved. As stockholders of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, the Rockefeller family, led by John D. Rockefeller Jr., brought about the removal of Colonel Stewart from the chairmanship of that company. The reason was that the Rockefellers were dissatisfied with Colonel Stewart's attitude in the United States Senate's investigation of the oil scandals. Mr. Sinclair figured prominently as a witness in the same investigations.

Why He Won't Sell.

Mr. Rockefeller the elder has been found singularly indifferent to offers on behalf of the Sinclair interests to acquire his holdings in Prairie Oil and Gas and Prairie Pipe Line. The negotiations have not been abandoned, but the Sinclair interests, it is understood, have found Mr. Rockefeller difficult to bargain with. Should he decide to sell, it is pointed out, the government would collect a large amount in income tax on his profits in the transaction. Just what the original Rockefeller investment in Prairie Oil and Gas and Prairie Pipe Line figures out at is not known, but the profit, at present market prices, is enormous. It is recalled that in 1913, just after the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, when that company's holdings in subsidiaries were distributed on a pro rata basis to stockholders, there were outstanding 180,000 shares of $100 par Prairie Oil and Gas stock. In that year the stock sold as high as $445 a share. There are now outstanding 2,400,000 shares.

Prairie Pipe's History.

It was in January, 1915, that Prairie Oil and Gas segregated its pipe line holdings, creating the Prairie Pipe Line Company. As part of that operation, Prairie Oil and Gas distributed to its shareholders, as a 150 per cent stock dividend, the 270,000 shares of $100 par stock of the pipe line company. In 1922 Prairie Oil and Gas paid a stock dividend of 200 per cent, and in 1924 there was a four-for-one split-up of stock resulting from a reduction in the par value from $100 to $25. Prairie Pipe Line paid a stock dividend of 200 per cent in 1922, while in 1929 it split its stock on a four-for-one basis and in addition paid a stock dividend of 25 per cent, the entire operation being equivalent to a five-for-one split-up.

Philanthropies Sell Holdings.

About two years ago the Rockefeller philanthropies, including the General Education Board and the Rockefeller Foundation, sold their holdings in Prairie Oil and Gas and Prairie Pipe Line to a Wall Street group, and eventually the stock found its way into the hands of the Petroleum Corporation of America. Mr. Rockefeller, however, retained his holdings and, unless they have been disposed of privately within the last few days, they are still intact.

Mr. Rockefeller and the Merger.

Mr. Rockefeller's attitude toward the merger program of Mr. Sinclair has not been revealed, but whether he is antagonistic or not, the consolidation lacks only the official action of stockholders to consummate it. Mr. Sinclair and associates control enough stock to insure completion of the merger.

Mr. Sinclair's Accomplishment.

Wall Street has watched the development of Mr. Sinclair's ambitious program with unconcealed admiration. He is about to set up a $1,000,000,000 enterprise that will rank in size with some of the largest units of the Standard Oil group. The consolidation plan was put in motion while Mr. Sinclair was serving a term in jail for contempt of the United States Senate. His associates say this big undertaking is his answer to intimations, made when he was in jail, that he was to be eliminated as a factor in the petroleum industry. It appears that he is today a much larger figure in the industry than ever before.

The Chuckle of the Week.

Last week's prize for determined cheerfulness in the face of the current business depression goes to a popular radio performer, who makes a practice in his daily broadcasts of confounding the down-hearted economists with some item of favorable business news culled from newspapers. Announcing that there had been another increase in the stocks of refined copper in the hands of producers and refiners, following a long series of previous increases this year, this broadcaster triumphantly demanded of those who take a gloomy view of the situation, "Does that sound like business depression?" Unfortunately, the answer seems to be "Yes."

A Mental Suggestion.

Irreverent ones in Wall Street have long insisted that the frieze over the original building of the New York Stock Exchange presents the figure of a dice-thrower, and persons who looked closely last week reported finding, for no apparent reason at all, that the symbol had grown more animated. There was no suggestion that speculation within the building was increasing, but the imaginary dice-thrower seemed to be crouching with a greater tensity, while the observer, seated in the foreground, appeared to be watching the proceedings with more eagerness than was customary. It was suggested that the weather's effect on the vision of passersby might explain the illusion.

Odd-lot traders are having their day at last. During the big bull market, when brokerage houses were inundated with business, the "little fellows'" trades of five, ten and twenty shares received scant attention. Their business was rejected contemptuously by some houses which declined to accept less than 100-share orders from margin traders. Conditions are vastly different today. So eager are commission houses for business that the odd-lot trader gets lavish attention. He receives quotations from his broker with a promptness that makes him gasp, particularly if he recalls the indifferent treatment which he received when the brokers were riding the crest. One odd-lot trader said last week that he was embarrassed by the courtesies that were shown him. The partners in the house through which he trades will stop and pass the time of day with him, offer a few suggestions as to market ventures and treat him as a favored customer, and he has plenty of space in the customers' room to stretch his legs and make himself comfortable, even if he doesn't make money.

With the Foreign Loan Brokers.

In spite of the fact that leading Wall Street investment houses interested in foreign financing keep representatives constantly on the ground to discover new loan possibilities, a crop of self-appointed "loan brokers" has invaded the field recently, endeavoring to act as intermediaries between prospective borrowers and the bankers. In banking circles the complaint is made that many such "loan brokers" have grossly misrepresented themselves in their banking connections and have, as a matter of fact, in some instances, duped European officials into granting them options on loans. It is contended that until the bankers act in concert to end the practice, they will continue to be annoyed by these brokers whose offices are in their hats.

How Values Have Risen.

The aggregate market value of fifty representative stocks on the New York Stock Exchange at the close of business yesterday was $23,670,103,754, showing a gain of $383,007,869 over the total value of the same group at the end of the preceding week, according to a compilation made by McClure, Jones & Co., members of the Stock Exchange. The same fifty stocks were worth $45,021,508,245 at this time last year, indicating that the shrinkage has about halved the market in a year.

Predicting a Large Pack.

Wall Street interests with holdings in various canning, fruit and vegetable enterprises have shown some concern over the effect of the drought on their investments, but they have ascertained, through a canvass, that the combined pack of the various fruit and vegetable crops will not be much below the average of the last five years, assuming that there is no extension of the damage. A sharp downward revision of earlier estimates has been necessary, however.

The Short Interest.

The senior partner in one of the largest commission houses in Wall Street said last week, apropos of the wide publicity given to the overcrowded short position in the stock market, that short selling now, as always, was infinitesimal as compared with operations on the long side. There never had been, he said, a short interest in the general market of the size which Wall Street reports frequently suggested.

crops should provide employment for a large number who are currently without occupation.

"Because of the substantially lower rate of employment and, in many cases, reduced wage scales, purchasing power of industrial labor obviously is materially smaller than at this time in 1929. However, the decline probably is not so severe as it appears at first glance because of receding commodity prices, which permit those employed, especially those at fixed salaries, to obtain greater dollar value with their funds than a year ago.

Foresees Decline in Idleness.

"With unemployment likely to diminish during the next several months, general purchases, at least of necessities, should expand, although it is strongly improbable that they will reach their high levels of 1929 for a considerable period."

The attitude of employers toward wage reductions, as expressed by the Standard Statistics Company, was echoed in a statement issued by the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company yesterday, in reporting sales that showed an increase over 1929. The statement said:

"Retail prices must parallel as nearly as possible the decline of prices in primary markets, and the present high level of wages should be maintained if business is soon to recover from the depression of the last few months. Lower prices raise the purchasing power of wages and stimulate trade by bringing more commodities within buying reach of a larger number of consumers."

Opinions generally have been expressed that wage-cutting considerations have been discontinued for the time being in expectation of a revival of business in the early part of September. The consequent increase in manufacturing income would relieve companies of the necessity of looking for places in which outgo could be curtailed, is the belief of many.

BANK CHANGES ANNOUNCED.

Two Trust Companies Authorized to Operate Branches.

The Banking Department of the State of New York last week authorized the Midwood Trust Company to open a branch at 1,709 Kings Highway, Brooklyn.

The Bank of Sicily Trust Company was authorized to open as a branch the office formerly occupied by the late Louis V. Fugazy, whose business it purchased.

George J. Faour and Dominick J. Faour were authorized to continue business as private bankers under Section 152 of the banking law.

Carlo Calvosa filed an application to continue as a private banker under Section 151 of the banking law.

Capitalization Reduced.

Stockholders of the Winslow Lanier International Corporation have authorized the retirement of 35,943 common shares which were purchased below their liquidating value. Of the remaining capital, 25 per cent was apportioned to surplus account, making the present set-up 114,057 capital shares for $8,555,275, and $2,851,425 carried to surplus.

the return from both wholesale power and residence service being relatively low. If such analyses are approximately correct, or even if they embody material errors, they refute the contention that domestic service is unduly profitable or that it helps to support wholesale power business."

Wright and Hopkinson Groups.

After describing the history of electric rates, Mr. Nash explains that at present load factor forms of rates fall into two main groups, which are commonly designated by the names of their originators, Wright and Hopkinson, who first advocated them in England more than thirty years ago.

The Wright demand rate involves energy charges only, but applies a comparatively high rate to kilowatt-hours representing a certain initial use of energy stated in kilowatt-hours per kilowatt of demand. Excess energy pays a comparatively low rate. In its simplest form the Wright rate may be stated as follows:

First 30 k. w. h. per kilowatt of demand, 10 cents.
All excess k. w. h., 5 cents.

Division of rates into further blocks and difference in the size of the blocks are variants in the Wright form of rate used to stimulate consumption and load distribution.

The Hopkinson form of rate provides an independent service charge intended to cover the fixed cost of service, the correspondingly low energy charges covering operating costs only. The simplest form of the Hopkinson rate is as follows:

Demand charge, $2 per month per kilowatt.
Energy charge, 2 cents per k. w. h.

In practice, Mr. Nash says, both demand and energy charges are usually blocked. In his opinion this rate has distinct advantages in its separation of demand and energy charges, particularly under competitive conditions where the customer may compare the cost of service with that of an alternative plant of his own.

Officers Are Re-elected.

At the first meeting of the directors of the American Reserve Insurance Company since its merger with the Re-Insurance Corporation of America the officers of American Reserve were re-elected, it was announced yesterday.

INVESTMENT TRUST.

Electric Shareholdings Corporation—Report as of June 30: Asset value of common stock after stated value of preferred stock, $20.68 a share; net value of assets at closing prices, $50,906,426; net income for six months, including $1,591,898 of stock dividends at prices on days after record dates, $2,264,530, leaving after preferred dividends a balance of $1,746,182 applicable to common stock. Stock dividends received were carried as a reserve against investments since certain stock dividend paying securities had on June 30 a market value less than their book value on Dec. 31, 1929. Largest single investment was 250,000 shares of North American Company.

Heads Arbitration Committee.

Peter J. Maloney has been elected chairman of the arbitration committee of the New York Stock Exchange, succeeding Allen L. Lindley, who resigned as a member of the committee. Charles R. Gay has been elected vice chairman of the committee, succeeding Mr. Maloney in that capacity.

Significant Movements In Bond Values

Always in the past, active markets for virtually all grades of bonds have been presaged by a gradual increase in the price of the highest grade bonds. This has already taken place, and an increase in the price of other sound issues seems certain to follow. We are therefore recommending to investors a carefully selected list of 6 strong issues—mostly utilities—now yielding from 5½% to 7¼%, but which, we believe, will not much longer be available at their present prices.

Why Depression Spells Investment Opportunity

JUST when the successful investor is most alert to take advantage of unusual market opportunities, the average man holds back and waits for an unmistakable upward price movement before he shows any interest. He buys after securities have scored a substantial advance—often at the very moment when the wiser ones are selling.

The men who have faith in our country's future, those whose investments show a handsome profit, see in periods of depression an opportunity to study values and invest in well-managed companies before the next wave of prosperity carries their securities to higher levels. For such guidance literally thousands, who have followed it for years, look upon THE WALL STREET JOURNAL not merely as helpful but as indispensable, because of its satisfactory financial news coverage. It is quick, authoritative, complete.

You too can profit by securing each day the latest earnings reports and analyses, the news of business and corporate developments affecting and revealing values and probable price movements, first-hand through an acknowledged financial authority—THE WALL STREET JOURNAL. Published daily by Dow, Jones & Co. All important earnings reports are summarized and compared daily and weekly, then tabulated in a separate monthly bulletin called "Corporation Earnings", FREE to yearly subscribers, if requested.

COPPER AT 10.75C, LOWEST IN 20 YEARS

Producers Generally Believe, However, Bottom of Drop Has Been Reached.

MANY OPERATING AT LOSS

Despite a generally better feeling last week with respect to the outlook for moderately improved prices in many commodities, the prices of copper continued to work lower. The reasons for the downward drift were said to be the statistical position of the industry and the fact that consumers had sufficient supplies on hand for their immediate requirements. However, the fact that the price is now below the cost of production by many producers is believed to indicate that prices are at or near the lowest points that they will touch.

The decline in the quoted price of copper at custom smelters last week to 10.75 cents a pound delivered in the Connecticut Valley placed the metal at the lowest level at which it has been sold for in more than twenty years. The current decline started soon after the first of this year, when the price was cut 4 cents a pound from the 18-cent level, where it had been pegged for several months. While the price was held at 18 cents considerable additions to producers' stocks were made, with the result that the statistical position due to this artificial situation, was weakened materially. Despite the cut in price, stocks have been increasing, with the exception of July, when a moderate decline was reported.

Reduced Output Forecast.

Although the large producers have not yet cut prices below the 11-cent level, it is expected in the trade that they soon will be compelled to do so, since more copper was being offered toward the close of last week at 10.75 cents a pound than was covered by the current demand. Since this price is below the cost of production for a comparatively large number of producers, it is expected also that the present price will materially decrease the output. Because of the large stocks of refined copper on hand, which are greater than in any year since 1921, it will require considerable time to materially improve the statistical position of the industry even with some of the producers curtailing their operations.

There have been no indications yet that the Copper Exporters Association would lower its price of 11.30 cents a pound c.i.f., European base ports. It was expected, however, that the foreign buyers would again balk at paying more than the customary 30-point differential above the price quoted to the American consumer. This attitude seems to have been reflected in a decrease in the volume of buying for that market. Also, futures contracts on the London market declined to the 10.75 cent level toward the close of last week.

Although the sale of copper at 10.75 cents a pound that was responsible for this quotation being made by several custom smelters was attributed to a custom smelter, the size of the sale, which was reported as having been 6,000,000 pounds, indicated that this smelter was acting for a producer. The purchaser, it is assumed in the trade, was a large utility company, although most of these interests are known to have covered their requirements reasonably well in the last few weeks. However, at current levels, it is regarded not unlikely that the utility companies are willing to buy considerably more than they require, particularly in view of the low money rates. The smaller consumers are said to be well provided for, some well into next year, but they are less eager than the utility companies to take on metal in excess of their known requirements.

Electrical Bookings Decline.

The report issued by the Department of Commerce on bookings by the electrical manufacturers during the second quarter of this year revealed a sharper decline in this industry than was supposed to have taken place in that period. Orders in the second quarter aggregated $276,756,039, which represented a decline of nearly $22,000,000 from the first quarter of 1930 and $64,000,000 as compared with the June quarter of last year. Booking in the first half of 1930 were about $87,000,000 under the similar period of 1929. This industry has been frequently cited as one in which consumption had been well sustained over the past year. The report of the Department of Commerce was made by 81 manufacturers of electrical goods, which did a total business last year of $1,290,000,000.

In the trade it is not generally believed that copper prices will remain long at the level of 10.75 cents a pound. However, it is believed that the price will remain around this figure until copper stocks begin to show signs of a substantial decline. During the depression in 1921 prices touched their low level for that period soon after stocks were at the highest. When stocks began to show a sizable decline, the price of the metal began to display strength. However, prices did not decline during that period much below 12 cents a pound, although refined copper stocks were somewhat larger than at present.

Cut in Dividend Payments.

The effect on the earnings of the copper companies as a result of the low price for the metal will be considerable during the third quarter, it is stated. The statements of the companies that issue quarterly reports for the three months ended June 30 were poor, although copper metal prices during that period were probably higher than they will average for the September quarter.

Following the cut in the price of copper in the first quarter, practically all the companies, including the largest in the industry, found it necessary to reduce their dividend payments. With the metal at unusually low levels and the margin of profit further reduced, in some cases wiped out entirely, it is regarded as not unlikely that several companies will seriously consider reducing their dividend payments still further unless there should be a sudden upturn in prices.

Production of copper in July throughout the world totaled 143,615 short tons, compared with 145,797 tons in June and 174,507 tons in July, 1929, according to figures of the American Bureau of Metal Statistics.

NEW ENGLAND SEES GAINS.

Shoe and Woolen Manufacturers More Active—General Level Still Low

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Aug. 15.—General industrial activity continues at a low ebb in New England. Some signs of improvement, however, are visible in a few lines.

Shoe manufacturers are doing somewhat better and wholesalers and retailers are beginning to order more freely. Building operations hold up well, the volume of contracts for the week ended Aug. 12 being in excess of the average of previous weeks this year and also above the corresponding week of a year ago.

A slightly better demand for woolen goods is reported. Sharp curtailment continues to be the rule in most cotton manufacturing centres. Sales of jewelry at wholesale for the year to date have been 25 per cent under last year.

Department store sales continue fair, although below last Summer. Dry goods and men's furnishings jobbers report business quiet. The same applies to men's clothing. A little better demand is noted for women's wear. Dress manufacturers, jobbers report a slight increase in orders.

ANTHRACITE DEMAND GAINS

Shipments From Pennsylvania Are 18 Per Cent Above 1929

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 15.—Anthracite shipments in July gained nearly 18 per cent over last year, indicating a larger movement to consumers' bins. Shipments to New England were largely increased.

Retail trade has been stimulated by price reductions for Summer clearing sales. Inquiries for bedding are large. Stocks of goods are low, but retailers are preparing for a good Fall demand.

Hosiery mills anticipate a better demand by the middle of September. Children's shoes are in especially strong request, as the schools will soon reopen.

The city is preparing to receive bids for subway work in September and October. Work at Hog Island Airport will be another souce of activity. Construction of two new ships for the Mediterranean trade is under way on the Delaware.

Builders are surprised at the demand for the limited supply of new dwellings. Prices are low and sales are made before structures are completed.

VIRGINIA TRADE GAINS.

Maryland Also Improves as Optimism Rises in Fifth Reserve District.

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 15.—Cooler weather and showers have relieved some of the apprehension over the drought situation and a more optimistic tone is apparent in business circles in the Fifth Federal Reserve District as a consequence. Curtailed buying power, however, is expected because of heavy agricultural losses.

Weekly debit figures for the district continue better than the national average. Maryland and Eastern Virginia continue to show definite indications of seasonal business improvement, but the other sections of the district have been marking time during the excessive hot period.

There is little change in the employment situation this week. Building and heavy construction projects under way are in excess of the Summer average, but field labor is not in usual demand.

Tobacco, rayon and shipbuilding plants are active and Virginia is planning to use the surplus farm labor on road construction as an emergency measure.

Retail trade in July was 2 per cent under the same month last year and for the first seven months of 1930 is lagging slightly behind the 1929 volume.

Wholesale trade in all lines for July will compare unfavorably with last year, according to preliminary figures being compiled.

Earning assets of the Richmond Bank are slightly higher than last week. The board on Thursday declined to lower the rediscount rate.

CHICAGO TRADE PICKS UP.

Wholesale Dry Goods Orders Increase—Retail Trade Is Fair.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 15.—Road salesmen with the leading wholesale dry goods houses have been picking up a fair volume of individual orders, but the amounts are below normal.

Chicago retail trade is only fair.

Price cuts in the medium-priced cars have introduced an unexpected element in the already keen competition. Sales of the cut-priced models have been increased.

A leading mail order house shows a decline in sales of 8.5 per cent from last year. While retail sales have been improving in the industrial centres, mail orders have fallen off.

Steel output sagged to a little above 50 per cent, due to light buying by motor car makers and railroads.

BURLEY CROP DROPS HALF.

Cleveland District Feed Crops Cut—Iron and Steel at Low Level.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Aug. 16.—The burley tobacco crop has been reduced to about half what it was last year, owing to the drought, with many of the early set fields already cut. The corn crop has been seriously affected, but the extent of the damage will not be known for some time. Feed crops in thirty-nine Ohio counties have been seriously damaged.

The iron and steel industry continues to drift. Operations at Pittsburgh were 55 per cent of capacity, with Cleveland at 48 and Youngstown at 55-60 per cent Automobile producers are back to their pre-vacation basis, but material orders are very slow. A few parts concerns have stepped up production, but they are far from capacity.

July chain grocery sales on a unit basis were 8 per cent below the same month last year. Sales for the first seven months were down 2 per cent, in part accounted for by the drop in commodity prices.

ST. LOUIS SIGHTS UPTURN.

Building Increases and Several Large Projects Are to Be Begun.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 15.—The impression prevails in this section that the bottom has been reached in the current depression.

It is estimated that the corn loss in Missouri amounts to $50,000,000, which is a severe blow and has rather accentuated conditions, but the belief is general that the worst is over and a gradual upclimb is at hand.

There is a quickening in residential building, several large construction projects are about to be started and the unemployment is being cared for by large roadway construction and other work of a similar character.

Shoe manufacturers are running about 25 per cent behind last year, and other industries are operating on reduced schedules. Steel plants in this section depend to a great extent upon orders from railroads, and these orders have been in negligible quantities.

The retail trade is slightly improved, but local stores are buying in small quantities and have light inventories. This has reduced sales of wholesale houses about 15 per cent as compared with last year.

Railroad loadings are about 15 per cent behind last year, due not only to a decrease in the grain movement but also to falling off in other tonnage.

Money is in small demand at from 3 to 3½ per cent. Collections are fair. Automobile sales are light and the demand for used cars is small.

CATTLE MARKETING DROPS.

Kansas City District Movement Is Three Weeks Late.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 15.—Only 20 to 30 per cent of the grass cattle on pastures in Kansas and Oklahoma have been marketed, the movement being nearly three weeks behind normal owing to th drought. Indications are that many will be returned to Texas in first hands.

The Federal Reserve Bank reduced its rediscount rate to 3½ per cent to make credit easy for the movement of crops and the financing of live stock.

A decrease of $6,000,000 in gold reserves is the only important change in the weekly statement of the bank. The reserve ratio dropped about four points and is 8.7 points lower than a year ago. Bills bought increased $2,500,000.

Clearings through the bank totaled $19,500,000, an increase of $3,500,000 over the preceding week, but $59,000,000 less than a year ago.

NORTHWEST HIT BY DROUGHT.

Business Lags, but Minneapolis and St. Paul Show Some Gains.

Special to The New York Times.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 15.—The volume of business in the Ninth District slumped sharply during July from the levels of the same month in other recent years, according to the monthly report of the Reserve Bank issued today. The decline reflected the effect of the excessively hot and arid weather, which was disastrous for the grain crops in some parts of the district, it was said.

The greatest drought damage in the Ninth District, however, was to corn and feed. Range cattle in Montana lack sufficient feed and will probably have to be shipped to other sections of the Northwest where feed is available, it is reported. Also there has been a considerable loss in potential corn yield in the district.

Coal and coke shipments during the last two weeks increased considerably over the same period last year, but all other commodity shipments decreased. Decreases from levels of a year ago also were reported in department store sales, electric power consumption, building permits, grain, cattle and hog marketings and iron ore, flour and linseed product shipments.

There was a small increase in the value of building permits and in number of sheep marketed.

Unemployment continues to be a serious problem in Minneapolis and St. Paul, although threshing in rural districts now is absorbing a large amount of labor.

SOUTHWEST TRADE CAUTIOUS.

Fall Buying at Dallas on Hand-to-Mouth Basis—Bank Deposits Rise.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Aug. 15.—The Texas political campaign has had a dampening effect on business. The run-off primary of the Democratic party, which is equivalent to election, will be held Aug. 23, and until the results are known there will be little change in business conditions.

The drought over the Southwest has been broken only by a few scattering showers, not sufficient to aid crops, and the agricultural situation is poor.

The Dallas wholesale market held its formal Fall opening, attended by several hundred merchants from the Dallas trade territory. These merchants have established definitely the hand-to-mouth policy of buying only what they feel certain they can sell. The same policy is being followed by the larger department stores in Dallas and other cities. The Fall season is to be one of extreme caution. Bank deposits are increasing, Federal Reserve Bank reports show, and there is sufficient money for all legitimate business. Clearings through member banks of the Eleventh Federal Reserve District for the week showed an increase over the last few weeks, although still considerably under the clearings for the corresponding week last year.

Building operations continue satisfactory. Work has just been started on two large office buildings in Dallas, each to cost more than $2,000,000, and two others are projected. These operations and public work now under way have practically solved the unemployment problem here.

COAST MARKETS ENLIVENED.

Ebb in Food and Clothing Prices Stimulus—Fruit Demand Expected to Rise.

Special to The New York Times.

OAKLAND, Cal., Aug. 15.—Downward tendencies in prices of food and wearing apparel and belief that drought conditions in the Middle West may increase demand for agricultural products have enlivened the Pacific Coast market somewhat.

With heavy overproduction in peaches and other deciduous fruit, outside demand is expected to enhance considerably the prospects for the California farmer.

Purchase of equipment by Western railroads has led to the belief that construction work on rather a large scale is in the offing. Much of this, it is anticipated, will be in the link connecting the lines of the Western Pacific and the Great Northern, permitting the latter railroad to tap rich territory in California, where there has been little competition in the past.

Prolonged drought in Southern California has caused some concern among orange growers, who fear that unless there is relief soon the next crop of citrus fruit will be light.

Children's clothing has become more active with the closing of the vacation season.

COUNTER STOCKS STRONG.

Bank Shares Lead Upturn, Followed by Insurance Issues.

The over-the-counter market was strong yesterday, all groups moving higher, led by the bank group. Guaranty, Chase, National City, Manhattan and Public advanced, while American Union, Bank of America, Central Hanover, Corn Exchange and Chemical were lower. The advances, however, were generally larger than the declines.

Insurance shares followed the trend of the bank stocks, Carolina, Baltimore American, American Surety, Stuyvesant and Westchester Fire advancing, while Aetna Casualty and Surety, United States Fidelity and Guaranty, Rhode Island and National Fire were lower.

Industrial issues were firm but generally inactive. Chain store and communication issues were slightly stronger.

a reserve against possible future contingencies. There is also the contention that the common stocks of trusts which have senior securities will respond more quickly to an upward swing in values than the other type on the feeling that the senior stock is working for the common.

Many of the trusts which had senior securities outstanding could rely on market appreciation and the subsequent taking of these profits to meet their obligations while the bull market was in full swing, it has been pointed out. At that time dividend income was but a small part of the whole, and was almost regarded as a by-product of the business.

In their semi-annual reports on June 30, however, the trusts themselves revealed how widely the situation had changed. With few exceptions, and those usually resulting from special situations, dividend contributed the bulk of the gross income. The uncertainty as to how long this condition will continue has brought many trusts to the conclusion that a definite income must be insured by investments in dividend or interest paying securities, it has been pointed out.

One of the paradoxes of the present situation, bankers say, is that while this would seem to be the time for investment trusts to obtain cheap capital through the floating of senior issues, with money cheap and bonds in fair demand, with a probable ultimate benefit to stockholders, the public appetite for investment trust securities of all kinds is so far gone as to make such issues impossible.

Merchants' Group Aided Trade.

In response to nearly 1,700 requests received from abroad, or from the representatives of foreign organizations, the Merchants' Association of New York, during its last fiscal year, supplied the names of more than 45,000 American firms, giving them new opportunities for the development of their foreign trade, according to a summary of its foreign trade activities, made public by the association yesterday. The association furnished more than 19,000 names to inquirers desiring to develop agency connections for the purchase or sale of merchandise. Another important phase consisted in the certification of certificates of origin on shipments to foreign countries.

NEW USE FOR PEANUT HULLS

They May Be Used as a Source of Cellulose.

Peanut hulls, now regarded as a farm waste, with a value of only about $2 a ton for fuel, may become commercially important as a source of cellulose to supplement cotton linters and wood-pulp in America's rapidly developing cellulose industries, according to chemists of the United States Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, who have been seeking to discover and develop profitable outlets for this farm waste of the Southern States.

Several attempts to dispose of the 70,000 tons of peanut hulls which collect annually at the shelling plants in the Southern States have as yet met with only small success. Hulls have been used experimentally as roughage in cattle feed, but they have little feed value; small quantities are incorporated as a dilutant in fertilizers and attempts have been made to use the hulls in magnesia plaster, tiles and fiber concrete, but the Bureau of Standards reports that the fiber concrete is weaker than the concrete prepared with hardwood chips.

It is only a matter of time, say the chemists, until the depletion of the forests and the attendant scarcity of wood-pulp, together with the rapidly increasing demand for a cheap, high grade cellulose, will make our present sources of cellulose inadequate. The search for a supplemental supply would naturally turn to our cheap farm-waste products. Peanut hulls, because of their cheapness and their availability in large quantities at the shelling plants, appear to offer a promising source of cellulose for the future.

New Bus Service Today.

Through motor bus service between Norfolk, Wilmington, Philadelphia and New York will be started today by the Pennsylvania-Virginia General Transit Company, a subsidiary of the Pennsylvania Railroad. At first the service consist of one bus a day each way.

Singapore Growers for Rubber Plan.

The Singapore Rubber Growers' Association has gone on record as favoring the restriction in rubber production made by the Anglo-Dutch Laison Committee, according to a cable received yesterday at the New York Rubber Exchange.

Glue Company to Retire Preferred.

The American Glue Company will pay $135 plus accrued interest for each preferred share deposited with the Atlantic National Bank of Boston on or before Oct. 14, it was announced yesterday.

WHEAT PRICES DROP; LONG TRADERS SHIFT

Net Losses Are 1⅝ to 2 Cents, With Quotations Near Bottom at the Close.

SHOWERS DEPRESS CORN

Complaints of Barren Stalks in Fields Are Increasing—Oats and Rye Decline.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16—Wheat traders who were long and talking bullish at the close on Friday were generally out of their lines and some were on the short side at the finish today. There was a noticeable lack of the aggressive buying and short covering of the previous day, and the general character of the news was favorable for a lower range of prices. Many of the pit element were working on the bear side and, with trade light, prices declined and closed within a fraction of the bottom, with net losses of 1⅝ to 2 cents.

Winnipeg was also heavy and ended 1⅝ cents lower, although the pool was said to have sold around 1,000,000 bushels for export since the close of the previous day. The Seaboard reported demand slow from abroad and there was some shading in the basis at the Gulf, with last half August 6¼ cents over Chicago September asked.

Leading exporting countries were reported as pressing sales abroad, and Argentine shippers sold futures at Liverpool. The latter market finished ⅛ to ⅝d higher, making a poor response to the upturn in North America on the previous day.

Canada Gets Some Showers.

Scattered rains were reported in Canada, but they were too light to interfere with harvest to any extent. Lack of subsoil moisture in the Prairie Provinces is causing uneasiness, as the size of the yield next season will depend largely on the rain received before the ground freezes in the Fall.

Country offerings of wheat to arrive were limited. Receipts here today of sixty-nine cars were the smallest in several weeks.

Primary receipts were 2,888,000 bushels; a week ago, 3,047,000, and a year ago, 3,033,000. Shipments respectively were 2,245,000, 2,366,000 and 1,983,000 bushels.

Corn was unsettled, breaking early on reports of showers in parts of Kansas and Nebraska and in sections of Northern Illinois and Western Iowa. A sharp rally resulted from buying by local bulls. The close was weak and 1⅛ to 1⅝ cents lower, the weekly forecast for unsettled weather being a factor. Commission houses sold on all upturns.

Local bulls are getting little outside help, regardless of the increasing number of complaints of barren stalks. A field count in the Sterling (Ill.) territory showed almost 50 per cent barren stalks in the section examined.

Corn Conditions in Iowa.

H. A. Rumsey, an official of the Board of Trade, who returned today from Northwestern Iowa, said conditions there were much better than in Central Illinois. The crop estimates made in the Sioux City (Iowa) territory ranged from 19 to 40 bushels an acre. A liberal amount of old corn is in that territory.

Cattle feeders have suffered heavy losses due to the big decline in values, and less feeding next Winter is probable in Iowa and in South Dakota. Farmers refuse to sell barley and oats, although dealers have large orders for the former grain for shipment.

Purchases of old corn to arrive by local handlers today were 55,000 bushels, with shipping sales 165,000 bushels.

Primary receipts of corn were 1,010,000 bushels, a week ago 530,000 and a year ago 333,000. Shipments respectively were 410,000, 309,000 and 633,000 bushels.

Oats closed ⅝ to ⅞ cent lower with other grains and local selling, which more than offset outside buying.

Rye was off ⅞ to 1⅞ cents on Northwestern hedging and with wheat.

Prices for the principal grains were as follows:

GRAIN IN STORE IN CANADA.

Decrease of 7,615,280 Bushels to 134,715,504 Reported for Week.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 16 (Canadian Press).—Returns received at the Dominion Bureau of Statistics as to stocks of grain in store for the week ended on Aug. 8 show a decrease of 7,615,280 bushels.

Stocks for the week were: Wheat, 98,651,942 bushels; oats, 6,944,719; barley, 20,463,081; flax, 431,628; rye, 8,225,134; total, 134,715,504 bushels. Decreases were: In wheat, 6,920,950 bushels; oats, 363,020; barley, 288,382; flax, 11,330; rye, 31,798. For the same week last year the amount in store was 132,220,875 bushels, made up as follows: Wheat, 103,522,001; oats, 15,725,822; barley, 9,975,115; flax, 347,264; rye, 3,550,673.

CANADA'S DAIRY PRODUCTS INCREASE

Cheese Shows Improvement in Quality Since Grading System Was Introduced.

Since 1921 the total output of dairy products in Canada has tended to rise, says a recent Canadian Pacific Railway bulletin. There have, of course, been year-to-year fluctuations in the relative amounts of the different products manufactured, but on the whole the increase has been steady, the bulletin adds. "Obviously, milk inclines to that line of manufacturing that is most profitable to producers," it continues, "so that the total production of milk becomes the index of the state of the industry as a whole. The following table gives the production from 1921 to 1927, the 1928 figures being not yet available:

Total Milk Production.

	Milk Lbs.	Fat Equivalent Lbs.	Value Dollars.
1921...	9,863,324,358	345,216,351	205,436,350

"The above figures are compiled from the milk equivalent of the creamery butter, cheese and other manufactured products, and the milk and cream exported, the quantities of which are definitely known, together with the estimated quantity of milk and cream used for direct consumption, and that which is used for dairy butter. Because of these estimates, which can be verified only in the decennial census years, strict accuracy is not claimed for the yearly totals, but as the same basis of calculation is employed every year it is believed that the increases shown are reasonably reliable.

"Although, as shown above, the increase in the quantity of milk produced has been steady and substantial, it has not been large enough during the last two years to satisfy the greatly increased consumption of milk and its products. These home requirements in 1928 exceeded those of 1924 by the equivalent of 70,000,000 pounds of butter, or 143,000,000 pounds of cheese. There has not been any large increase in the production of creamery butter in Canada during the last two or three years. The increases in some parts of the Dominion have been offset by decreases in others, due to the efforts of the farmers to specialize in big wheat crops. In the Autumn of 1928, however, there was a revival of interest in dairying, and since November last year there has been a substantial gain. As an instance of this, from Jan. 1 to April 30, 1929, the increase in dairy products in Saskatchewan was 111 per cent as compared with the same period of the previous year.

"Canadian cheese is much in demand in the world's markets, and there has been a wonderful improvement in quality in recent years owing to the grading system. In 1928 the percentage of first-grade cheese for the whole of Canada was 93.1, as compared with 78 per cent in 1923, the year in which the grading system was inaugurated. This improvement in quality, coupled with a new demand in the United Kingdom for high grade Cheddar cheese, owing to the decrease in the production of this type of cheese in England and Scotland, has placed Canadian cheese in the most favorable position it has occupied since the export trade began in 1886. This was proved by the substantial increase in the output of Canadian cheese in 1928 as compared with the preceding year."

CURB QUIET AND STEADY.

Trading Is Confined Mainly to Public Utility Issues.

Except for some activity in the utility shares, trading was dull and fairly steady on the New York Curb Exchange yesterday. Mead Johnson, Blue Ridge preferred, Ohio Oil and Trans-Lux Pictures were stronger, while Technicolor and Ford stocks eased.

In the utility group, Electric Bond and Share and United States Electric Power declined, while American Gas and Electric, American Superpower and United Light and Power gained.

Transcontinental Oil to Dissolve.

Stockholders of the Transcontinental Oil Company have approved a plan for dissolution, following the sale of the company's assets to the Ohio Oil Company, it was announced yesterday. Ohio Oil holders previously agreed to purchase the assets and assume the liabilities of Transcontinental, and changed the company's capital structure to consumate the deal. The basis of the acquisition is 4-7 share of the new no par shares of Ohio Oil for each share of Transcontinental.

AMERICAS TO SEEK CROP COOPERATION

STIMSON TO WELCOME THEM

Secretaries Hyde and Lamont Will Speak—All Phases of Agriculture on Program.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16.—Thirty-three delegates from fourteen of the twenty-one American republics, including the United States, have been appointed delegates to the First Inter-American Conference on Agriculture, Forestry and Animal Industry to open here Sept. 8, the Pan American Union, which with the Department of Agriculture has been making arrangements for the gathering, announced today.

Secretary Stimson, as chairman of the Governing Board of the Pan American Union, will welcome the delegates at the opening session on Sept. 8, and at following sessions addresses will be made by Secretary Hyde, Secretary Lamont and Dr. George K. Burgess, director of the Bureau of Standards.

Representatives of research institutions and commodity associations are expected to take part in the proceedings. Cooperation in the development of agriculture throughout the Americas, scientifically and economically, is the aim of the conference. The Governing Board of the Pan American Union will be asked to provide for a similar inter-republic conference every five years and national conferences in the intervals.

The program will deal with methods of improving methods of cultivation, economics, plant and animal diseases and pests and production problems. Discussions will include cooperative improvement associations, foreign crop introduction, crop pest prevention and control service, soil and irrigation surveys, problems affecting animal industry, agricultural education, classification and utilization of public lands and soil conservation and fertilizers.

Other topics to be discussed will be food supplies, competition with other countries in the growing and marketing of inter-American tropical crops, cooperative agricultural credit systems, and inter-American cooperative statistical surveys.

Delegates so far named include the following:

BRAZIL—Senor Decio de Paula Machado.
COLOMBIA—Carlos Duran Castro, Dr. Luis Cuervo Marquez and Miguel Lopez Pumarejo.
COSTA RICA—Senor Modesto Martinez and Ramon Aguilar.
DOMINICAN REPUBLIC—Rafael Bracha and Joaquin Marr.
GUATEMALA—Dr. Adrian Recinos.
HONDURAS—Senor Ernesto Arguta and Dr. Wilson Popenoe.
MEXICO—Senor Pascual Gutierrez-Boldan and Senor Juan Mas.
NICARAGUA—Dr. Juan B. Sacasa and Dr. Evaristo Carazo.
PANAMA—Carlos J. Quintero.
PARAGUAY—Dr. Pablo M. Ynsfran.
PERU—Senor Isaias de Pierola.
VENEZUELA—Roberto Alamo Ibarra.

CURB DROPS TWO ISSUES.

First National Copper and New Quincy Mining Taken From List.

The New York Curb Exchange announced yesterday that the stocks of the First National Copper Company and of the New Quincy Mining Company had been removed from trading privileges.

It is understood that the former issue was dropped from the list because the company discontinued its transfer office here. Trading in New Quincy Mining stock was discontinued because its directors voted recently to assess stockholders, and only non-assessable securities are dealt in on the Curb.

WHOLESALE PRICES DECLINED IN JULY

FOODS FELL 4½ PER CENT

Prices of Corn and Hay Increased—Textile Products and Building Materials Ebbed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—A decline in wholesale prices in July as compared with June was reported today by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, the index figure having dropped to 84 as against 86.8 in June, with the average for the year 1926 equaling 100. Based upon these figures, the department said, the purchasing power of the 1926 dollar was $1.19 in July of this year.

Of the 550 commodities of price series for which comparable information for June and July was collected, increases were shown in 57 instances and decreases in 236 instances. In 257 instances there was no change.

Farm products decreased in price, the bureau said, with declines in oats, wheat, beef, cattle, hogs, sheep and lambs, cotton and potatoes. The decrease in the group as a whole from the June level was 6½ per cent. Somewhat higher prices were recorded for corn and hay.

Foods declined over 4½ per cent from the June average, fresh and cured meats, coffee, flour, lard and canned fruits sharing in the decrease.

Hides and leather products were somewhat lower than in June, with hides and skins showing an appreciable drop and leather a minor decline. Practically no change was reported for boots and shoes and other leather products.

Textile Products Downward.

Textile products were downward, with cotton goods, silk and rayon, woolen and worsted goods and other textiles all participating in the decline.

In the group of fuel and lighting materials there were slight advances in anthracite and bituminous coal, while petroleum products declined, causing a small net decrease for the group. Metals and metal products again averaged lower, with small declines in most iron and steel products and larger declines in non-ferrous metals, including aluminum, copper, lead, tin and zinc.

Building materials continued to decline, lumber, structural steel and paint materials averaging lower than in June. Prices of chemicals, drugs and pharmaceuticals, fertilizer materials and mixed fertilizers all were below those of the month before.

House furnishing goods showed no change in the price level, while in the group designated as miscellaneous there was a drop in prices of cattle feed and a slight drop in prices of paper and pulp, rubber, automobile tires and lubricating and cylinder oils. Decreases from June levels were shown for the three large groups of raw materials, semi-manufactured articles and finished products, while non-agricultural commodities and the group of all commodities other than farm products and foods also declined.

Prices and Commodities.

The bureau's index numbers of wholesale prices of commodities by groups and subgroups for July, with comparisons and the purchasing power of the dollar, are as follows:

Fire Sweeps New Haven Brick Plant

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 16 (AP).—Fire today swept the plant of the Howard Company, brick manufacturers, destroying two buildings with an estimated loss of $200,000. Fourteen alarms were sounded, sending all available apparatus to fight the biggest fire here in a year. An engineer on a New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad train discovered the fire as he passed by and sounded a railroad call of fire with the locomotive whistle.

JULY EMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Comparison With Recent Months and With Other Years.

The Federal Labor Department's monthly index number of manufacturing employment in July, published last week, compared as follows with preceding months and with July of previous years, the average for the full year 1926 being reckoned as 100:

Cotton Board Sets Futures Limits.

The board of managers of the New York Cotton Exchange has adopted a resolution, it was announced yesterday, prescribing the following maximum limit of interest on future contracts for delivery in any one month by any member, firm or corporation and his or its affiliations: 150,000 bales this month; 250,000 bales in September, and 1,000,000 bales in October, and in all months up to and including next July.

Need 14 Engineers at Boulder Dam.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (AP).—Fourteen engineers are wanted to work on the $165,000,000 Boulder Canyon dam project by the Bureau of Reclamation. The Civil Service Commission announced today that the salaries ranged from $3,800 to $6,400 a year for civil, electrical and mechanical engineers.

PRICES HOLD STEADY ON PRODUCE MARKET

Tomatoes Sell Cheaply, While Cabbage Slumps After Early Sharp Advance.

CARROTS SLIGHTLY HIGHER

Although New York wholesale markets received only moderate supplies of fresh fruits and vegetables toward the close of the week, there were no radical price advances on most commodities, Dr. Arthur E. Albrecht, director of the New York office of the State Department of Agriculture and Markets, reported yesterday in his weekly survey of local market conditions. Consequently, he said, metropolitan housewives should have no trouble in purchasing their supplies at reasonable prices.

Most of the present abundant supply of tomatoes is coming from the Hudson Valley, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Maryland, the report showed.

The price trend was steadily downward all week because the supply was in excess of trade requirements, and in many cases the price obtained on the wholesale market was of less importance than the problem of finding buyers. Yesterday twenty-quart crates of attractive quality, ripe tomatoes sold within the price range of 25 cents to $1. Corresponding sales a year ago were made at from 75 cents to $1.50.

White Cabbage Slumps.

"During the middle of the week," continued the survey, "there was a scarcity of white cabbage, which resulted in a sharp price advance. This caused local handlers to obtain supplies of this vegetable, with the result that at the end of the week supplies greatly exceeded the demand and prices dropped considerably. In their anxiety to obtain cabbage, dealers went as far as Canada, as well as the western part of New York State, Connecticut and Massachusetts. Cabbage which sold as high as $3 a barrel on Wednesday seldom exceeded $1.50 per barrel yesterday. Situations of this kind are fine examples of the operation of the law of supply and demand.

"Owing to the very limited arrivals of bunched carrots from California, prices have tended upward lately. Near-by bunched carrots also advanced, in sympathy. On the other hand, near-by bunched beets continued in plentiful supply and were reasonably priced at wholesale.

"The bulk of the present supply of cauliflower is coming from the Catskill Mountain area. The cauliflower continued to vary in quality as well as size, and sales ranged accordingly, but no material price advances were noted even on the very finest.

"Celery was in generous supply again last week, the bulk of which was coming from our own State. The market was featured by low prices due to the fact that the supply was more than equal to the demand throughout the week.

Corn Supply Poor.

"Most of the present supply of corn is uniformly poor and therefore received little attention even at low figures.

"Cucumbers were in moderate supply again last week. Really fancy stock sold well.

"Lima beans, as well as string beans of various kinds, were arriving in more liberal volume. This is particularly true from New York up-State, Connecticut and Massachusetts. Prices on the whole were lower at the close of the week.

"Peppers of various kinds, eggplants, squash, turnips and many other vegetables were in liberal supply and sold at reasonable prices.

"Green peas at present are in light supply and prices on really fancy stock averaged higher during the latter part of the week. New York State peas in bushel baskets sold from $1.50 to $2.50, while peas from the West, packed in crates containing 40 to 45 pounds, sold from $4 to $5.25. A year ago New York State peas sold from 75 cents to $1.50 per basket, while peas from the West brought from $2 to $4. The car-lot shipments of green peas for the entire country during the preceding week amounted to 115 cars. During the same week one year ago shipments totaled 225 cars.

"New York up-State continues to furnish exclusively the present supply of the Big Boston variety of lettuce, while California, Washington and Colorado the supply of the Iceberg type. There was a slight price advance on really fancy lettuce, free from tip burn or other defects, during the close of the week, but practically no improvement was noted on off-grade stock. New York State lettuce in crates containing twenty-four head sold at wholesale from 25 cents to $1, while the Western Iceberg type letture in crates containing four and five dozen heads jobbed out from $2.50 to $5, in some instances lower, but only on inferior goods. Last week New York State started 319 carloads of lettuce to various consuming centres, while California, Colorado and Washington shipped 535 cars.

"All types of cantaloupes were much lower in price at the close of the week, due to the poor demand. Honeydew melons in crates containing from five to ten melons sold from 75 cents to $1.75, rarely higher. Honeyball melons in crates containing forty-five melons sold from $2.25 to $3.50. Western cantaloupes in crates containing forty-five melons brought $3 to $3.25, while crates containing the same number from Maryland brought from $1.25 to $2.25.

"Only a limited volume of peaches was unloaded on the market yesterday. The reason for this was an attempt to steady the market somewhat. The latest sales on white and yellow peaches from the South in six-basket carriers were made at $2 to $2.50, occasionally higher on really fancy fruit and lower on inferior. The shipping season for Southern peaches is fast drawing to a close. Their place, however, will be taken up by Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and New York.

"Huckleberries, blackberries and sour cherries, as well as Avocado pears were in fair supply and continued to sell at practically unchanged values."

COTTON QUOTATIONS LOWEST OF YEAR

All Months but July End Day Below 12 Cents—Loss 28 to 35 Points Net.

TRADE CONTINUES ACTIVE

Market Affected by Drop in Prices Abroad and Indications of Big American Surplus.

Following active short covering and a rally of $1 a bale in the last hour on Friday, prices on the Cotton Exchange broke sharply yesterday into new low ground for the year. Weakness in Liverpool, private reports of rain west of the Mississippi River and hedging operations against the moving crop in the South brought heavy pressure on the market. Scale-buying orders were filled without meeting definite resistance and May broke through the 12c figure in the final trading. Closing quotations were lowest of the day, with a loss of 28 to 35 points. All months but July ended the week below 12c and about a cent and three-quarters lower than they were ten days ago.

At 11.35c for October, contracts were $1 a bale lower than at the time of the 18,000,000-bale crop of 1926, when the low level was reached by the January delivery in December at 11.55c. In addition to the decline in American cotton, Indian spot quotations in Liverpool dropped to 3.90d, compared with 5.80d, the low price in 1926. The Egyptian contract level also is several cents lower than in either 1921 or 1926.

Trading here yesterday continued to be the most active of the season, the volume of business expanding materially last week as new contracts were made daily against cotton from the growing crop. Uncertainty both as to the size of the yield and the course of world trade in the coming twelve months influenced dealers in protecting spot purchases by immediate sales of hedges on the contract exchanges. As Washington estimates that production will be more than 1,000,000 bales larger than the world's consumption of American cotton in the last season and the Census Bureau places the carry-over from last season as 2,000,000 bales larger than a year ago and the largest since 1921, indications that an additional surplus will have to be financed are a depressing factor.

The decline in quotations for spot cotton as well as contracts represents a heavy paper loss to the Federal Farm Loan Board on its holdings. When the government went to the aid of cooperative associations last February, spot cotton in New York was selling at 16.10c, compared with 11.60c yesterday. The board has taken up approximately 800,000 bales of certificated cotton, so that the decline of more than 4 cents a pound or $20 a bale represents a depreciation of more than $16,000,000 on this quantity of cotton. Storage charges for three months represent approximately $2 a bale, or $1,600,000, in addition to brokerage and other expenses. The government made advances to growers last Winter on the basis of 16c in the South or nearly 17c for contract prices in New York. No announcement has yet been made regarding plans of the board for financing cotton this season.

Ruberoid in Control of Eternit.

The Ruberoid Company has acquired control of Eternit, Inc., it was announced yesterday. The latter company, said to be the second largest manufacturer of asbestos-cement products in the United States, makes shingles, asbestos lumber, corrugated sheets and other products in St. Louis. These articles will continue to be sold under its trade name. Ruberoid will be associated in the Eternit enterprise with the Belgian Eternit interests.

Scrap Steel Prices Firmer.

A slightly firmer tone has been noticed in prices for scrap steel in the Chicago district, it was reported yesterday. Scrap steel there was quoted at $12 to $12.50 a ton, compared with a previous price of $12 to $12.25.

PUT IN RECEIVER'S HANDS.

Connecticut Mortgage and Title Guaranty Company Dissolving.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug 16 (AP).—The Connecticut Mortgage and Title Guaranty Company was placed in the hands of a receiver today preliminary to dissolution.

Stockholders of the company, which was established in 1917 to deal in realty mortgages and mortgage notes, were notified that the depressed real estate and stock markets were responsible for the difficulties.

The exact state of the corporation's affairs is not known, but it is believed that it will be found solvent. A legal representative expressed the opinion that the stockholders will suffer little, if any loss.

Stockholders were notified that of approximately $11,000,000 of mortgage notes sold by the concern which are now outstanding, about $6,500,000 had been guaranteed, both as to principal and interest, by the company.

WHEAT GOOD IN ALBERTA.

Crop Better and Larger Than a Year Ago, Newspaper Reports.

CALGARY, Alberta, Aug. 16.—Central and Southern Alberta's wheat crop is turning out to be decidedly superior to that of 1929, in both grade and average yield per acre, according to information compiled today for The Calgary Herald's eighth crop report of the season. Reports from representative points indicate that steady progress is being made with harvesting and that a highly satisfactory percentage of the wheat crop will be marketed in the contract grades.

It is estimated that from 40 to 50 per cent of the wheat in the southern part of the Province has been cut, and that with the exception of a few fields where a second seeding was required little will be left standing at the end of two weeks.

Oats and barley are ripening rapidly and will be ready for the binder next week.

TIRE-CASING STOCKS FALL.

Output and Shipments for June and Six Months Drop From 1929.

Inventories of pneumatic automobile tire casings on June 30 amounted to 14,162,170, or 1.2 per cent less than the total on May 31 and 19.5 per cent under the total of June 30, 1929, the Rubber Manufacturers' Association reported yesterday. Production in the first six months of 1930 exceeded shipments by less than 5 per cent, compared with 9 per cent for the corresponding period of last year and with 7 per cent in 1928.

Shipments for June totaled 5,646,658 casings, an increase of 1.5 per cent from May, but a decrease of 22.2 per cent from June, 1929. Production for June was placed at 5,463,737 casings, a decrease of 10.4 per cent from May's production and of 25.2 per cent from that of June, 1929. Shipments for the first six months of 1930 were 23.6 per cent less than in the corresponding period of 1929 and 13.2 per cent under those in 1928.

Lead Output Off From Year Ago.

Domestic production of refined lead in July was 51,538 short tons, compared with 50,721 tons in June and 59,155 tons in July last year, according to figures compiled by the American Bureau of Metal Statistics. Stocks of lead at the end of July were 62,880 tons, against 55,051 tons at the close of June and 49,638 tons at the end of May.

Kelly as the site for a garage for their own use. Billy Harrison of New Rochelle was the broker. Mr. Harrison reported the following additional sales:

For the Pine Brook Realty Company, six-room stucco house with garage at 56 Crestview Place; for Emil Rellstab, six-room stucco house at 66 Crestview Place to Joseph Crawford; for Emil Rellstab, residential corner at Sunhaven Drive and Evergreen Avenue, in the Sunhaven development; for William Leahey, residential lot on Pleasant Street to Robert Morton of Larchmont; for Daniel and Sybil Webb, property on Fifth Avenue, Mamaroneck.

The A. G. Masucci Corporation sold for the East Chester Construction Company an eight-room house in Green Knolls, East Chester.

Sears Opens Two More Units.

Sears, Roebuck & Co. will open two additional units for the sale of automobile accessories at 582 Central Avenue, East Orange, N. J., and 4,510 Hudson Boulevard, Union City, N. J., on Aug. 27 and Aug. 29, respectively, J. M. Barker, vice president of the Eastern territory, announced yesterday. These new stores will carry radios, batteries, electrical appliances, paints, some hardware and sporting goods, in addition to the line of tires, tubes and accessories.

Gift Show Opens Tomorrow.

The sixth New York National Art-wares Show, sponsored by the National Gift and Art Association, will open tomorrow morning at the Hotel Pennsylvania and continue until Aug. 22, an announcement from the association yesterday stated. More than eighty national exhibitors will display their wares, which is about twice the number exhibiting at the Spring display.

MANHATTAN MORTGAGES.

A building loan mortgage for $90,000, payable Aug. 11, 1931, at 6 per cent, was given to the State Title and Mortgage Company by the 337-339 East Thirtieth Street Corporation, Isador Leifer, president, fee owner, and the Hofraad Realty Corporation, Irving H. Wolfe, president, lessee, on the fee and leasehold of 337 and 339 East Thirtieth Street.

On the southeast corner of Riverside Drive and 181st Street, 126 by 100 feet, the New York Title and Mortgage Company took a mortgage for $17,500, due in five years at 6 per cent, from the 880 West 181st Street Realty Corporation, Benjamin Feigenbaum, president.

When Jeremiah F. Donovan took title to 63 Fulton Street, between Cliff and Gold Streets, from Francis E. Holliday, the latter took back a purchase money mortgage for $50,000, payable Aug. 15, 1940, at 6 per cent, and Mr. Donovan then conveyed the property to the Agency Realty and Mortgage Company of 43 Cedar Street.

The New York Title and Mortgage Company took a mortgage from the Sargo Realty Corporation, Abraham Goodman, vice president, for $32,000, due Aug. 14, 1933, at 5½ per cent, on 314-318 West Thirty-fourth Street, having a frontage of 49 feet 8 inches about 225 feet west of Eighth Avenue.

The Midtown Erectors Corporation, Max Psaty, president, gave a demand mortgage for $285,000, at 6 per cent, to the Central Savings Bank on 119 to 125 East Thirty-first Street, which has a frontage of 79 feet and 4 inches.

An additional mortgage for $32,500 was given to the Lawyers Title and Guaranty Company by the Semema Holding Corporation, Samuel Henigson, president, on its twelve-story building at 15 and 17 East Fortieth Street, and this is consolidated with another mortgage held by the bank to make a joint first lien of $500,000 on the premises, due Aug. 1, 1935, at 6 per cent.

On 102 and 104 West Eighty-fifth Street, having a frontage of 69¼ feet adjoining the southwest corner of Eighty-fifth Street, the Lawyers Mortgage Company took from the Nomel Realty Corporation, Helen T. McCarthy, president, and the 102 West Eighty-fifth Street Corporation, J. B. Cooke, president, a mortgage for $350,000, due Sept. 15, 1935, at 5½ per cent.

The United States Realty and Improvement Company took a mortgage from the 425 East Eighty-sixth Street Corporation, Jourmire Silverman, president, for $125,000 on the sixteen-story structure at 423 to 429 East Eighty-sixth Street, between First and York Avenues, payable Aug. 25, 1935, at 6 per cent, to be amortized $3,125 quarterly, beginning Nov. 25, 1932, this being subordinate to a first mortgage of $800,000.

When Cornelius N. and Lizzie P. Bliss sold to the Elpaul Realty Company, Inc., Lydia Bardone, president, 29 East Thirty-seventh Street, they took back a purchase money mortgage for $100,000, due Aug. 14, 1935, at 6 per cent, $1,000 to be paid on the principal every quarter.

John E. Souers gave a mortgage for $32,500 to the Union Guarantee and Mortgage Company, due Aug. 14, 1935, at 6 per cent, on 500 West 112th Street.

On the property at the southeast corner of Eighth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, 48 feet on the avenue and 102 feet on the street, the 254 West Fourteenth Street Corporation, Paul Morfogen, president, gave a mortgage to the Union Mortgage Company for $35,000, due on Feb. 14, of next year, at 6 per cent, subject to a first mortgage for $150,000, held by the New York Savings Bank.

When the Rhodian Holding Corporation sold to the Haril Construction Corporation, William M. Baumgarten, president, the premises at 227 to 233 East Fifty-seventh Street, with a width of 80 feet, the seller took back a purchase money mortgage for $225,000, due Oct. 1, 1936, at 6 per cent, to be amortized at the rate of 5 per cent of the principal semi-annually. This will be subordinated to a building loan mortgage for $700,000, to be used in the erection of a new structure of at least eighteen stories with penthouse.

The Union Dime Savings Bank has agreed to extend its mortgage for $145,000 on 199 to 205 Lafayette Street, which is owned by the 404 Broome Street Corporation, W. B. Parsons, treasurer, to May 1, 1935, at 5½ per cent, $1,500 to be paid off half-yearly.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

The New York Times will pay a reward of $100 to any one causing arrest and conviction for obtaining money under false pretenses through fraudulent advertising in its columns.

Capital Wanted.

HAVING DEVELOPED AN UNUSUAL colony on Long Island and having a vision of continuing such an activity on a larger scale, I am sure there exists somewhere in New York City a young or middle-age couple who would find success with me in the continuance of this work.

If you are interested in home building and decorating; if you have ambition and enthusiastic energy it will be worth your while to communicate with the undersigned.

There is a home awaiting you in the most beautiful setting in the most attractive towns on Long Island.

If, added to the above, you have among your friends a good legal adviser and a certain amount of ready cash, you will be delighted with the opportunity here presented.

Long Island has just begun to make the great strides which will lead to extraordinary development within the next decade.

This advertisement presents to you a real opportunity.

Unstinted references are at your command.

REGULATIONS VARY IN FEDERAL AREAS

Vote Denied in Some Seats of Government Is Compulsory in Buenos Aires.

CANBERRA BARS LANDLORDS

State Rents Out Property in New Australian Capital—House Designs Supervised.

Already a pattern for five other Federal districts, the District of Columbia may soon be copied again, according to recent reports from South America that Colombia plans a "distrito Federal" for its capital, Bogota. Other countries that have created special Federal districts for their capitals are Australia, Argentina, Brazil, Venezuela and Mexico.

Only the two English-speaking nations, the United States and Australia, do not permit the inhabitants of their Federal districts to vote. Elsewhere citizens living in Federal districts have the right of suffrage.

"The largest of the Federal districts is that of Australia, and it is also the newest," says a bulletin from the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic Society. "The Federal Territory of Canberra, where the Australian Government set up housekeeping in 1927, contains 940 square miles. Ample boundaries were drawn for Canberra after an Australian commission visited the District of Columbia and learned that Washington had outgrown its territorial limits. The Australians made their Federal territory more than thirteen times as large as the District of Columbia.

"But Canberra, largest of Federal districts, has also the smallest population—only 8,000 citizens. Conversely, the Federal district of Argentina, next to the smallest of such capital territories, with an area only two square miles more than the seventy square-mile spread of the District of Columbia, has the densest population. Buenos Aires, the Argentine capital, lists 2,030,000 inhabitants.

"Three Federal districts have larger populations than the District of Columbia: Buenos Aires, Argentina; Brazil's Federal district with the capital Rio de Janeiro, and the Federal district of Mexico, with the capital Mexico City. Brazil's 'D. C.' has 1,360,000 inhabitants; Mexico's 906,000. Venezuela's Federal district includes both the capital, Caracas, and the port, La Guaira, with a total population of 195,000.

"Canberra, so similar to Washington, D. C., in local government, in street arrangement and in general design, has certain unusual features that distinguish it from all other Federal districts. No individual may own property in Canberra. The Canberran pays his government 5 per cent per year on the assessed value of his lot. The government may revalue the land at the end of twenty years. Plans for houses must be passed upon by a local board of architects, because Australia is resolved that its new capital shall be beautiful. Canberra has no street cars and no overhead wires. Every city block has a playground, and 100,000 acres have been reserved for parks.

"Venezuela's Federal district has a Governor, Brazil's a 'Prefect' and Argentina's an 'Intendente,' each appointed by the President. Home rule has been most nearly achieved by Buenos Aires, whose Intendente or Mayor can be removed from office by the elected municipal council in case of neglect of duty, malfeasance in office or improper conduct. Washington's citizens cannot vote; in Buenos Aires citizens are fined for not going to the polls."

FINDS THEATRE LEAGUE FUNCTIONS SMOOTHLY

Director Says New Ticket System Is Working as Efficiently as Sponsors Had Hoped.

After operating four weeks against theatre ticket speculation in this city, the League of New York Theatres, which started formally to function on July 21, was reported yesterday by Harlow D. Savage, its executive director, to be moving with "surprising smoothness." The surprise, Mr. Savage added, is on the part of brokers and managers who once viewed with open skepticism the plan to eliminate "gyp" ticket sales.

Mr. Savage expressed himself as being particularly gratified that the cool weather of the past week, which brought theatre-goers out in mid-season numbers, found the league's system working with the efficiency its sponsors had hoped for it. When the plan went into effect a month ago, it was thought that unfavorable conditions would not allow the new ticket allotments to be estimated until September. The past week, Mr. Savage said, has made all those connected with the plan confident that the arrival of September and the "hit" shows will be handled easily in offices of the brokers and the box offices of producers who are members of the league.

"The managers have had a chance to see for themselves how box-office sales have been stimulated," he said yesterday, "and the brokers know that they can get all the seats they can sell for the popular shows." Early disagreements over seat allotments have been fully adjusted, he added.

HELD AS CHECK FORGER.

Bernard Smith, 28 years old, who is said by the police to have passed forged checks on half a dozen New York hotels and to be wanted for similar offenses in Detroit and Washington, was held in $3,500 bail for examination next Thursday by Magistrate Brodsky in Jefferson Market Court yesterday on a charge of forgery.

The complainant against Smith was Jerry Maiatico, a contractor, of Washington, whose name Smith is said to have signed to numerous checks ranging in amount from $50 to $300. Maiatico said he once employed Smith as a rent collector in Washington.

According to Detective Edward Goodman of the West Thirtieth Street Station, who made the arrest, Smith is known to have passed the forged checks on the Pennsylvania, Paramount, New Yorker, Governor Clinton, Lincoln and McAlpin Hotels and on the Western Union Telegraph Company. He also said there were warrants for Smith's arrest in Detroit and Washington.

MONTEVIDEO PAPER SEES US LOSING TRADE

Says Our New Tariff Schedules Have Affected Exports More Than Imports So Far.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTEVIDEO, Aug. 16.—La Mañana, one of the leading Uruguayan newspapers, comments editorially on the effects of the new United States tariff on North American foreign trade, based on the figures for June of this year published by the United States Department of Commerce. The paper declares that the United States foreign trade balance for June, 1930, when the new tariff became effective, as compared with the balance for the same month of last year, showed a decrease much more unfavorable than was expected, emphasizing that the decline in import figures was much less than the decrease in export figures.

Although the influence of the "prohibitive" tariff on United States foreign trade can be estimated by the June figures, the paper adds, the exact magnitude of the decline will be appreciated only in six months or a year, as the new schedules were so recently enforced that the affected nations are just beginning to adopt defensive measures. With this restriction of international trade the interests of everybody are prejudiced, but Americans themselves suffer the most drastic consequences of the measure, whose aim was badly calculated, the paper says. The reduced demand for American goods, it is added, must result in overproduction, with all its unfortunate consequences for employes and employers.

AMERICANS VISIT BALKANS.

Miss Rosalie Morton and Charles E. Bedaux Touring Countries.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Aug. 16.—Two prominent Americans are making Balkan trips. Charles E. Bedaux, an engineer, described in Budapest papers as the most noted exponent of rationalization methods in industry, is expected next week in Budapest. He will inspect the important Ganz-Danubius factory, which has become a disciple of his methods, to see what progress it has made.

Miss Rosalie Morton, a university professor in the United States, has just left Belgrade for a tour of the Serbian districts of Yugoslavia, where she rendered great service during the war in conducting rescue organizations.

QUALITY USED CARS.
A quality used car gives its owner better value than a low priced new car. More in appearance, comfort, performance and long life.
Mileage is often less than 10,000. The original owner has charged off depreciation which any car must sustain the moment it is driven from the salesroom.
Tens of thousands of miles still under the hood. Hundreds of dollars of unused value awaits the second buyer. Four speed transmission makes these cars up to date three years hence.

CORN SHORTAGE AND TRADE RECOVERY.

Definite ending of the corn-belt drought by Thursday's abundant rain makes feasible a calculation of the scope of crop destruction, without discussing what it would be if the drought had remained unbroken. At the same time, reports of public officials in the stricken States, no less than the corn market's action, confirm the earlier impression that an actually critical condition has arisen in only a fraction of the planted area and not as a rule in the largest producing States. This does not mean that the loss as a whole has not been formidable. If the Agricultural Department's estimates of total loss before relief came prove correct, the country's corn crop of 1930 will be 25½ per cent less than the average of the five preceding years and the smallest since 1901, a period when what was considered a normal yield was smaller by 500,000,000 bushels, or perhaps 15 per cent, than a normal harvest nowadays.

In the area which was hit hardest individual distress must be great. But the President's conference has arranged to meet that situation—first, by advancing loans through private or public agencies; next, by reducing railway rates and enlarging railway facilities so as to bring outside cattle fodder promptly to the hard-pressed districts, or to carry to market quickly live stock that cannot be supported. On the Chicago grain market, where corn prices had risen 16¼ cents per bushel in July and 14 cents more during the August drought, they had fallen back 8 cents toward the end of last week. This at least suggested that the expectation of total loss expressed by the previous week's market has been considerably revised; it may possibly foreshadow revision of the official estimate.

Even so, two questions will necessarily remain: the effect of this unlucky incident on the country's agricultural fortunes and on the general business situation. The farmer's condition has apparently been made worse. He had hoped for sufficient curtailment of the wheat crop to lift that cereal's price above its present unremunerative basis, and for a good crop of such other grains as commanded better prices. But at the moment of the sweepingly reduced corn crop estimate the forecast of the wheat yield is raised above last month's, indicating a harvest 14,000,000 bushels greater than in 1929. This happens when the unsold "carry-over" from last year's harvest exceeds by 20,000,000 bushels the huge surplus of a year ago, while the unsold corn from last year's harvest is, with one exception, much the smallest in eleven years.

Farmers whose corn crop was in great part saved will no doubt find compensation in the higher price. It is even possible, in view of the unprecedented fact that corn has been selling for early Autumn delivery 6 or 8 cents a bushel over wheat, that the wheat surplus may be slightly drawn down through feeding that grain to stock. But it is impossible that, with conditions what they are in wheat and corn, the farm belt's buying power should not be considerably impaired. Experience has taught that, while such reduction in demand from agricultural consumers may be offset by other influences when the general trend of trade and prices is upward, it becomes a more trying handicap when occurring in an hour of general trade reaction.

Yet the even greater corn crop failure of 1901, coming as it did in the face of reactionary markets and falling prices, did not prevent substantial recovery in the general situation when staple prices, in the ensuing Winter, had begun to turn upward. No such turn in prices has come as yet; aside from the recent recovery in agricultural products, the slow downward drift has continued. On the other hand, the important facts remain of production of manufactured goods so curtailed this year, and accumulation of unsold goods held down so closely, that recuperation in buying power by other than agricultural communities might easily check both the withholding of merchants' orders and the marking down of prices. Rigid restriction of consumers' purchases, as it will presently have been pursued for nearly a year, inevitably creates a new condition; it did so even in the bewildering circumstances at the end of 1921.

AMERICANS AND THE COURT.

In this midsummer dullness it is hard to detect signs of widespread interest in this country concerning the World Court. The question of our formal adherence to it was put aside by President Hoover. Accepting the report of the Department of State, he informed the Senate last Winter that he heartily approved our joining, and that he would send a special message on the subject at some "convenient" time. That hour did not arrive, in his judgment, while Congress was in session, and while tariff troubles and the controversy about the ratification of the naval treaty were piled thick upon him. Yet recent dispatches from Geneva, reporting the nomination of many Americans as possible judges in the World Court, even though the United States is not formally a member of it, must have reminded many otherwise forgetful of the great importance of this tribunal of international justice.

It is to be wholly reconstituted in the election of judges next month, as the terms of all those now sitting expire. A few of them will doubtless be chosen to serve again, but the larger number will be elected for the first time. All the Americans thus far proposed have been put forward by foreign nations. Our own nominators have not yet made their selections, though it is understood that they will do so in time for action at Geneva. In the list of Americans already suggested by other national groups, some are obviously ineligible. Mr. Root, for example, could not possibly undertake the labor devolved upon judges of the World Court. But if it is merely a question of doing him high honor in urging his name, he certainly deserves it as truly as any living man. The strong probability is, of course, that when the American nominators agree upon American names—which they well might choose from among those already reported at Geneva—the other nations will gladly fall in with our preferences.

There may be certain difficulties in bringing about a harmonious election at Geneva. A group of South American nations has strongly intimated that it insists upon having one or more representatives on the bench of the World Court. This may cause a little friction. Then there is the fear, which has been expressed in certain quarters, that some of the new judges will be urged rather as representatives of the foreign policy of their governments than as impartial administrators of justice. To keep any such tendency out of the composition of the court is obviously much to be desired. When an American takes his place in the World Court he will, it is to be hoped, divest himself entirely of all national prejudices and pass upon every question submitted to the court "as becometh a judge."

COOPERATION.

A statement made by Mr. Charles P. Howard, President of the International Typographical Union, published in The Typographical Journal, is addressed specifically to those in the printing industry; but it gives such clear and forcible expression to a sound principle that it should have wider circulation:

> The fundamental policy of this organization [Typographical Union] is cooperation. The printing industry is privately operated upon a profit basis. To be able to sell the services of our members for the highest wage and upon best conditions, union printers must maintain standards of production as to quantity and quality that cannot be met by non-unionists or unorganized workers. Persons who accept an economic philosophy of sabotage or communism, or practice restriction of production, have no place in an organization which is committed to the cooperative theory. It is not possible, under our system, to take out of the industry in wages more than we put into it in service. Our purpose is to secure a fair share of that which we assist to produce.

This needs no elaboration. The principle to which adherence is urged by this outstanding leader of labor is at the basis of economic production and of wholesome human relations. It is summed up in the word cooperation. It involves on one side a fair share, in terms of wages and conditions, of what labor aids in producing, and on the other higher standards of production than can be met by unorganized labor. The complement of "highest wage and upon best conditions" is "the highest standard of production." The first without the second means industrial decline, economic and moral. "To work skillfully is the true vocation of man," and to check that activity in its full expression is to defeat man in working out his destiny; for in the "joy of creative skill" the individual has notice that he is achieving his destiny.

GERMANY AND FRANCE.

The past week saw a significant development in the relations between France and Germany. In the course of the political campaign now growing heated in Germany, a member of the Cabinet made a speech in which he demanded immediate revision of the Versailles Treaty, so as to return at once to Germany the small portion of her territory assigned to Belgium together with the whole of the Danzig corridor. He also referred to other concessions which France might be expected soon to make to Germany, like the recent evacuation of the Rhineland five years before the date set by the treaty of peace. The effect of this apparently semi-official attitude of the German Government was such in France that M. Briand sent for the German Ambassador in Paris, notified him of the disquieting consequences of the address by the German Minister, and asked that Berlin be requested to prevent such unseemly utterances in the future. It would appear that this protest has led the German Chancellor to issue orders to his subordinates to be more moderate and discreet in what they have to say about German foreign policy.

The case seems to be another instance of the defective political psychology which too many Germans display in connection with other countries. They do not understand that other peoples may be as sensitive as they are themselves. Speaking in what they conceive to be a proper sense of their own national pride, they give offense to others by overstepping the bounds of official propriety. This fault has been admitted and deplored by intelligent Germans. Only recently the well-known Professor Foerster has been rapping the Pan-Germans over the knuckles. He reproaches them for grudgingly accepting any favor and then making it an excuse to demand new ones. Give them an inch and they call for an ell. If they could have their way, declares Professor Foerster, they would soon set up a claim for an entire redistribution of the whole world according to their own ideas. One of them, the famous Herr Hitler, lately declared: "We have a "right to territory superior to all others, "because we ourselves haven't enough." The German Government will not be called upon to disavow any such absurdities, but it does well to restrain the ardor and the imprudence of its own spokesmen. Only so can it hope to enter into friendly arrangements with France, and to conduct fruitful negotiations with M. Briand at Geneva.

PHILOSOPHIC DOUBTS.

If you put a kettle on a nice hot fire, will the water freeze? Perhaps it will and perhaps it won't. Bertrand Russell, confiding in the readers of The Atlantic, thinks it probably won't. But he isn't quite sure. It might, some day. An army of monkeys strumming idly on typewriters—the illustration is Eddington's—would be unlikely, even in an aeon or two, to produce all the books in the British Museum, but then they might. You never can tell. Certainties give way to probabilities. A red flag is really not a badge of revolution, or a warning signal, or even something that a bull doesn't like, but merely an "un-"dulatory distribution of statistical "probabilities of certain kinds of quan-"tum transitions in atoms."

So far go, so good. The layman will be quite content to let Mr. Russell play with his quanta, defending himself against the bull with the darts of science. If the mathematician insists on lugging around with him his monkeys and his vacua and his drops of ink diffused in a pail of water, no one will object. And it is comforting to any one but a journalist to learn from so high an authority that the universe is every day becoming more probable. It is only when Mr. Russell begins to cast doubt on the laws of chance themselves that we begin to tremble. Mr. Keynes maintains that even the best-grounded inductions are not more likely to be true than false, and Mr. Russell does not know how to refute his arguments. Will the sun rise tomorrow? "We none of us feel any "serious doubts on this subject, and yet "the best view seems to be that it is "not more likely to rise than not to "rise."

Leaving aside the disturbing effects of such a conclusion on the scientist and philosopher, consider where it leaves the man in the street. He may know only enough of the rudiments of the laws of chance to play a fair game of poker, but he acts on them unconsciously every moment of his life. If he leaves the house a minute later than usual in the morning, he wonders what the chances are of his catching his train. He crosses the street in the middle of the block because he thinks the chances are that he will get over safely. The statistics are against him, but the laws of chance served nevertheless as the maxim of his volition. He takes one piece of apple pie for lunch but not two, reflecting that if he were to eat two the chances are he would have a stomachache. Unconsciously he judges the excellence of his chauffeur's driving by whether he takes the same chance of accident under all traffic conditions—and that a moderate one. Drifting down a moonlit river in a canoe with a lovely maiden and feeling that his chances are reasonably good, he says to himself, "It's now or never," and pops the question.

If the laws of chance fail him, where is he to turn for guidance? And yet his plight is enviable compared to that of the newspaper man. The latter may view with such equanimity as he can command Mr. Russell's distant prospect of a world where all the cards have been so well shuffled that one thing is about as likely to happen as another. But what if, as Mr. Keynes suggests, and Mr. Russell is unable to deny, the laws of chance may betray us this very day? The prospect is nothing short of appalling. Dr. Cook may be the first to climb Mount Everest. President Hoover is as likely as not to embrace Senator Norris on the White House steps. The man may bite the dog any minute now, and then what will become of the newspapers?

PRIMARY AND CONVENTION.

Some time ago Idaho modified her primary laws and provided that State conventions should nominate candidates for United States Senator, Representative in Congress and elective State offices. As a chronic antagonist, Mr. Borah had to oppose the amendment. In a few days the Republican State Convention will renominate him. The bother and expense of holding a primary, which would have done the same thing, are saved. Is there any real necessity either for a quiet primary like the Virginia Democratic function, which made Senator Glass again a candidate, or for the Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska primaries, where the oracle of the people's will registered after long weeks of tumultuous pre-primary hullabaloo and whoop?

There are many more Norrisian "Republicans" than regular Republicans in Nebraska. Would the hero have fared any less well if he hadn't had to take and give so much trouble? It seems justifiable to make the same assumption in the case of the Kansas and Oklahoma Republicans. It may be that in the three States in question there is so much interest in political campaigns and amenities that the people have come to look upon them as free vaudeville and melodrama. They may be worth the money as a show: "'Pan 'em' and a circus," as Professor Edgar Howe of the Potato Hill Seminary translates. In South Carolina the soul of man under Blease must be rather irritated than amused by the performance.

There has been no charge of excessive expenditure in this month's primaries, save in the case of Colorado and that of Mr. Jones of West Virginia, the Republican nominee for Senator. A labor paper in Washington discovered, on the strength of hearsay or surmise, that he had spent a trifling million dollars in his campaign. The West Virginians hadn't heard of it, but doubtless Senator Nye will drink it like molten pearls. He has an "observer" in Massachusetts. After the primaries, let the wicked beware! Already the judicious Mr. Caraway foresees the exclusion of Mr. Davis of Pennsylvania and Mrs. McCormick of Illinois from a Senate of which they are unworthy. Meanwhile, in the majority of States the machine manipulates the newer mechanism as easily as it manipulated the older.

To be sure, the Massachusetts Democratic conference failed to select candidates for the primary to ratify. In a State convention the temperamental fervors that boil up in Boston could have been settled after a few short clashes and some discharge of rhetoric and wit. Instead, there is a prolonged exhibition of heat and "grouch." It is hardly too much to say that the direct primary has changed nothing or, where it has, for the worse. Will its greatest achievement be to deny to great States, from time to time, full representation in the Senate?

"RECOGNITION DAY."

At Chautauqua the ceremony of granting "scrolls" in certification of the completion of a course of reading extending over a period of at least four years takes place at what is still called "recognition day." There is in this no suggestion of commencing life or ending an education. It is simply a public acknowledgment of a patient effort, often pursued alone and amid homely vicissitudes, to acquire what was neglected or denied in youth. This year the day had a special distinction because recognition was given to Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, the daughter of Mr. Lewis Miller, who, with Dr. John H. Vincent, established Chautauqua over half a century ago as a "university" in the grove and by the lake, where those who had done the prescribed reading and others so minded might spend a few weeks in study and recreation away from their homes.

It was the precursor of the Summer schools which now gather tens of thousands of adults under the most competent of instruction, as was true of Chautauqua even in its primitive days. The scope of its Summer curriculum has changed, and the home reading has now a wider range, but the basic idea of Chautauqua continues to animate the institute, where the uniquely typical building is still the simple "Hall in the Grove" to which its readers come for recognition.

Mrs. Edison, by completing the C. L. S. C. course, has kept faith with the founders and emphasized anew the serious purpose which has given Chautauqua a deserved place in the history of American education.

LIBERTY AND DISCIPLINE.

Mr. H. A. L. Fisher, Warden of New College, Oxford, who came to America to make the principal address at the tercentenary celebration at Boston, hurried back to speak to the teachers of England on new ideas in education. He was Minister of Education during the war and is eagerly heard whenever and wherever he speaks as the author of the "Children's Charter" and as one of the most forward-looking and constructive of educational leaders in the world. The lecture-room in which he appeared so soon after he left the vast audience on the Boston Common was crowded, awaiting his coming.

What he said was in attitude, though not in words, what Dr. John Dewey recently said to some of his disciples here who are casting out pedagogical demons in his name. The cry has been for more liberty and less discipline, and much of the progress on both sides of the Atlantic has been due to the influence of "the school of liberty"; but there, as here, this school has had its extreme zealots who are apt to push the idea too far. In a certain group of schools, which Mr. Fisher specifically names, "elaborate sense training" is very often imposed on children who would be better employed exercising their minds. That children and youth should be entrusted with their own education is "superficially attractive," but he pertinently asks whether they will discipline themselves.

For answer he cites a happening in a "very progressive American college" he had visited, where discipline was confined to the students, the female students controlling the girls and the male students the boys. Just before his arrival two girls, the most brilliant in college, had been expelled by the disciplinary council for smoking cigarettes on the campus and were even prevented from receiving an education in any alternative place of learning. The president of the college did not interfere with this "monstrously severe sentence," as the students must be allowed to learn from their own mistakes.

While this is not an instance of intellectual "discipline" and could hardly have occurred in a "very progressive" college, it does serve to suggest that justice, being difficult to exercise, the young must learn the lesson from the old, and the old must not shirk responsibility; for children wish to copy older persons, need their counsel and are influenced by them. There is an obiter dictum which will invite dissent of the progressives and dishearten the undisciplined: "but it does not appear to be "possible to do without examinations, "for inquiry showed that intelligence "tests are no substitutes." One could wish that Mr. Fisher had delayed a little here in order to speak to the teachers of America.

JUDEAN PARANOMASIA.

Dr. Allan, Professor of Hebrew at Bradford, in England, is no sensational pamphleteer. He is a profound scholar. Lately he has translated Isaiah for a shilling book. The unusual thing about the rendering of the Hebrew is that it reveals the Prophet as inveterate in the use of that form of speech known to the erudite as "paranomasia"; to the rest of us, punning. King James's version gives no inkling that the stern augur descended ever from elevated forms of speech. So far as most people knew, Isaiah dealt only in sumptuous figures of speech draped in terrifying solemnity.

Yet his problem with the Hebrews in the market-places was much the same as that which confronts the curb-stone orator now: how to get the crowd around to listen. To make this clear, Dr. Allan renders the Hebrew into such modern words and phrases as "wash-out" and "fed up." According to his translation the Prophet's puns were innumerable.:

> For redress (cedaqah), but behold distress (ce'aqah).

What the Bible construes as "if ye "will not believe, surely ye shall not be "established," the modern authority translates as "if ye don't believe, ye won't be-alive." If this construction follows the Hebrew more closely than does the standard text, it is clear that the coming of Isaiah to a town meant entertainment thrown in with prophetic warnings.

FORGOTTEN GARDEN.

And ivy steeped in memory drapes a wall,
Where hollyhocks like dreaming candles tall
Light this lost garden, crumbling and gray.
Phlox, white, like lovely ladies in their day,
Bend swiftly as if answering some call
Where now alone forgotten pansies fall
And faded moonbeams desolately stray.

Clear as are morning trumpets, marigolds
Lift, rapturous, their faces to the sky
Where tones of sweet birds vanish in the folds
Of rhythm's far-forgotten songs and die.
And all the rose-gold swooning hour holds
Echoes the requiem of love's good-bye.

Proceedings at Drought Relief Conference.

And Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is the sound of abundance of rain—I Kings, xviii, 41.

Just wait until a United States Senator decides to enter one of these endurance contests!

If the Afghans have any more room in the caverns to which the British airmen have driven them, they might move over for several Tammany district leaders.

There is as yet no evidence that the flag-waving ceremony which takes place in Tammany Hall each Fourth of July is to be supplanted by immunity waiving.

Again the annual announcement can be made that there is no gambling at Saratoga—except by those who know personally the bookmakers and the doorkeepers.

A lady writes in to say that she cannot understand why the tobacco-growers are complaining because their plants are all dried up; her husband won't smoke it any other way.

Evidently some of those mid-West porcines whose feed was cut off by the drought took advantage of reduced railroad rates by coming to New York City and opening fruit and vegetable stands.

Among the economic wastes practiced by a prosperous community is the new arrangement of bringing New York's garbage scows back empty from Rum Row. This is known as giving prohibition enforcement a Hand.

The English and the Irish are here, afloat and on horseback, in the hope of taking home some of America's large collection of cups. Opinion in Scotland is that so long as Bobby Jones eschews polo and yachting, their fellow-islanders have a chance.

"I dunno when I've bin so relieved," said Farmer Watkins as he renewed his mortgages, buried seven starved cows, helped put out a hay-fire, canceled his son's college plans and handed his daughter a hoe, "as when I read in the papers that the drought affects only the feed crops and not the food crops."

Baseball and Cricket.

Baseball magnates are again agitating changes in the rules. This season's record of excessive hitting of home runs and slaughter of pitchers has led some to advocate the entire dropping of the present lively ball, or shortening the distance between the pitcher's box and the home plate. What they wish to avoid is the sudden eruption of runs, sometimes as many as ten in a single inning. Mightn't they take a hint from cricket? After the young Australian marvel, Bradman, had made 334 runs, with a couple of hundred or so piled up by his fellows, the Australian captain "declared" his innings finished, although several wickets were yet to fall. Patrons of baseball might be pleased if a nine which had made fourteen or fifteen runs in three or four innings would declare their turn at the bat ended and simply give the other side a chance to see what they could do.

Those British Initials.

Another difference between cricket and baseball—even amateur baseball—is the stateliness of the names of British players and their long strings of initials. For example, we read that when A. P. F. Chapman was removed as England's captain he was replaced by R. E. S. Wyatt. Of course, England is a much older country than ours and has been many centuries in piling up these initials. Perhaps it will be A. D. 3000 before our sporting pages will contain such items as the following:

> The contest between the Yankees and the Athletics was featured today by the batting of G. H. B. Ruth and the pitching of R. L. S. Grove.

Then, and only then, can we be said to have achieved parity.

The Week's Primaries.

Among the tremendous issues settled by voters in State preliminary elections last week, a few stand out. Ohio Democrats decided to be Wet in Washington and Dry in Columbus. Whiskers and oratory prevailed over riches and oil in Oklahoma. Arkansas refused to punish Senator Joe Robinson for taking tea on the terrace of the Commons while in London. Alabama held a primary without the presence of Tom Heflin. And Nebraska renominated on the Republican ticket a Senator who voted for Al Smith for President and attacks Mr. Hoover every day.

"The Democratic party faces the country on a united front," said Chairman Jouett Shouse, commenting on the primaries. "Where we are not Dry, we are sopping Wet. Where we are not conservative, we are intensely radical. In those States where our nominees did not help pass the tariff bill, we are bitterly opposed to it. In Nebraska, our candidate, Mr. Norris, is the most useful man in public life. I mean in Nebraska, our candidate, Mr. Hitchcock, is the most useful man in public life."

"Prospects are wonderful for the Republicans," said Senator-Chairman Fess. "Congress, if we control it, will be a national forum. Mr. Morrow of New Jersey will state one side of the prohibition question, Mr. McCulloch of Ohio the other. I shall attempt to present the attitude of the President, while my beloved colleague from Nebraska, Mr. Norris, will attempt to discredit it. Mr. Borah and Mr. J. J. Davis will represent labor; Mrs. McCormick and Mr. Butler of Massachusetts will speak for capital. A-comin' or a-gwine, the people are bound to run into a Republican traveling in the same direction."

OUR DWINDLING GOLD

Outflow Is Puzzling and Erratic, but Not Alarming.

By FRANCIS H. SISSON,
Vice President, Guaranty Trust Company of New York.

One of the interesting features of the current period of business depression in the United States is the erratic and somewhat puzzling behavior of the gold supply. Within the past month about $75,000,000 in gold has been shipped out of the United States, mostly for France and Canada. This is one of the largest monthly gold movements on record, and it is the more spectacular by reason of the fact that it follows on the very heels of a large-scale gold inflow of two years' duration, uninterrupted except in the two months following the New York stock market panic last Autumn.

International gold shipments are the net results of an intricate maze of payments between countries, and the leading causes of an export or import movement at any given time can only be guessed at. The Department of Commerce, by its publication of annual figures covering the balance of international payments, has given us a much more comprehensive view of the transactions between the United States and foreign countries than was possible before. But even these figures are necessarily based in part on estimates so inexact that rather violent methods are necessary to make the account balance.

Loan Readjustment a Factor.

Nevertheless, it is now possible to state with confidence that the importation of gold into the United States during the last two years was due mainly to the drastic curtailment of American long-term loans to foreign countries and to the absorption of huge amounts of foreign short-term funds by the inflated American stock market of 1928 and 1929. These two factors combined to reduce the net export of American capital from $934,000,000 in 1928 to $373,000,000 in 1929. The market crash was followed immediately by the withdrawal of large blocks of these foreign funds, hence the exportation of nearly $90,000,000 in gold in November and December, 1929. The import movement was resumed in January, and in the first six months of 1930 more than $200,000,000 in gold entered this country.

The similarity of the circumstances surrounding the two abrupt reversals of the gold import movement during the past year is striking. In October, 1929, the stock market suffered the most violent crash in its history, and during the next two months $90,000,000 in gold was exported. In May and June, 1930, the market again broke badly, and again gold was withdrawn.

The suggested analogy is probably sound, in part at least. It is likely that the reduced demand for call money resulting from the heavy decline of stock prices in May and June brought about a substantial withdrawal of foreign short-term funds from New York and thus helped to precipitate the current export gold movement.

Shipments Not Unusual.

At any rate, large international gold shipments at times of financial crisis and depression are not at all unusual. The transition from prosperity to depression is ordinarily much more abrupt than the opposite one from depression to prosperity, and the present case is no exception to the rule. It naturally follows that financial markets at such times are subject to rather violent disturbances, and since these disturbances do not coincide in all countries, either as to time or degree, gold movements are a natural result.

Nor is it at all surprising to find gold flowing out of the United States at a time of such abnormal ease in our money markets as now exists. The export movement would have begun several months earlier except for the fact that conditions in foreign markets are similar to those in our own.

Another factor that has helped to stimulate gold exports is the marked increase in foreign borrowing that has followed the restoration of easy money in New York. Foreign financing in the first half of 1930 exceeded by $100,000,000 the total for the entire year 1929. Thus, in spite of the fact that business men in foreign countries are not in a very venturesome mood at the moment, a substantial demand for American capital is still evident. The recovery of business abroad should be accompanied by a further increase in this demand, unless the corresponding recovery in the United States brings about a much tighter money situation than can now be foreseen.

Canada Needs Gold.

As far as Canada is concerned, the shipment of gold at present is both natural and desirable. Canada needs the gold and the United States does not. Banking policy in this country for many years has been based on the assumption that our immense gold stocks are abnormal and that any safe method to stimulate their redistribution is to be recommended. The repatriation of gold was well under way when it was interrupted by the speculative demand for short-term funds in New York, which resulted in high money rates and attracted gold from all over the world. Canada was one of the worst sufferers from this reverse flow of gold. So severe did the shortage of the metal become that the Canadian authorities were forced to take the distasteful step of imposing restrictions practically amounting to a temporary suspension of the gold standard. The movement of gold to Canada at present, therefore, will bring much-needed relief.

The reasons for the continued flow of metal to France are by no means so obvious. Ever since the gold stock of the United States reached its peak of $4,700,000,000 in May, 1927, France has been steadily absorbing gold, not only from America but from other countries as well. Between May 16, 1927, and June 23, 1928, when the gold standard was restored in France, net exports of gold from the United States reached a total of $458,300,-

000, of which $228,500,000, or nearly one-half, went to France. The resumption of gold payments was followed by further accumulation. Between June 23, 1928, and Jan. 11, 1929, $89,400,000 more was sent to France, although at that time the United States was importing gold from most other countries. The great import movement into this country during the first ten months of last year did not include any French gold; on the contrary, France received $2,900,000 more from us during that period. Of the $91,000,000 exported from the United States in the last two months of 1929, France got $62,300,000, or 68½ per cent. Although the United States imported a net amount of more than $220,000,000 in the first half of this year, net exports to France totaled nearly $8,500,000. The bulk of the gold exported during the past month has gone to Paris. Total gold shipments from the United States to France since May, 1927, therefore, amount to well over $400,000,000.

In the beginning gold was deliberately accumulated by the Bank of France in order to strengthen the metallic reserve and facilitate the restoration of the gold standard. During the period of rapid depreciation of the franc that preceded stabilization, large amounts of private French capital were expatriated and held abroad in the form of bank balances in foreign currencies. When stabilization was achieved, these foreign balances began to return home. The Bank of France bought them up and either converted them into gold or allowed them to remain on deposit in foreign banks, whence they could be recalled at will. The gold reserve of the central bank was also augmented by the acquisition of hoarded gold that had gone into hiding while the ultimate value of the franc was still problematical.

French Movement Puzzling.

At first sight it is puzzling that France, with a consistent import balance on merchandise account, has nevertheless been able to absorb gold from abroad in such large quantities and so uninterruptedly. In addition to the peculiar situation just mentioned, which enabled the Bank of France to lay its hands on large foreign balances readily convertible into gold, several other conditions have favored the process. The import merchandise balance is offset by numerous important "invisible exports." France is a rather large investor abroad, and her foreign loans have brought in a steady revenue which has not been reinvested in other countries. She has received large sums for reparations and has paid comparatively small amounts to Great Britain and the United States on account of war debts. She has entertained vast numbers of American tourists, whose expenditures represent, of course, a credit item in France's balance of payments, just as much as if commodities of an equivalent value had been exported to the United States.

In these ways France has added steadily to her gold stocks without drawing down her foreign balances by an equal amount. At one time these balances amounted to about $1,275,000,000; by the middle of 1929 they had been reduced to $1,000,000,000, and at present they aggregate approximately the same amount, although about three-fourths of the total consists of bills bought and only about one-fourth represents credit balances immediately convertible into gold.

At present the amount of gold held by the Bank of France is far above the minimum legal reserve, and France is second only to the United States in the amount of gold held. Under these conditions, the continued flow of the metal into France has aroused considerable criticism, especially in Great Britain, where some difficulty has been experienced in maintaining reserves at a level regarded as safe. It is alleged that the Bank of France has deliberately "sterilized" its gold—has locked it up and prevented it from exerting its normal inflationary influence, which would have prevented the import movement from reaching such large proportions. It has even been hinted that the policy of the bank was inspired by the government and was based on political rather than economic motives.

Bank of France Explains.

All such statements are emphatically denied both by the government and the bank. When the struggle for stabilization was under way, every practicable method was admittedly used to attract gold into France, and at that time such a policy could hardly have been criticized because France needed the gold. But it is maintained that the continued importation of gold into France since about the middle of 1929 is due to normal influences and that no artificial measures have been used to effect the movement. The official attitude is stated in the latest annual report of the Bank of France, which says that the increase in the bank's reserve during the second half of 1929 was "merely the natural result of the international movement of funds."

As a matter of fact, the persistent inflow of gold is regarded with some concern by French bankers and economists. Regardless of the policy of the Bank of France, it is doubted whether gold can be "sterilized." That feat was attempted by the Federal Reserve System in the United States, and although no inflation appeared in commodity markets, the course of events in the stock market was another story. Already there are signs that the large French gold stock is exerting an inflationary influence.

It is far from certain, therefore, that further gold imports will represent a favorable development from the French point of view. Aside from the danger of inflation, excessive gold stocks necessarily involve an enormous loss of potential revenue, since they are non-earning assets. Whether or not inflation ensues, a continuation of the import movement will be a doubtful boon to France.

From the American point of view, then, the current gold movement is distinctly welcome, since it marks progress in the redistribution of the abnormally large supply in this country. From the Canadian point of view it is even more welcome, as long as Canada continues to be one of the recipients. From the British point of view it is disquieting, for gold stocks in London are none too large. England, along with America, has been losing gold to France and British finance is facing the seasonal drain on London that is invariably occasioned by the movement of the American grain and cotton crops.

But the view expressed in some quarters that France will continue for an indefinite term of years to draw gold from the rest of the world is certainly open to question. It is not only that financial opinion in France will presumably see the futility and danger of such a policy, but the success of any such scheme would require the avoidance of inflation—the permanent sterilization of gold in France. And while such an achievement cannot be arbitrarily branded as impossible, it would, to say the least, be extremely difficult.

The concern with which French gold absorption is regarded by certain elements in other countries is naturally heightened by the much-discussed possibility of a world-wide gold shortage in coming years. It must be admitted that a fairly strong statistical case has been made out by those who believe that the world's volume of trade is increasing faster than its gold supply. Moreover, no new fields of any great promise are now known to geologists. The gold standard is gradually being extended not only in Europe but in countries which for many years have used silver, such as India, China, Persia, &c., and the extreme instability of the value of silver in recent years has imposed such hardship on silver-standard countries that they are expected to hasten their adoption of gold as much as possible. All these influences will tend to enhance the value of gold, or, in other words, to depress commodity prices in gold-standard countries.

Might Affect Gold Standard.

If such a development actually takes place it will have far-reaching effects on business throughout the world. Declining prices always tend to restrain business activity, although gradual and long-term price declines in the past have not prevented industry and trade from experiencing intermittent periods of prosperity. A declining trend in commodity prices would increase the burdens on debtor countries by forcing such countries to pay their debts in monetary units of higher purchasing power than they borrowed, and in this way it might lead to further agitation for a downward revision of the war debts—a possibility that has already received some attention in Europe. It has even been suggested that a very sharp increase in the value of gold might force some countries back to the silver standard.

All such discussions at the present moment must be regarded as mainly academic. It is, of course, not impossible that there may be a gold shortage and that prices may decline irregularly over a long period. But many things may intervene to prevent such a development. The most likely is that the Bank for International Settlements and other banking agencies will effect further economies in the use of gold similar to those achieved in the United States through the adoption of the Federal Reserve System. The solution of the problem may be found in events that no human being can now foresee. Any attempt to look so far into the future encounters such an array of possibilities that the mind recoils from the task of appraising their relative importance.

No Need for Alarm.

Gold has stood in the mind of man as the symbol of value, the token of riches, since the earliest days of recorded history. The Hebrew prophet deemed worth of character "more to be desired than gold." Jason sought the golden fleece, and the old legend places a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. Christian teaching is summed up in the Golden Rule, and storied El Dorados of golden treasure have been the unfailing lure of the world's adventurous spirits. To this day the report of a new gold discovery sends men swarming into desert and mountain, braving unknown perils and hardships in the hope of unearthing the magic metal. While this attitude remains, statesmen and financiers will think long and carefully before challenging the right of gold to rule.

Some modern Midas who possessed the magic power to transmute base substances into gold by his touch would be most welcome, providing his activities could be restrained within the limitations of financial safety. Too much gold might be more harmful than too little. Lacking such miraculous power or the discovery of new stores in the earth, the solution of the problem must rest with the bankers for the present, with the hope that improved methods of handling the existing supply may tend to minimize its need.

In the meantime the gold flow will follow economic trends and the abuses it creates, if any, will carry within themselves the seeds of correction. At least we in the United States can view the situation without alarm and rest on the assurance that fundamental laws will continue to assert their authority as to both the direction and velocity of the gold flow.

Our gold supply is more than ample for our present and prospective needs. Any excess amount will serve a better purpose as a credit base in the hands of prospective buyers of American goods than lying dormant in American vaults.

Letters From Times Readers on Topics in the News

WE ARE EXTREMELY IGNORANT OF CLIMATIC CYCLES' ACTION

They Do Exist, It Is Maintained, and Exert a Powerful Influence on Meteorology

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The recent heat wave in nearly all parts of the United States, the West Indies and many portions of Europe and Asia is sufficiently impressive an object lesson of our general ignorance of climatic cycles that it may wake up governmental bureaucracy to the need of something besides the routine grind about high and low pressures, and bring home to the highest officials in Washington the fact that weather cycles do really exist of as profound a significance in meteorology as the circulation of the blood was in medicine at the time of Harvey's great discovery, 1616 A. D.

In 1929, following the cold Winter of 1928-29, I proved definitely by careful historical research running back to the time of Caesar (51 B. C.), Hannibal (218 B. C.), Alexander the Great (326 B. C.), and Xerxes (480 B. C.)—2,409 years ago—that there is a cold cycle having in the long run a period of exactly eleven years. There is also a heat cycle of the same average duration, but the phases of the two cycles usually are separated by three or four years. That is, the heat wave follows the cold wave by some three or four years, as shown by the following summary of recent conditions:

Bad Heat Wave in 1921.

The maximum of sunspots occurred in 1917.5, just before the cold war Winter of 1917-18, and the great heat wave of 1921, which was almost as bad as this one, followed three years later. The heat wave of 1921, indeed, was felt profoundly throughout the known world; in every country of Europe, Asia, America, and wherever humanity exists and animal and plant life thrive there was the rage of unbearable heat four years after the last sunspot maximum, 1917.5.

Now in 1928.5 we again had a sunspot maximum—a time of real cold over the earth, because astronomers, like the late Professor Young of Princeton, found by actual and very careful measurements with the thermopile attached to the telescope that a sunspot gives less heat, area for area, than the normal solar surface free from spots. This is an observational fact admitting of no dispute, and is not at all a matter of opinion: simply a matter of direct measurement with a thermopile, which any one can confirm.

Mountain Effect Important.

Near high mountains it is universally observed that the rainfall always is much increased because of the eddying effect in the atmosphere as the winds come by, and there is experienced a mixing of the cooler upper air with the warmer and moister lower airs. Thus rain is precipitated by the inevitable mixing of upper and lower strata, and the greater rainfall near mountains—the mountain effect, as I call it—has profound significance in our dealing with sunspot maxima and the greater rainfalls noted at these maxima in all countries.

It has been found by many eminent investigators—such as our Dr. B. A. Gould, in Cordoba, Argentina; Meldrum in Mauritius and Australia; Stewart and Lockyer in England; Gustav Wex in Germany; Fritz in Holland, and others—that the wind currents depend on the sunspot cycle, and the rainfall is greater and water levels higher in the Rivers Elbe, Rhine, Oder, Saale, Danube, Vistula, Seine, Thames, Nile, Mississippi, &c., than the average of all the years.

Whole Earth Affected.

If, then, the wind currents depend on the sunspot cycle, as Dr. Gould showed, and the earth is colder at the sunspot maximum, as follows from the measurements of Young, Langley, and others, we see that when the sunspots are most frequent, we have a "mountain effect" over the whole earth; that is, the colder currents above us descend to lower levels, nearer to the earth's surface, the eddying of cold and hot air increases, and we have greater rainfall, more floods, more tornadoes and hurricanes, &c. Accordingly, the general increase in disasters is notable, and it strikes even the unthinking that something is wrong with our old workaday world; yet the small type of scientist sees nothing except what is orthodox, and therefore worthless.

Many readers will remember what I personally witnessed early in 1927. I was at New York and Washington, about March 12, and stopped in Missouri on my way back to California; but before I reached St. Louis the downpours in the Central West had begun, and thus before the middle of March several cloudbursts occurred over considerable areas, releasing three or four inches of water in a few hours, and it would be repeated every few days, so that in a little while all the rivers to the west and many of them to the east of the Mississippi were overflowing. The Mississippi soon rose to unprecedented flood levels, and the general floods so rapidly augmented that relief to sufferers had to be organized on a national scale.

The recent heat wave was a national disaster of stupendous proportions, and evidently will have to engage the attention of the government, like the floods of 1927. The heat and drought follow the great floods of 1927 by about 3.5 years, a little less than the four years I set for the interval separating the sunspot maximum—the cold period—and the next heat wave, in my extensive investigation finished early in 1929.

This Year's Heat Too Early.

The last sunspot maximum was in 1928.5, and thus our heat wave was expected to come in 1931 or 1932, but it has come a little early, owing to some cause not yet fully understood. Yet it is occurring 3.5 years after the dreadful floods in the lower Mississippi, March, 1927, which were carefully studied by Secretary Hoover. It was near the time of the great Mississippi floods also that Florida and other Southeastern States were devastated by two hurricanes of unprecendented proportions, coming one after the other so closely that the public calamity in Florida, Alabama and Georgia was almost comparable to those of the floods along the lower Mississippi, in Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Accordingly, it will be seen that the heat disaster does follow by 3 or 4 years the flood—sunspot maximum—cold period beginning in March, 1927, and felt more generally over the whole world very severely in the Winter of 1928-29, when Europe, Asia and North America nearly froze to death.

And just as the floods of March, 1927, and the Florida hurricanes of that year were dreadful beyond precedent, as was the cold of the Winter of 1928-29, so now the other extreme of the heat wave and drought shows stupendous porportions, perhaps unprecedented in our national history.

This disaster, however, will not be wholly in vain if we wake up to a better understanding of these great cycles in the meteorology of our globe, as depending on the sunspot cycle, in the way I have explained, in 1921 and extended in 1929.

Now just a few words on the cold cycles of former centuries:

In 51 B. C., Julius Caesar records that his soldiers, then operating near what is now Doubs, France, had to open a road through snow six feet deep, by incredible labor. Thus, Caesar says his military operations triumphed because his enemies considered themselves safe, owing to the extraordinary depth of the snow. That was exactly 180 cycles of 11 years each, 1,976 years, before our terrible Winter of 1928-29, when all Europe was so frozen in.

Hannibal Had Trouble.

Hannibal crossed the Alps in September, 218 B. C., but this early in the season the cold and snow in the mountains was so great that about half of the Carthaginian army was lost, and all the elephants perished except one or two. Not only were the Alps dreadful to cross, but the rivers of Lombardy swollen beyond all bounds during the whole Winter and Spring following. Hannibal's great disaster was 195 of the 11-year cycles backward from 1929, which shows that the recent cold cycle was at work 2,147 years earlier.

In 326 B. C., Alexander the Great, in marching his army from Central Asia into India, encountered terrible snows in the mountain passes, and as he advanced the rains and storms in India were so unprecedented that he had to wait months before crossing the River Hydaspes, and then do it in a great thunderstorm which threw King Porus off guard. This was 205 of the 11-year cycles before 1929.0.

If you wish to learn about the cold wave near the Hellespont in 480 B.C., when Xerxes crossed into Greece, read about it in Aeschylus, "The Persians," lines 494-506. Aeschylus says God sent a mighty frost, unwonted in that season. This was 219 of the 11-year cycles before our recent cold wave, 1929, which shows that the cold cycle is traced backward in history through 2,409 years!

The Valley Forge Winter.

And if you wish to come down to later times, take the dreadful cold wave afflicting all Europe in 1709, in which France nearly perished, during the disastrous old age of Louis XIV. This was 20 cycles of 11 years each, before our terrible Winter of 1929. You should also remember Washington's terrible Winter at Valley Forge, 1777, about 14 of the 11-year cycles before the recent cold wave of two years ago.

Then, let us also not forget the terrible cold Winter of 1807-08, when Napoleon's armies were perishing from cold and snows at Friedland, and the still more terrible wave of cold which destroyed the Grand Army in the retreat from Moscow, November, 1812, four years later, under an early recurrence of the typical Arctic Winter often happening near sunspot maxima.

These heat waves with droughts, following sunspot cold waves, we have now explained by showing definitely how both the heat and cold waves arise from conditions in the sun; and we must wake up if we are to deal intelligently with great national calamities having a close resemblance to the years of plenty and of famine in the biblical account of the plagues of Egypt.

TREATMENT OF TUBERCULOSIS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a question of great public importance is raised by Dr. Sebastian Wimmer in his comment in THE TIMES on my letter regarding the Gerson-Hermannsdorfer-Sauerbruch tuberculosis treatment, may I make a brief rejoinder?

Every one will sympathize with Dr. Wimmer's wish that experiments on patients should not be undertaken without the latter's full consent, nor lack justification in the form of favorable indications furnished by previous empiric observations or theoretical study.

This treatment has been subjected to continuous exhaustive clinical trials on all forms of tuberculosis by eminent German clinicians since 1925. The patients were for the most part advanced and far advanced cases that had failed to respond to the accepted therapies.

Similarly, those patients on whom the method is now being tried in the United States in government, city and private institutions are mostly advanced and far advanced cases whose full consent is in every instance obtained beforehand. They belong to the not inconsiderable number of tuberculosis patients on whom medical science has so far failed to confer marked or lasting benefit.

The confusion regarding the foundations and effects of the diet in question, which Dr. Wimmer mentions, has resulted from faulty and misleading versions of the treatment.

While it is true, as suggested by Dr. Wimmer, that the dietary treatment of tuberculosis dates back many years, the Gerson-Hermannsdorfer-Sauerbruch dietary treatment embraces distinctly new features. The withdrawal of salt from the food alone marks a new departure from previous tuberculosis dietaries, and vitamin-flooding is carried further than heretofore. The method's special and novel aim is to alter the patient's mineral metabolism. These simple dietetic measures yielded surprising and unexpected results in the hands of German doctors.

The simplicity and complete harmlessness of the Gerson-Hermannsdorfer-Sauerbruch treatment, coupled with the results obtained under it in Germany, obviously called for thorough clinical trials in this country.

The public may rest assured, therefore, that patients' interests are fully safeguarded by those clinicians in whose hands reposes the method's experimental clinical application in the United States.

By a strange and historically interesting concatenation of circumstances, Dr. Gerson was led to a treatment for tuberculosis and other diseases which focuses renewed attention on the transcendent rôle of dietetics in the treatment of human disease.

EXCERPTS FROM LETTERS

Ill-Rewarded Expectancy.

Apparently the great struggle of the National Republican party is to find men for the Presidency of sufficiently high ethical standards to command the vote of the people, and sufficiently low to turn over the spoils to the expectant brethren. The spoilsmen have been somewhat disappointed under the régime of ex-President Coolidge and President Hoover, but they will "try, try again." The Democrats, on the other hand, seek saints, and they get what most saints do—very little immediate reward but high hopes for the future.—MARY A. GUERIN, Vineyard Haven, Mass.

A Dry Question.

Emerson says in the "Essay on Politics": "Republics abound in young civilians who believe that the laws make the city, that grave modifications of the policy and modes of living, and the employments of the population, that commerce, education and religion may be voted in or out; and that any measure, though it were absurd, may be imposed on a people if only you can get sufficient voices to make it a law. But the wise know that foolish legislation is a rope of sand, which perishes in the twisting." Does not prohibition prove that this is true?—W. P., New York.

Gold and Prosperity.

One of our eminent economists says that no prosperity will come until new gold fields are found. The present generation might starve to death by that time. Our prosperity was destroyed by too much gold and deflation came as a natural economic adjustment. Prosperity will return when there is a wider distribution of wealth now concentrated in a few hands.—AMERICAN, New York.

STILL AN OPEN QUESTION

To the Editor of The New York Times:

With reference to the discussion in THE TIMES regarding the bearing of Article V of the Constitution and Article X of the amendments on the ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment, I note that both Mr. Hazelton and Mr. Henriques say there was no authority for the legislatures to act at all on a proposed amendment until the people had acted on the Constitution itself, and both assume that the Constitution had to be ratified by the people in conventions.

It is true that it actually was so ratified, but the deciding factor that sent the Constitution to conventions within the States must have been the fact that the Constitutional Convention was practically a conference of the legislatures, and to get a completely independent ratification it was necessary to send the Constitution elsewhere than to the legislatures.

No Delegation of Power.

To me, it is quite conceivable that the Constitution, if we except for the moment Article V, might have been submitted to the legislatures for ratification, especially as the powers that were then being given to Congress were powers belonging to them. There is furthermore no doubt that they could have properly ratified it, for "We, the people," can stand just as well for the legislatures as for conventions. And if they could ratify the Constitution without Article V, they certainly could have retained the power of amending it in accordance with Article V.

On the part of the conventions, the ratification of Article V was merely a recognition of the fact that in general the powers that might in future be required by the Federal Government could be delegated by the legislatures, and that if they were recalcitrant at any time, then Congress might go over their heads and refer the matter to conventions. I contend there is no delegation of power under Article V. The Supreme Court has said only that the legislatures have the power of ratifying an amendment, and that the effective power resides in any three-fourths of them. Now, if there is no delegation of power under Article V, as I contend, then it is possible we may find there is a connection between Article V and Article X of the amendments.

When it comes to making amendments under Article V, it is to be noted that the word "people" is not mentioned therein. If we are to define the exercise of control by the people under this article, it is necessary to hook up, as between Article V and Article X, the word "legislatures" with "States," and "conventions" with "people." We have a representative form of government, and the question here is whether conventions are the more representative.

Conventions Closer to People.

Theoretically, conventions are places of discussion and independent action, but practically they are bound by the wishes of the people that have chosen them to act on a particular matter, and, so may be said to stand in a closer relation to the people than do the legislatures. Then the powers reserved, under Article X, to the States would be those on which the legislatures could act; and those reserved to the people would be those on which the people would act through conventions if it came to delegating them by an amendment to the Federal Constitution. Thus, while Article X does not apply directly to Article V, it does have a very real bearing on it, for now, as there are certain powers which only the people in conventions can delegate, Congress (while its discretion is absolute) must act with discretion when it comes to referring a proposed amendment for ratification.

If we take the ruling of the Supreme Court to the effect that powers concerned with Federal requirements and not delegated to the United States are those reserved to the States, and that national matters (as opposed to Federal) are within the powers reserved to the people, under Article X, we come to the same conclusion, namely, that ratification by the Legislatures would apply in the first case, and ratification by conventions, as being closer to the people, would apply in the second case; for if there is a distinction as to where the different powers reside, there must be some distinction as to how they may be relinquished. I can see no other explanation for the distinction between powers in Article X. But there is still the question as to whether the Eighteenth Amendment really involves a delegation of power.

THE ART OF GROWING BLUEBERRIES

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In THE TIMES for July 25 I find an interesting account of blueberry growing, but Hamlet is left out of the play.

"Other vegetation, much of it taller and stronger than the little fruit bush, likes the soil and situation in which blueberries flourish, and if it is not removed the number and size of the berries will be greatly diminished. The blueberry farmer is not disturbed by this fact. He burns his fields over every third year. The intruding plants are destroyed and the sturdy berry bushes thrive in their ashes." Thus THE TIMES article.

Oh, if you could only know the joker going with the word "his." Some years ago I asked my old guide how it happened that the woods in the blueberry region managed to be accidentally burned once in three years at just the right time to make business for blueberry pickers. He replied about as follows: "Oh, them fires ain't sot. They just happen."

I looked up at him and laughed and said: "Now, see here, old man, between you and me, how is it?" To which he replied, "Well, you see, how it is. If one man holds a whole lot of timber there is only one man gets a chance to make a livin' out of it, but if the woods is burned off everybody 'round here can make a livin' gettin' blueberries—everybody gets a chance."

I asked how the matter was arranged so that nobody would be caught. Said he: "Well, on just the right kind of a day when there ain't much wind blowin' to give a quick start to fire go down to the Summerin' place and tell one of these 'ere cigarette-smokin' dudes that it is a great day for huntin' b'ars. Then if he is took 'round in a big circle he is good for startin' about six fires durin' the day."

INVESTMENTS IN LATIN AMERICA

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An article by Jorga Roa, recently published in El Mundo, a Cuban newspaper, may be of interest to your readers in these days of tariff revision. Mr. Roa based his comments on Max Winkler's book, "Investment of United States Capital in Latin America," issued under the auspices of the World Peace Foundation of Boston. The conclusion generally arrived at in the United States after reading this book, according to Mr. Roa, is that the United States dominates, under capitalistic control the twenty Latin-American republics. But Mr. Roa thinks that an examination of statistics proves the contrary. He says:

"According to Winkler's statistical data, compiled by the Secretary of Commerce at Washington, North Americans have invested in Cuba $1,400,000,000 and more than $5,000,000,000 in the twenty Latin-American republics. This is only the statistical phase of technical or numerical application of such a problem. Why not examine the data available with a sociological criterion? Examine dynamically and not statistically Cuba investments, given at $1,400,000,000 and it will be found that they have been continually reduced through the different tariffs approved against Cuban products until the volume is less than $840,000,000.

"The example of what occurs with Cuba may be applied to the other twenty Latin-American republics, showing a loss against the North American capitalist of more than $2,500,000,000,000, this amount representing the cost of the policy of the Government at Washington, paid by its own citizens. Politically this cost is still dearer. It is more than a century since Monroe and Adams that all the political activity of the North American nations has revolved about the maintenance of her economic supremacy in North and South America." INDIAN NAMES FOR TOWNS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In connection with THE TIMES article, "Town Names Show Settlers' Whims," may I suggest that probably the most interesting set of names used by the settlers was overlooked—those derived from the Indians and hence having special historical value. In this State and Alabama, both of which are Indian names, by the way, we have such names as Tuscaloosa, Talladega, Tallassee, Eufaula, Wetumpka, Wahalak, Shuqualak, Choccolocco, Pontotoc, Okalona and so on.

Practically every State has them and many other State names are from the Indians, of course.

Another interesting outfit of names is found in street names in many of the cities. New Orleans, for instance, is worth a whole article in this respect. There are all nine muses. Thalia, Melpomene, &c., and next to them comes Felicity. In another section of the city is Napoleon Avenue with five victories of Napoleon on each side, Jena, Cadiz, Valance, Bordeaux, Lyons in one direction and in the other Berlin, Milan, Marengo, Constantinople and Austerlitz. Berlin, during the World War, was, however, changed to General Pershing, and so remains, breaking the Napoleonic sequence on that side of the avenue. GEORGE D. BOOTH.

MR. RUSSELL FINDS SCIENTISTS TOO READY TO ACCEPT THEORY

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since the publication in THE TIMES of my statement that modern science is without a foundation and needs a major surgical operation to put it in line for a logical cosmogenetic synthesis, I have been bombarded by telephone and by letters questioning this statement and others made in my book "The Russell Genero-Radiative Concept," recently published.

May I tell those people who think I have a superficial, metaphysical concept which I am trying to inject into practical science for its reformation that I am as thoroughly prepared to carry out my program with dynamic answers, not metaphysical ones, as Copernicus was when he upset an equally obstinate world of thoroughly satisfied Ptolemyites? Also I am as thoroughly aware of the difficulties of uprooting established ideas as he was.

I am also thoroughly conversant not only with every experiment that has given science its present unstable state, but also with the wrongful deductions which have resulted from those experiments.

Knows Scientists' Theories.

I am as familiar with the experiments and observations of Newton and Kepler as I am of those of Faraday, Cavendish, Rutherford, Bohr or Millikan, and I also am as familiar with the things which these great men did not see in their own experiments as those which they did see, and even then misinterpreted.

An observation of an effect of Nature is equal to an experiment and a proper deduction from either is more important than either.

Newton, for example, would have solved the other half of the gravitational problem if he had found out how that apple and the tree upon which it grew got up in the air before the apple fell.

I challenge the world of science to correctly and completely answer that question. Let your readers qualify for the right to subject me to their criticism as an impractical visionary by first giving a dynamic answer to this by no means simple question.

Therefore I say to all my critics who wonder why I do not go into the laboratory and "perform experiments" that I do perform experiments in physical laboratories and make profound observations in Nature's vast laboratory that have fitted me to make new and logical deductions from old experiments which have no inconsistencies and no exceptions.

Effects of Motion Illusions.

To illustrate: Suppose a man experimented with the moon running behind the trees as he ran, then set down his conclusions from the "facts," as he saw them, such as the correspondence of acceleration and deceleration to his speed, we could easily point out the error of such a deduction because we are familiar with the illusions of perspective.

Science has never considered the fact that in this universe of motion all effects of motion are illusions. Illusions are not limited to perspective but to every electrical, chemical and astronomical relation.

Nature is the supreme deceiver, the champion "poker bluffer," who, with a simple hand, makes you think she has much.

Nature is simple. She has but one force (which she divides into two), one form (which she divides into many), and seven patterns (which she complexes by repeating them in such marvelous systems of wave periodicities that it needs imagination, rather than eyesight, to coordinate them).

Nature can be beautifully described by that child's toy of hexagonal mirrors which makes the most exquisite and complex patterns in color and form out of a bit of feather, some chips of colored glass, a toothpick and other odds and ends.

Every one knows how those simple things are not only complexed but glorified by such a treatment.

Nature's Simple Principles.

My humble contribution to science is to point out these simple principles of Nature which would, if known, have prevented one untruth to pile up on top of another until, even with the aid of experimentation, a theory which can survive five years is exceptional.

I will warrant that the dinner coat which Sir Oliver Lodge wore in New York when he delivered his lecture on energy and atomic structure is still presentable, but Sir Oliver himself would under no consideration repeat that lecture today.

The entire modern theory of atomic structure is so utterly without parallel or precedent in Nature that fantasy only mildly expresses it. It is to be regretted that the profound thinking of profound men is thus being wasted on conclusions which cannot possibly endure.

Scientists ignore Nature when they choose, or when mathematical formulae work out in accordance with preconceived premises. Scientists then become inventors and work out wonders which Nature never thought of. I can cite hundreds of such inventions born of supposedly observed facts of experiment.

La Place's Mistakes.

Mathematics are useless if the premises they start with are wrong. La Place, the greatest mathematician of his day, "proved" many things which have since been disproved. He even went so far as to prove that the outer edges of his rings moved faster than their inner surfaces, and his contemporaries accepted that impossibility as Niels Bohr's "jumping electron" was accepted by his contemporaries.

Nature hasn't one separate series of laws for big mass and another series for small mass. She has one law for both, but science unhesitatingly invents a series of laws for little mass that outdoes the reliance of the Arthurian sages upon a credulous public.

The moons of Jupiter and the planets of the sun pursue their courses around their primaries in an orderly periodic fashion, in strict obedience to the two forces which command and control them from two foci.

It would be the most astounding claim imaginable to state that this earth could suddenly jump to the orbit of Mars without consuming one-millionth of a second of time, yet that invention is the utterly fantastic and completely unfounded belief of modern science regarding the planets of the atom.

I could write volumes based upon modern electrical experimental data to prove that such a happening is not in Nature's scheme.

Science attributes this deduction to a "brilliant young Dane, Niels Bohr," who, working under Rutherford, proved it by experiment, backed by Rydburg's constant, Coulomb's law, mathematics and the evidence of the spectroscope.

Of what use is Bohr's mathematical equation regarding the hydrogen spectrum, for example, if the four admittedly assumed premises upon which it is based are not in accord with Nature's plan of motion?

Wrong Basic Conclusions.

Of what value also is the spectroscopic evidence if the presumption that band-spectra are caused by molecules and line spectra by atoms is found to be a wrong one? In respect to this I am prepared to offer consistent reasons why band and line spectra have another and more logical cause.

I can cite wrong premise after wrong premise which has caused science to form wrong basic conclusions, such as that there are separate negative and positive charges instead of doubly charged masses, also that positive and negative "charges" attract each other when the evidence in its favor is the simplest of Nature's illusions and there is an overwhelming amount of evidence against such a law. Take only one for example: How does science explain the fact that in all decomposing compounds like charges seek like charges and repel all others? If this law were true the universe which we know could not hold itself together, for all similar substances and atoms of substances would be explosive, and a pound of any one substance would be impossible.

COLUMBUS KNEW.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a solemn legal document executed by him Feb. 22, 1498, old style, establishing a "mayorazgo," or right of succession to his estates in the Indies by virtue of his discoveries, Columbus expressly declares that he was born in the city of Genoa, in the following words:

"I enjoin it upon my son, Don Diego, or whoever may inherit the said mayorazgo, always to keep and maintain in the city of Genoa one person of our lineage, because from thence I came and there I was born."

While it is clear that their son was born while his father and mother were dwelling either at Terraossa or Quinto, what should hinder the event taking place while they were on a longer or shorter visit to those places. The fact that both Christopher Columbus and his brother were often styled as of Terraossa does not prove that they were born in that hamlet. A family moving from their birthplace would need some such appelative because the name Colombo was a very common one in Italy.

DOG DAYS OVER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reference to the letter to THE TIMES from Charles Nevers Holmes regarding "dog days": Of course "dog days" are those days during which Sirius, the dog star, rises and sets with the sun. But the dates given by Mr. Holmes, July 25 to Sept. 5, for this period do not coincide with the dates given in the almanac, which are from July 3 to Aug. 11.

Therefore "dog days" are over today and coincidentally we have cooler weather. G. E. CAMPBELL.

DROUGHT AND FOREST FIRES

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I write of two timely subjects which concern not merely the farmer but every one who needs water and food.

First, the drought, which now demands national and State action, has necessarily drawn attention to the water supplies of cities and, indeed, of families and individuals generally. The forest fires which accompany the drought have a vital relation both to the water supply and to any project of farm relief worthy of the name.

The effect of forests and woodlands in preventing the rapid draining off of rainfall through rivers and streams by retaining it in the leaf-enriched soil was first brought to general notice by Gifford Pinchot, National Forester under President Roosevelt, when he waged his fight for their conservation.

Whether by fire, reckless greed or improvidence, the destruction of our forests and woodlands is still a matter of national concern. So also is the ravaging of farm lands by fire. For, while soil with an excess of decayed vegetation may be benefited by fire, to ordinary farm land it is destructive.

Not, then, as charity to the farmer, who suffers loss to his woodland, fields, fencing and buildings through no fault of his own, but as wise public policy, there should be some system of national and State insurance against losses of this kind, and in the present crisis provision should be made for this entire year. In Maryland the State recompenses owners of property injured in this way and brings suit against those responsible for the fires. When these cannot be found, the farmer must bear his own loss. There is here, manifestly, an obvious social injustice. The farmer should not have to bear alone the cost of restoring his lands, where this is possible, to a condition making them again contributory to the local water supply.

The second matter relates to the national shortage in hay and other live stock feeds. The value for stock of ragweed, so abundant after grain crops, and everywhere, should be generally known. As a boy I first noticed cows eating it and tasted its bitterness in their milk. While unsuitable for milk cows, though it does them no harm, it should now be utilized for other stock. It is helpful. An enterprising Jersey man made a fortune with a patent medicine containing the bitter tonic extracted from it, giving it a more pleasing name than the homely one by which it is everywhere known. It may be made to serve a better use in this time of stock-feed shortage—and hereafter—for it has a high protein content. A neighbor here, the best farmer in my immediate locality, who has farmed in Tennessee, tells me it is regularly cut there when tender, cured like hay, and makes good feed. CHARLES T. SEMPERS.

THE WEEK IN EUROPE: PREPARE FOR GENEVA

OPEN SEASON ON WAR

Lambeth Bishops' Declaration Gives League Statesmen Timely Text.

WILL ELECT WORLD COURT

England Loses India Trade—French Budget Up—Dr. Schacht Coming Here.

By EDWIN L. JAMES.

The Lambeth Bishops' broadside against war came at a propitious and beneficial moment, just when the Chancelleries of most of the Foreign Offices of the world were preparing their "dossiers" for next month's most important gathering at Geneva. For in two weeks from today the statesmen will be gathering on the banks of Lake Leman for the annual Assembly of the League of Nations. The United States and Russia will not be represented. We, the Soviets and us, eschew September at Geneva. We like other months and we are generally in attendance, but September is different. The works of the League may be worth our while the other eleven months of the year, but it is a matter of principle to stay away in September, for to attend that month would make us real instead of part-way members. We have not, this year of our Lord, bowed to Mr. Coolidge's belated "inevitable."

Not only will Geneva next month see the meeting of the statesmen of fifty-odd nations in the Assembly, but there is to be discussed the now-famous plan of Foreign Minister Briand of France for a European federation. That makes the coming meeting of double importance and significance.

All War Now Sin.

What better text could be supplied for pulpit and political rostrum than that brought forth by the Anglican Bishops, including more than half a hundred from the United States. They had trouble in getting together on birth control—indeed, they split badly—but on war they were unanimous. According to the distinguished Bishops, there is no more excuse for war. Things have come to the pass, the Bishops say, where the Church should not support a government which goes to war without resorting to mediation, which should bring arbitration instead of a fight. The Archbishop of Canterbury thanked God for the League of Nations and for the Kellogg pact, and made it plain he regarded war as more than out of date. Henceforth, it entered into the category of unpardonable sins.

Now, although the discussions of how to preserve peace will take place at Geneva again this year without the official presence of the United States, let it not be supposed that the nation which is going to have a navy as strong as the strongest will be absent in effect from the negotiations. The shadow of the empty chair will fall across the assemblage as it has done every year for the past decade.

Pact Needs Completing.

As Admiral Hepburn said the other day at Williamstown, we have declared we will not fight about future differences, but we have not said how we will settle them. And Briand surely has a record of conversations with Secretary of State Stimson in which the American director of our relations with the rest of the world expressed the opinion that the anti-war treaty as it stands is rather a flat tire. Mr. Stimson believes it would be a good idea to take steps to indicate in any conflict who would be the offending party. He would have investigation and report.

This comforts the League leaders because what they seek above all else is some way of knowing what will be the position of the United States in a threat to peace. Could they count on our active aid to preserve peace, could they count on our abstention from aiding an aggressive nation, or would they have to calculate upon the possibility of our wishing to do business with whoever would buy? Those are the questions which will perhaps remain unsolved until we come fullheartedly into a cooperation with the other powers to keep the world at peace.

The attitude of the United States on the freedom of the seas is a factor in international relations which cannot be neglected. It needs a settlement between Britain and America. Sir Eustace Percy said a few days ago that the two nations should make a "fresh start" on the problem and indeed it would be no great surprise if before long Washington showed a willingness to discuss this matter. Who can say it is untrue that both nations may be found to have shifted somewhat from their respective historical positions?

United States and World Court.

There will also be discussed at Geneva the position of the United States vis-a-vis the World Court. While the Council has approved the revised plan under which we might adhere to the Court, only a small proportion of the nations of the League have formally ratified the agreement. But, then, neither has the United States. There is no probability of our road to The Hague being blocked by the failure of the League nations to approve the Root conditions.

The members of the World Court Bench are to be re-elected this September. There have been nominated eleven distinguished Americans by various countries. It is reported that out of a sense of modesty the American group of The Hague Arbitration Tribunal, which has nominating power, will abstain from naming an American. That, of course, will have no effect upon the assured election of a citizen of the United States to sit on the World Court bench. Other nations will take a chance on our judges, even if, up to the present, we continue to show a marked reluctance to do the same. How unbecoming it would be for some critic to remark that Uncle Sam had rather leave it to his new cruisers than to the World Court, even with an American as judge?

Schacht to Visit United States.

The distinguished and fiery Dr. Hjalmar Schacht is going to pay us another visit. He denies he is coming to lecture or for business. It is for pleasure he is coming, for he finds it always a pleasure to come to America, where, he says, he finds the people who are most like the Germans in their thinking, their love for quick action and their economic reasoning.

Dr. Schacht still likes to make it plain that he quit the Reichsbank because he would not subscribe to its participation in the execution of the Young plan. It is true that Dr. Schacht signed the Young plan as it was drafted in Paris, but, he says, what the politicians did to it at The Hague made so much difference that he would never sign the revised edition.

It is interesting to hear his successor as president of the Reichsbank, Dr. Hans Luther, former Chancellor, issuing the same kind of advice to the Germans that the very sound Dr. Schacht used to give. Dr. Luther cautions against the unrestricted influx of foreign capital into Germany, especially when it is not used for productive purposes.

Lost Trade in India.

Britain's troubles continue in India. The Afridis are driven away from the walls of Peshawar and the Sind starts boiling. It is just one thing after another and it is not all over yet.

Figuring on the possibilities of the coming round-table Indian conference in London, one understands full well that the British feel keenly their responsibility to preserve law and order in a land under their dominion and not to let the Moslems and the Hindus try to exterminate each other. But one also gets another slant on British cares in looking at the export trade statement for July, which shows a falling off of more than 23 per cent as compared with the same month of last year. Nearly half of this loss is in the export of cotton goods. England shipped $28,000,000 worth less in July, 1930, than in July, 1929. It is plain that this is largely due to the Indian boycott of British goods. It is, of course, important for the empire trade unity that Britain should seek better marks among the 8,000,000 of Canada and the 7,000,000 of Australia, but there are 300,000,000 in India. It is enormous to lose that trade.

Paris and Her Traffic.

It will interest many American visitors to France to read of the plans to spend 1,000,000,000 francs, some $40,000,000, in dealing with the traffic problem in Paris. There is a large field in which to make this expenditure. New York has streets at right angles, but Paris has them in bunches. Eleven large streets run together at the Place de l'Opéra, and there are scores of places in the French capital where from five to a dozen streets pour their traffic into one knot. If Paris had the automobiles of New York, it would be helpless.

Yet, there is one particular in which Paris, as well as London, has far and away outstripped New York. Years ago, the French began the elimination of street cars from the centre of the city. They are nearly all gone. There are the lines which end at the Madeleine, and run to the outskirts; there is the Rue Lafayette line and the Rue Quatre Septembre line. But there are no more in the congested part of the city. Imagine Broadway, Seventh Avenue, Sixth Avenue and Forty-second Street free from street cars, and think how much better the traffic would move!

French Budget Soars.

The French budgetary estimates indicate one of the prices France is paying for her heavy gold imports. The increased paper money circulation, which is at its highest point, has caused such a rise in prices that this year's calculations by department heads call for a budget of fifty-seven or fifty-eight billion paper francs, some six billion francs above last year's budget. This would be adding $240,000,000 to a budget already above $2,000,000,000. Orders have gone out from Premier Tardieu to make cuts in the estimates down to last year's level, but no one really believes that end will be attained.

When Tardieu took over, he had a surplus of more than fifteen billion francs, but this has come down by two-thirds. It was due to the application of Poincaré's hard-time tax increases to France's improved position. But Tardieu decreased taxes. Will he now have to increase them? The difficulty facing France in cutting her budget estimates is the same that faces England. In England, nearly 60 per cent of tax receipts goes to meet fixed war debt charges, while in France this charge takes up 48 per cent of all taxes. That is the price of the war—for the victors.

PARISIANS OPEN WAR ON 'FASHION SPIES'

Milliners and Jewelry Creators Join Couturiers in Campaign to End Theft of Designs.

MOST OFFENDERS FRENCH

Small Shops on Side Streets Have Existed for Years by Pirating Models of Bigger Houses.

By CARLISLE MacDONALD.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—The campaign of the Paris dressmakers to rid France of "fashion spies," who pirate exclusive designs and sell them throughout the world, has aroused the deepest interest among the women of Europe.

As the recognized dictator of what smart women should wear, the French capital has set to work to protect its creative fashion industry. In this effort the big couturiers have been joined enthusiastically by the well-known originators of women's hats, by the Rue de la Paix jewelry shops and by other members of the luxury trades, all of whom complain that they have long been the victims of clever but dishonest buyers, who obtain access to their creations and then make the ideas their own and sell them to their employers.

Drive Has Only Begun.

As the first step in the movement, three American women who live in Paris and engage in the business of buying for large American stores are awaiting formal charges in connection with the theft of copyrighted designs. The police and agents of the dressmaking industry swooped down upon the living quarters of these women and seized scores of hastily made sketches of gowns and hats and other evidence.

However big the stir these raids may have caused among American buyers, it is indicated that they were but minor incidents in a movement which will not end until a large measure of security is established for that important section of French business whose chief stock in trade is originality.

All this has started a controversy in the press of France, which may be counted upon to continue for many weeks. "Can ideas be copyrighted?" ask several writers. "And if so, what real harm is suffered by the style originators in Paris if the thefts result in the manufacture of indifferent copies?"

Lack "Paris Touch."

"Americans may hire our workers and send spies over to steal our original designs, but whatever they do, they will never acquire the Paris art—that peculiar something which has given Paris unmistakeable leadership in the world of fashion."

Those who know the intricate workings of the Paris dressmaking trade—and the same general situation applies to the whole luxury trade—are inclined to feel the assurance of the dressmakers that, whatever the spies may steal, they will never be able to transfer the "Paris touch" to the other side of the Atlantic, and this must remain their chief source of security.

"Fashion spies" may be a comparatively new phrase to fit the present campaign, but the practice it describes is as old as the hills. The "gentle art of the copyist" has been carried on in France for many years, and in fairness to the American buyers who are now suspected of pilfering the brain-children of the Paris fashion world, it must be said the members of that questionable trade are French.

How many times American women have been taken to little side street shops and attic abodes of these copyists by kindly disposed Parisian friends, only the Americans themselves can say; but the fact remains that every Parisian woman who prides herself on her appearance knows and patronizes at least one of these surreptitiously conducted places.

Meagre Wages Blamed.

How these copyists are able to obtain sketches of the latest Paris models and hats but a few days after they make their appearance in the big shops can be explained only by the fact that in nearly every dressmaking establishment there are girls and older women who, because of the smallness of their wages, are willing mediums for conveying closely guarded secrets of their own particular shops to scores of copyists scattered throughout the city.

That certain American buyers or representatives of American stores have obtained exclusive fashion ideas in this way is no doubt true, but the origin of the "fashion spy" is French and a great majority of the thefts are committed by natives and for natives.

No one defends the Americans who are suspected of stealing original designs, least of all reputable American buyers, who are loud in their condemnation of the practice; but it is difficult to believe that the campaign just begun will wipe out these irregular customs so well and so long established. When all is said and done, the American or French woman who buys a copy of a well-known model buys just that and nothing more.

NEW FILM EMULSION MAKES TINY PICTURES

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 15.—Photographic enlargement and reduction on such a scale that it is now possible to reduce a photograph of a book page to an area of 1-100 of a square millimeter and later to re-enlarge it to normal size has been made possible by the discovery of a practically grainless film formula which Professor Goldberg, German photographic chemist, recently found.

Reduction is accomplished by photographing through an inverted microscope on to a film covered with a silver emulsion.

It will be possible to photograph the pages of at least 100 novels on one postcard. Page after page may be read on a projector screen.

The invention is likely to prove of value to espionage agents anxious to slip through a search with valuable information. When it is possible to inscribe an entire plan of battle on a bit of paper less than a square millimeter in size, tucked under a fingernail or pasted to the scalp, the detection of spies will be practically hopeless.

It is anticipated the film will be of great value in enlarging technical photographs of microscopic life.

Italy Sees Bright Future in Sports As Athletes Win on Olympics

After Brief Period of International Competition, They Already Excel in Rowing, Football and Fencing—University of Naples Takes Lead.

By ARNALDO CORTESI.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Aug. 15.—Sports are still such a recent development in Italy that Italians are rather inclined to be filled with surprise when they best other countries in international competitions. A few years ago sports were confined to a few individuals who were considered cranks by the majority. Today sports are beginning to be practiced by the masses and Italy is reaping its first international victories.

If the present rate of progress is maintained, Italy should soon be a formidable competitor, even against countries which for decades have made religion of bodily fitness.

The latest Italian triumph, which was greeted by the whole country as a promise of better things in the future, was the victory for the third year in succession in the university Olympic games, held this year in Darmstadt, Germany. Italy, in competition with ten other nations, totaled only one point more than Germany, which came second, but two and one-half times as many points as Hungary, which came third, and three times as many as France, which came fourth. Then came Belgium, England and Japan. Italy was first in fencing, football, tennis and rowing, and second in swimming.

Sports Italy Excels In.

There are several sports in which the Italians already are truly preeminent. Chief among these is rowing. Two years ago Italy won six out of seven European championships. Last year she won five out of seven and expects to repeat this exploit this year. In football, also, Italy heads all other nations, having won the European championship this year against four other nations. In tennis she ranks second only to France in Europe. In fencing she has no rival. In cycling and boxing she can hold her own with most European nations.

The only branch of sports in Italy that lags far behind is track and field athletics, but even this branch has been taken up recently with such enthusiasm that it is foreseen that Italy may soon make up the distance now separating her from other nations. Already some Italian runners have been making names for themselves on European tracks. In a few more years they should be up to the international standard.

Such giant strides have been made in sports, especially in university sports, in the last few years that it is interesting to note how this progress has been achieved. A typical example is Naples University, where the so-called "sporting levy" is applied. Each new student when he reports at the university is asked whether he participates in any sport. If he does he will have every opportunity afforded to him to perfect himself in his favorite sport. If he doesn't he is required to undergo a medical examination to determine in which sport he is most likely to excel. His sport thus is chosen for him and he is expected to report for practice every day.

Making Up Lost Ground.

This method may perhaps be considered somewhat drastic, but its defenders justify it by observing that Italy formerly was so far behind other nations in sports that she is obliged to make up lost ground quickly. Certainly it has been justified by the results for Naples University, which once was practically nonexistent in the sporting world, but now ranks first among all Italian universities. It even won the Italian university skiing championship, though there is no snow within a hundred miles of Naples. Besides, it has succeeded in waking up the Neapolitans to taking an interest in university sports, which now have a large following among the population.

The universities' efforts have been ably seconded by the government, which lays the greatest store by producing healthy, strong generations to fight the country's future battles in peace or war. The Fascist party especially, which controls a large part of Italy's youth through its Batilla and Avanguardisti organizations, has been in the forefront of sports development. It provides competent instructors, finds money for building playing fields, obtains reductions in railroad fares and pushes every department of sports as hard as it knows how. The results so far have been satisfactory, but the work has only begun. It is destined to be considerably expanded in the following years.

Dashing Young Chinese War Lord Runs the Thriving City of Chefoo

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CHEFOO, China, July 8.—The little city of Chefoo, which has a population of less than 30,000 persons for most of the year, has developed into one of the "free cities" of China. It is firmly held by General Liu Chien-nien, a young commander not yet 33 years of age, who maintains an independent State and conducts an almost continuous series of negotiations for alliances with various Chinese factions.

General Liu, of humble origin, is a dashing young warlord. He drinks only champagne or tea, and lives a life of contrasts—first of ease in his official yamen, then of hardship when he takes to the field at the head of his 25,000 troops.

Liu Chien-nien has been nominally a supporter of the Nanking Government for two years, but of late he has more than flirted with the rebellious Northern Coalition, which maintains a government at Peking. He has never seized the customs, so all collections made here go to Nanking's coffers, but he collects—and retains—all other taxes, and uses them for the maintenance of his army.

Chefoo is a prosperous and picturesque seaport, and the place of import and export for a large section of Shantung province, which has no rail or adequate highway connections with the rest of China. Taxation is high, but not extortionate, and business is less throttled here than in many other places.

Since the present civil war between Nanking and the Northern Coalition began last Spring General Liu Chien-nien has been assiduously courted by both sides. Nanking has sent him uniforms for his soldiers, munitions and money. The North has sent him money and munitions. So Liu's troops are paid up to date, and he has even had a cash surplus to invest in more munitions, sold to him from the Manchurian arsenal at Mukden.

Just now Chefoo is on the crest of prosperity. Many of the vessels of the American Asiatic fleet spend the Summer months here, and today on the streets of Chefoo there are almost as many white-uniformed American sailors as there are blue-gowned Chinese coolies. Chefoo is also a Summer resort held in high esteem by foreigners in China. The resort hotels are all open and every cottage on the long curving beach is rented.

AUSTRIA WILL BUILD ROAD IN THE ALPS

Glockner Highway, 8,500 Feet Up, Will Have Second Greatest Altitude in Europe.

PARTY GREED IS PROBLEM

People of Central Europe Viewed as Groaning Under Weight of Bureaucracies, Much Overstaffed.

By G. E. R. GEDYE.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

VIENNA, Aug. 14.—The first result of the loan of $60,000,000 just obtained by Austria is seen this week in a definite decision to start work on the much-discussed Glockner Road, which will be the second highest Alpine road in Europe, with a height of 8,500 feet, passing above the great Pasterzen glacier in the Eastern Alps. The highest road in Europe at Saint Elvio also was constructed by Austrians, who lead the world in mountain road building.

The Glockner road will be a first-class tourist attraction and is part of a plan of investments to modernize and improve roads, railways, posts and telegraphs, to which the loan is allotted. It is hoped that this plan will help to alleviate unemployment, the burden of which, despite all efforts to avert it, has been increasing yearly Austrian and other Central European budgets. As in Germany the problem of providing for the unemployed is likely to prove a crucial point in State finances.

Penury May End Doles.

For Central Europe the question looming in the background is whether the impoverished States can much longer pay anything to non-producers or whether they may not be compelled by sheer penury to leave them to their tragic fate.

On the other hand, voices are now making themselves heard, alleging that it is not unemployment which is the worst burden in these countries, but the strangle hold which bureaucracies exercise through the greed of parties to reward their supporters with offices out of State finances. Throughout Central Europe the example of the United States in making the central bureaucracy bear the first burden in hard times has been admired by the unhappy populace, who see their States, instead of adopting the commercial principle of first reducing costs in difficult times before increasing prices, take the opposite line of putting up "prices"—that is, increasing taxation before touching the expenses of bureaucracies.

Not every Central European country has been blessed like Rumania with a Maniu as Premier. Whatever its failings, the failures of the much-heralded peasant government of Rumania have done a great deal to cleanse the Augean stables of party waste and corruption by dispensing with thousands of officials, thus flooding the second-hand automobile mart with cars withdrawn from opulent civil servants who maintained a fleet of automobiles at the expense of the penniless State. No wonder Maniu has reaped the undying hatred of bureaucrats who had been installed in reward for party services by the corrupt Liberal party.

Elsewhere in Central Europe the political parties are like a pack of greedy hounds at the trough who snatch at every possible scrap before their rivals can. Naturally the monarchists of such of these countries which have become republics since the war are ever waiting for their chance to dazzle the populace with fictitious pictures of the glorious life in the "good old days" of the monarchy, and they seek to put all the blame on the bureaucratic greed of democracies. Thus the Austrian monarchist, Count Polzer-Hoditz, writing in the Fascist newspaper Wiener Journal, under "What the Republic Costs," cites astonishing figures intended to show that democracy is a luxury which Austria cannot allow herself. Thereby he is compelled to admit that, however undemocratic, the clerical provinces are no whit behind the Democratic Socialist system in grabbing for posts to award supporters. The private Cabinet of the President of the Republic, which is the gift of the clerical Pan-German parties, costs 500 per cent more today than did the Emperor's private Cabinet, the Count says. There are 370 more posts of the higher grades in ministries today than under the monarchy. In the Vienna municipality the number of highest grade officials has risen under the republic from four to fifty and the next grade from fifty to a hundred.

Contrasts Big and Little Incomes.

In the Federal railways, he continues, we see the general manager enjoying an income with allowances amounting to $150,000 yearly, but the dentist to the railway employes is allowed only $10 annually. The annual deficit of the Austrian Federal Railways amounts to about $3,500,000, which shows the incapacity of the State as an employer, he asserts. "No wonder," he concludes gleefully, "that our republic is an excellent seminary for the newly awakened monarchists."

It is the greed of parties to cram themselves with remunerative posts at the expense of the Commonwealth which resulted in the appointment of Herr Strafella as general manager of the Federal Railways. He was chosen by the Clericals and the Heimwehr Fascists, who, incidentally, furnished by their insistence upon his appointment proof of the insincerity of their denunciation of the evils of "party place-hunting." He managed the little provincial tramway system in Graz, and with the patronage of the Clericals and the Heimwehr he is placed in charge of the greatest Austrian State undertaking, with 80,000 employes.

The head of hungry bureaucrats do not consider themselves public servants but crowd the first and second-class coaches of the railway with free passes and divide the daily generous rations of free seats in the State opera theatre. They seem never to concern themselves with the thought of how long the golden age of the public's patience will last.

Unemployment and party greed are the two bogys threatening the new-born Europe. "Where all is for the party and nothing for the State," sooner or later these States will be forced to choose between two classes of non-producers—the really unemployed and the parasites. When the patient people awake they will applaud the recent dramatic remark of the German Minister of Finance, Herr Dietrich, in the dissolution of the Reichstag:

"It is impossible to conduct the country's affairs when each party is seeking only to cook its own soup at the State kitchen."

New Pictures of Presidents Elude Reich's Economy Drive

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN Aug. 15.—The strict economy in governmental expenditures, which is the watchword these days in German public finance, slipped up a little the other day when some one suddenly decided that the handsome portraits of Presidents Ebert and von Hindenburg, which hang in every court room, labor exchange and welfare bureau in Germany, were too small. Although they had only been hung up a short time, it was felt they ought to be replaced by something a bit more imposing.

Conservatively estimating that 10,000 pictures were required, each of which costs about $7.50, it appears that some $75,000 slipped through the Treasury's fingers while the latter was busy cutting public expenditures to the bone.

SWEEPSTAKE EVOKES PROTEST IN DUBLIN

Protestant Churches in Particular Oppose Plan to Raise Funds for City Hospitals.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DUBLIN, July 30.—President Cosgrave was one of those who voted against the recent measure to legalize sweepstakes for charitable purposes in the Free State introduced by Sir James Craig, an Independent. The new measure is regarded from the moral standpoint as a retrograde step, and met with bitter opposition from the Protestant churches. Its supporters claim that they chose the lesser of two evils, as the object of the new act is to provide finances for the Dublin hospitals, which are in danger of closing through lack of funds.

Its provisions, however, include safeguards against fraud. The organizing committee, a private body, under the direction of Joseph McGrath, must be approved by the Minister for Justice and the audited accounts must be submitted to him, each member of the Dail and Senate receiving a copy. The "draw" will be made in public, supervised by the Chief Commissioner of Police.

The committee includes such well-known people as Lord Powerscourt, Sir William Taylor and Sir Conway Dwyer, while among the trustees are the Earl of Granard, Lord Holmpatrick and the Rt. Hon. T. K. Laidlaw. The sum of $125,000 is guaranteed by the trustees against the prize money of $500,000 offered in the first of a series of sweepstakes which is being run on the Manchester November handicap. The sweepstakes have been sanctioned for a period of four years.

Though a widespread organized publicity campaign is prohibited, the scheme became known with extraordinary rapidity, and though the "Hospitals Trust," as it is known, only came into being a month ago, there are no busier offices in Dublin than its headquarters at Earlsfort Terrace. Already a huge staff is employed to deal with the requests for $50 tickets, pouring in from far and near. The first sweepstake is expected to yield $100,000 for the Dublin hospitals.

Mr. McGrath said that applications had already come in from America, but no tickets had been distributed there on an organized scale. Questioned regarding the reported circulation of lottery tickets in New York alleged to have been issued by the Free State Government and stated to bear the "government seal and President Cosgrave's signature," Mr. McGrath said no lottery or sweepstake is being conducted by the Irish Government and the tickets so described have nothing whatever to do with the hospitals sweepstakes.

PORTUGAL STUDYING CHANGE OF REGIME

ROYALISTS TO ENTER FIELD

National Unionist Party Likely to Control New Government, Backed by Militarists.

By ALVA E. GAYMON.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LISBON, Aug. 14.—How the Portuguese dictatorship plans to turn the government over to the new party which was recently organized is not yet known. The present government does not want, nor will it tolerate the return of the old political parties from which the military group wrested the control of the country.

It is not thought likely that an absolutely free election will be risked because of the probability of a fusion of all the old parties presenting a solid front against the candidates chosen by the new National Union party under the supervision of the present military dictatorship.

In well informed circles it is thought that some sort of an election will eventually be held in line with the tactics used by Premier Mussolini.

The Royalist Party has stated that it will support the dictatorship but will put its own candidates in the field at any election. Under the republican régime the Royalists carried little weight in the government and no favors were extended to their few deputies and senators. But at this time, when none of the old political parties will have anything to do with the dictatorship or with the National Unionists they apparently see a better chance, small as it may be, of gaining influence in the country. The dictatorship, also, is not averse to having a little competition at the elections, especially if no violent antagonism is shown.

The leaders of all the old parties refuse to recognize the dictatorship in any way and they have even gone so far as to voice their opinions to the League of Nations. The elections, therefore, if they are held, will mean nothing to them and in all probability the new government will be composed of royalists and members of the National Union party.

The government is asking for adherents to the new party, but no plan has yet been presented to the public for a change from the actual military dictatorship. A way is being ardently sought by which the dictatorship can relinquish the government to its chosen successors and still keep in the good graces of the new régime. The National Unionists will undoubtedly be the controlling element of the new government and behind it, to keep peace and order, and to keep the old parties from coming back, will be the military powers which are now in control.

WORLD COURT POSTS PROMISE KEEN FIGHT

Twenty-five Candidates Already Named by Forty-two Nations for Fifteen Places.

AMERICANS' CHANCES GOOD

One of Six Believed Certain to Be Chosen—Re-election of Nine Present Judges Expected.

By CLARENCE K. STREIT.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

GENEVA, Aug. 14.—With nominations for the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague now in from forty-two of fifty-five countries, it is evident that the election of a full bench in September by the League of Nations Council and Assembly will be one of the most interesting events of the coming session. Since the judges of the World Court, which was established in 1921, serve nine years, this will be the second such election. Since the court was an untried experiment when the present bench was elected, this will be the first time when experience will have played a rôle in the voting.

To add to the importance of the election not only has the court acquired great prestige since 1921, but twenty-six states, or nearly half of the members of the League have now bound themselves to accept its compulsory jurisdiction, a development not dreamed of a decade ago.

15 Full-Time Judges Likely.

It is generally assumed the election will be held under the revised statute, which provides for fifteen full judges to devote all their time to the court, instead of the present eleven full and four deputy judges, none of whom now is expected to devote more than a part of his time to the court. Since there are already twenty-five nominations for the fifteen places—and more likely to be made, since nominations by several nations including the United States have not yet been received—the competition will be keen.

It is supposed that the nine present judges who are candidates for re-election will all be re-elected, though a few may fail or withdraw later. If these nine are re-elected, the six places to be filled will be those occupied by Japanese, Chinese, Swiss, Dutch, Yugoslav and American judges.

In considering the chances of the various candidates it must be kept in mind that the statute provides that the judges "shall represent the main forms of civilization and the principal legal systems of the world." In addition to the six nations mentioned above, those now represented on the bench are Italy, France, Spain, Brazil, Cuba, Rumania, Norway, Denmark and Great Britain.

Divided by civilizations and legal systems, there are the Asiatic, with China and Japan; the Latin, with France, Italy, Spain, Brazil and Cuba; the Anglo-Saxon, with Great Britain and the United States; Scandinavian, with Denmark and Norway; Teutonic, with the Netherlands; mixtures, such as Teutonic-Latin, in Switzerland, and Latin-Slav, with Rumania.

Weaknesses May Be Remedied.

It is obvious that the groups least well represented are the Teutonic, Slav and Moslem. That there exists a feeling that this ought to be remedied is evident from the fact that four Germans have been nominated, more of the candidates being German than any other nationality, except Americans, of whom there are six.

The election of one German is regarded as certain and the race is expected to be between Walter Schuecking, nominated by France, Germany, England, Austria and Luxemburg, and Walter Simons, nominated by Denmark, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway and Siam. As for the Slavs, Count Michael Rostworowski of Poland, nominated by China, Finland, France, the Irish Free State, Italy, Latvia and Poland, has an excellent chance of election.

One American also is believed certain of election, but whom he will be is pure guesswork, unless the American group gives a lead by nominating an American, in which event this candidate will be likely to win.

The nominations of Americans are as follows:

Dean Roscoe Pound of the Harvard Law School by Australia, Great Britain and Siam; Frank B. Kellogg by Denmark; Elihu Root, by Nicaragua; Dr. James Brown Scott, by Cuba; George W. Wickersham, by France, and Dean John H. Wigmore of the Law School of Northwestern University, by the Dominican Republic.

Because of their age, there is doubt that Messrs. Root, Kellogg or Wickersham would run for a nine-year judgeship. If they do, each has a good chance.

That leaves three of six posts to be filled. The Japanese vacancy is believed certain to be filled by Mineitciro Adatci, former Japanese member of the League Council, who, with twenty nominations, is easily the most popular candidate on the list. The Chinese vacancy is fairly sure to be filled by the sole Chinese candidate, Chinglun Frank Lee, who was educated at New York University.

Thus there remains only one judgeship, the nationality of which is completely in doubt, and over it there is expected to be much electioneering. The Dutch have strong claims to keep a place, for it is difficult to conceive The Hague Court without a Dutchman, in view of what the Netherlands has done for international law and in view of the meager Teutonic representation. The most likely of the three Dutch candidates are J. Kosters, named by the Netherlands, and Jonkher Van Eysinga, named by Australia and Great Britain.

Swiss Are Popular, Too.

That the Swiss, too, are popular for a judgeship is shown by the fact that the Swiss Vice President, Covert Max Hubert, received seven nominations, though he refuses to run. The only other Swiss candidate is Professor Eugene Borel of Geneva.

The lack of Slav representation is expected to tell strongly in favor of Yugoslavia retaining a place in the court, and the disproportion between Latin and Anglo-Saxon representatives adds to the obvious chances of General Jan Christiaan Smuts, nominated by the Netherlands.

On the other hand, twelve Latin-American States have formally requested that the Latin-American representation be increased to three. Though with Spanish, Brazilian and Cuban judges, their legal system, aside from its connection with those of France and Italy, already is the most strongly represented in the court, it will be hard for the League to avoid granting this request without offending Latin Americans. It will be still harder since Gustavo Guerrero of Salvador, with fifteen nominations, is the second most popular candidate, and for him to be elected as it stands either Dr. Antonio S. de Bustamente of Cuba or Epitacio de S. Pessoa of Brazil will have to be rejected for re-election.

The competition, indeed, is so close that possibly the Rumanian judge or one Scandinavian judge for purely national reasons may fail of re-election.

At the same election the vacancy left by resignation of Charles Evans Hughes will be filled until the end of the year. It is fairly certain that an American will be elected, probably the same one who is elected for the full term.

To add to the difficulty, in both elections the Assembly and Council must vote separately, each without knowledge of the results in the other house. Each government will vote for fifteen judges, and only those getting a majority of the votes of the Assembly and Council will be elected. Had the United States ratified the Root protocol in time it would have two votes, one in the Assembly and one in the Council. As it is, it has no vote.

Plaque to Sir Walter Scott Will Be Unveiled in London

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—Next month Hugh Walpole will unveil a tablet on the site of the old St. James Hotel in Jermyn Street, where Sir Walter Scott spent his last days in London.

Sir Walter occupied a back room on the second floor, in which he received messages from royal friends and famous men.

When in 1832 Sir Walter came home from Italy to die in his native land, he lay ill for three weeks at the hotel, the site of which is now occupied by Turkish baths, on which the memorial tablet will be affixed.

CONTRASTS SUMMER HERE AND IN EUROPE

French Scientist Lays Variation in Part to Atmospheric Depressions From Sunspots.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 15.—The contrast between the hot dry Summer afflicting the United States and the chill, rainy weather prevalent in Western Europe was the subject of a communication issued yesterday by Henry Memery, director of the Talence Observatory near Bordeaux.

In it he attributes these opposite weather conditions on the two continents to a combination of atmospheric depressions caused by sun spots and to prevailing winds and varying conditions of temperature over land and over water.

M. Memery calls attention to the following facts: In Summer the temperature is warmer over continents than over oceans. In periods of decline in solar activity the greatest number of atmospheric depressions occurs, and, owing to the general wind direction, this heat is carried across the American Continent to the Eastern United States, but in passing over the ocean is tempered by the influence of the mass of water and therefore Western Europe is cool and wet.

This part of the continent only suffers heat extremes when the wind is easterly, he adds.

GUIDEBOOK SCORES OXFORD

New Book of Series Portrays Slums as Well as Beauty Spots.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—A series of "cautionary guide books" inaugurated recently, with one devoted to St. Albans, have now singled out Oxford as the latest offender against the inherent beauty of the old towns of England. The new Oxford guide issued by the Design and Industries Association endeavors to show that a good deal about the university town needs cleaning up. It has such comparative photographs as "The Treasured Heart of Oxford" and "Her Neglected Slums," pleasant banks and unpleasant shopfronts, and bill-posting horrors desecrating landscape.

"The Oxford of the old prints, the Oxford of Wordsworth and Turner, is gone forever," laments the guide book's preface.

Carlisle is said to be the next prospective victim of the series.

HIGH HEELS ON HIGH SEAS.

Antwerp Hears They Are a Frequent Cause of Accidents on Shipboard.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ANTWERP, Aug. 14.—That women wearing high heels are just as unseaworthy for the purposes of insurance as a top-heavy ship was one of the complaints made during the maritime conference recently held in Antwerp by Sir Norman Hill, vice president of the British Chamber of Commerce, who spoke on unseaworthiness for insurance purposes.

The ordinary run of accidents to passengers, he said, outside shipwreck, generally was due to casual causes, as most passengers embarked without any kind of preparation for the voyage or for conditions to which they were quite unaccustomed.

Women especially, he added, usually were neither clothed nor shod suitably for life on shipboard. They blamed the captain when they slipped and fell although it was their own heels, and not the ship, which usually were to blame. If passengers would take a little more thought, Sir Norman said, most casualties could be avoided.

A NINETY-YEAR EXPERIMENT.

British Agricultural Test Will Not End Until Year 2020.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—An experiment that will not be completed until the year 2020 has been started at Rothamsted Agricultural Station in Hertfordshire. Ever since 1843, when the first experiments in fertilizing were made there, they have covered longer and longer periods, and this time all records are broken.

Plans have been made to subject five crops—roots, barley seeds mixture, wheat, forest mixture and potatoes—to fifteen different kinds of treatments in different quantities. It will take ninety years to carry out the series of treatments.

By 2020 the Rothamsted chemists will have volumes of records of the response of different crops to different treatments under various weather conditions.

GERMANS UNITED ON POLISH CORRIDOR

Speech by Treviranus Voiced Nationwide Belief That an Injustice Must Be Remedied.

PERIL TO PEACE STRESSED

Radio "Debate" With Cabinet Member Taking Part Reiterates Feeling on East Prussia's Separation.

By KENDALL FOSS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 15.—Gottfried Treviranus, Minister for Occupied Areas, caused a first-class stir in Paris and Warsaw this week by declaring that Germany had not forgotten the "injustices" connected with the creation of the Polish Corridor.

Meanings were read into his words and even war clouds were seen by some of the more easily excited. Breaches of the obligations imposed upon signers of the Kellogg pact and members of the League of Nations were found to be imminent and the absence of an "Eastern Locarno" was bewailed by those particularly interested in preserving the status quo.

The former naval officer and present Nationalist Reichstag Deputy and Cabinet member, however, had but stated, though rather more strongly and forcefully than has recently been heard in these parts, the "simple truth," which every German clings to with all his might, that the severance of East Prussia from the main body of the Reich by the Polish Corridor is an unsatisfactory and impossible state of affairs which must be changed before true peace and harmony can be achieved in Eastern Europe. That is an axiom which to German minds needs no proving.

Said Nothing New.

Herr Treviranus may have been somewhat impetuous and may have expressed himself more vigorously than customary, but he said nothing new. The occasion of his speech, which contained such phrases as "We have not forgotten the wound on our eastern flank and the lopping off of the Vistula district, nor have we forgotten how shabbily Woodrow Wilson urged the unnatural severing of East Prussia," was a meeting before the Reichstag building last Sunday to commemorate the freeing of the Rhineland.

It was, of course, to be expected that such words would awake echoes abroad. It was, therefore, hastily pointed out that neither Chancellor Bruening nor Foreign Minister Curtius had seen the text of the speech, so that it could in no wise be considered a governmental utterance.

Next day the government decided that the speech was not as bad as it had at first thought and began calling attention through the press to the fact that the words really only represented the thoughts of every true German. Nevertheless a sudden change in the radio program for Tuesday evening was made when it was announced that Herr Treviranus would debate with a leading editor on how he happened to give his now famous speech, and it is not stretching matters too far to see traces of some high authority in this revision of the program.

Denies Voicing War Cry.

Herr Treviranus explained that he had only given voice to what people thought and that far from being a cry for war his appeal was for justice to be done in order to remove the ever-present possibility of trouble. When his opponent, whose task was like that of the feeder in a vaudeville team, wanted to know if Herr Treviranus's experience as a naval officer had made him so anxious to indulge in another cataclysm, the former officer replied:

"On the contrary. Only soldiers with front experience can liquidate war. The comradeship of soldiers bridges frontiers."

The impression here is that the excitement, especially in Warsaw and Paris, is dying down. Yet the problem of Germany's eastern frontier remains. On two main counts Germany continues and will continue to urge the revision of the Treaty of Versailles and an end to the "farce" of the Polish Corridor.

One point is national prestige. There is more humiliation in having your country cut in two than in losing almost any amount of territory along a border. It rankles when one cannot travel from one part of Germany to another without passing through the often suspicious inspection of the Polish passport authorities. It is said reliably that even President von Hindenburg, when he goes to his estate at Neudeck in East Prussia, must show his passport properly visaed, and if he has shotguns along for hunting in the woods near his home these must be locked in the baggage car while crossing the Corridor.

Other Reason Economic.

The other reason is economic and weighs more deeply with those realists who concern themselves with tangible matters. The agricultural and industrial depression under which East Prussia is suffering is due in no small measure to the difficulties of transport across the corridor to the main body of the Reich. East Prussia is slowly but surely shriveling up, and its separation from the rest of the country has dried up those deep-lying sources of nourishment which derive from free and unobstructed contact.

Poland wanted access to the sea. Germany wants access to East Prussia. Although there is admittedly a preponderance of Poles in the Corridor country, Germany contends that her need is greater than her neighbor's.

"Poland could have all the access to the sea she wants by internationalizing the Vistula in the same manner as the Rhine, and if it is charged that this provision would ficulties of transport across the Corbreak down in wartime, well, the Corridor could not be defended anyway," is the sense of one of the chief arguments brought to bear by the Germans.

Germany wants East Prussia linked up with the Reich. She will continue to want it and fight for it peacefully through the machinery of the League. Partly owing to lack of an army capable of carrying on an offensive war and partly through the conviction that wars do not settle things nearly as well as agreements, Republican Germany pins her faith on peaceful means and the inate sense of justice which she is sure will one day make the world appreciate the necessity of removing some of those obstacles to harmonious relationships in Eastern Europe and thus allay that suspicious watchfulness which is always ready to burst forth as it did this week over Herr Treviranus's Constitution Day address.

Germany's New 'Constitutional Party' Finds It Chose a Name Already Taken

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 14.—Hearty laughter echoed the other day through the headquarters of the new "Constitutional party," a party which was founded after dissolution of the Reichstag and which hoped to prove a middle-class rallying point for a consolidated opposition against the Left and Right extremists. The laughter followed receipt of news that a smart and far-sighted but hitherto unknown political capitalizer named Hall-Halfern was daring to dispute the party's claim to the name Staatspartei.

The laughter was taken up and re-echoed throughout the press and political circles. Now, however, the merriment has taken on a hollow note and is rapidly dying away, for Hall-Halfern appears to be making good his claim before the courts that he is president of a "Staatspartei" founded on March 6, 1929.

In the register of associations maintained at the court house here a "Staatspartei" was entered on that date with Hall-Halfern as president and with a committee composed of a bank clerk, a dentist and a free-lance. So far as "rights" go there is nothing against the old Staatspartei; in fact, its headquarters turns out to be merely a furnished room in a poorer quarter of Berlin. It is therefore impossible for the new Staatspartei to register its name officially, as it must do before it can administer funds and conduct party business.

Some suspicion as to the real purpose of the first Staatspartei has been awakened in political circles by the announcement that Hall-Halfern does not wish to have to bring the matter into the courts but would prefer a "fusion of the two Staatsparteien," with a Reichstag seat for himself or simply reimbursement of expenses connected with the founding of his party, which he "conservatively" estimates at $25,000.

MRS. GARRETT HOSTESS AT CONCERTS IN ROME

Many Voice Delight in Programs by American Quartet at Ambassador's Home.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Aug. 15.—Italian music lovers, and they are many, owe a debt of gratitude to Mrs. John W. Garrett, wife of the American Ambassador in Rome, for giving them an opportunity to hear and appreciate the American quartet who have been heard in Mr. Garrett's magnificent home in Palazzo Respigliosi by select audiences which were delighted with the perfection of the renditions. It probably will do more to acquaint Italians with the high degree of excellence of American musical performances than any single event, aside from the European tour of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Next week Mrs. Garrett will take the quartet to Capri, where she has rented the villa formerly occupied by the Queen of Sweden, which has become known in America through Dr. Manthe's famous book. She proposes to hold open house in Capri every evening while the quartet entertains for her numerous guests among the Italians and foreigners who are spending the Summer there.

Thus, through the munificence of one individual hundreds will be afforded an opportunity of judging for themselves the place the United States occupies in the musical world.

TALKIES PROSPER IN PARIS.

Cinemas Showing Them Enjoy a Big Gain in Receipts.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—The extent to which sound pictures have been accepted as a form of screen entertainment in Paris is well illustrated by the report just being made by George R. Canty, United States Motion Picture Trade Commissioner in Europe for the Department of Commerce. Despite the controversy between American and French film interests, which has deprived French screens of American pictures for six months, 173 Parisian cinemas increased their earnings 26,000,000 francs ($1,040,000), or 11 per cent for the year ended Jan. 31, 1929.

Total receipts for the year were 230,000,000 francs ($9,200,000), of which State and poor taxes received 54,000,000 francs ($2,160,000). That the unusual increase is due to the marked popularity of sound films is indicated by comparison of the increase of earnings for 1928 with the earnings of last year. Earnings in 1928 were only 7,000,000 francs ($280,000).

Still another factor, although of less importance, was the adoption of American movie exploitation methods by the larger Boulevard cinemas.

FRENCH AUTO MISHAPS RISE.

Premier Orders Heavier Fines and Withdrawal of Offenders' Licenses.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—France has been recently speeding up to an extent which is alarming those who prefer quieter ways. The Ministry of Interior has discovered that the death roll from automobile accidents in the country is ten a day, with about twenty times that number injured. Since 1924 the number has more than doubled.

The Premier, asked to do something, has ordered larger fines and the withdrawal of driving licenses from those who cause accidents. Here no one can get a license to drive until he has passed an examination. Even that, however, does not seem to help much, and in a country where the habit is for every one to drive in the middle of the road one wonders if M. Tardieu's recommendations will have any great effect.

ANONYMITY IS FEATURE OF PARIS MAGAZINE

American Publishers Say They Will Combat "Infernal Personality Mongering."

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 15.—There is enough of the personality complex says a new Paris publishing house which has proposed a combat over the supply of ego in the present cosmos by issuing an artistic literary publication to which all the contributions shall be anonymous.

The founders of this publication are Americans, but, true to the principles they have adopted, refuse to divulge their identity beyond the firm name, Carefour Editions and their magazine will be called Anonymous.

"Many of the greatest works of the art world," they point out, "such as the Gothic cathedrals of Northern France, the Winged Victory and the authorised version of the Bible to all intents and purposes are anonymous. Yet today, in order to get appreciation for his work, the artist must spend perhaps half his entire effort in earning himself a reputation before his work receives consideration. Anonymous will be published as a step to put an end to this infernal personality mongering."

TURKS TAKE TO BEACHES.

American Swimming Suits Popular, But Istanbul Baths Suffer.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ISTANBUL, July 22.—Another blow has been struck at a venerable business in Istanbul. The increasingly large number of beach resorts near the city has drawn almost all of the Summer trade from the traditional Turkish baths.

Formerly in hot weather the baths had almost as many patrons as in Winter, but now the steaming marble halls and hot plunges cannot compete with trim beach cabins which have been built particularly at Floria on the Sea of Marmora. New resorts are also accessible on the Bosporus and within automobile distance on the Black Sea, in addition to the older beaches on the island of Prinkipo and at Moda.

As a matter of fact, the resort business is spreading over more territory and is catering to a heavy trade in American bathing suits, poster advertisements of which placard every portion of the city. Formerly Turks indulged in a prim and formal Summer holiday in the vicinity of Therapia on the Bosporus. Now the vacation trade there does not justify opening all of the hotels, whereas more and more seashore resorts are being improved. The newest beach is that at Yalova, opened last week.

LEGION OF HONOR GROWTH.

Order Created by Napoleon in 1802 Now Has 141,386 Members.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Aug. 14.—The French Legion of Honor, created in 1802 by Napoleon as a means of conferring distinction upon the heroes of his armies has steadily increased its scope and at the present time boasts a membership of 141,386.

From being a purely military order, the Legion of Honor was later conferred for any exceptional services to the country either in an official capacity or in professions. Each year the number of holders of the coveted honor increases, though several times the membership has been limited by law. Under present stipulations the various French Ministries can name 2,005 knights, 386 officers, and 63 commanders annually and higher grades only in accordance with age promotions which, with rare exceptions, mean an officer must be 48 years of age, and a commander 53. Higher ranks are created only by a special meeting of the Legion of Honor Council.

RUSSIANS BELIEVED HAPPIER UNDER REDS

But People Are Being Worked as Never Before to Carry Out the Soviet Programs.

DRIVE ON CHURCHES EASED

By WALTER DURANTY.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MOSCOW, Aug. 14.—The tourist season in Russia, now in full swing, throws light on phases of Soviet life that chiefly interest Americans. The questions asked your correspondent generally concern the following:

Government ownership and the opportunity or lack of opportunity for individual initiative; religion; propaganda abroad; "morality," meaning sexual relations and rash education, and, finally, "are the people happier, better fed, clothed and housed than before the revolution?"

These are specific questions more or less, but there are invariably two others:

"Will the Bolshevist experiment succeed?" and "What about the five-year plan," which may be compared to the traditional New York query to the visitor, "What do you think of America?" or the more immediate inquiry, "When can we expect an improvement on the stock market?"

Employes Likened to Those Here.

The foreign correspondent in Russia or elsewhere deals little with generalities but must confine himself to events as they occur. The circumstances in the case of the Soviet Union, however, are so unusual that it is perhaps permissible to try to provide brief answers along general lines.

In Soviet Russia today almost everything that matters is owned, controlled or run by the State, with one most important exception—namely, agriculture. Small private "home craft" manufacture and a small amount of private commerce are allowed to exist. In total volume there is a great deal of this private trade, but always on condition that it stays small.

The moment any individual or group begins to grow too large it is repressed or eliminated by taxation. All factories, mines, transportation facilities and other public utilities, newspapers, theatres, publishing houses, movies and athletics are in the hands of the State or of cooperatives, which in the Soviet are State organizations. This sounds strange to Americans, but in practice it is little different nowadays from the American system.

That is, there are in the Soviet great trusts running these factories of national life, just as occurs in many cases in the United States. They are more complete and more monopolistic here—that is the chief difference. But instead of a series of trust profits and instead of the policy being in the hands of private capital, they here belong to the State.

This affects few save the highest employes, as even in America the majority of employes of the biggest trusts draw wages and perform their jobs without much knowing or caring where the final ownership lies. Thus for the ordinary Russian worker or employe his position is much the same as in the United States—rewards and promotion for good work and initiative, bonuses even when the trust shows exceptional profits.

The religious situation in Russia is no less tense than it was last Winter. The overharsh drive that was in progress against the churches has been stopped. Many that were closed have been reopened and many exiled priests have been allowed to return. Religion is despised and rejected by the Bolsheviki, but for the time being at least it is not being persecuted or molested.

Calls Propaganda Exaggerated.

Bolshevist propaganda seems to your correspondent to be exaggerated. That foreign Communist parties are controlled by the Russian party is so self-evident as to be unworthy of discussion, and it is equally true that the Kremlin has not abandoned its faith in ultimate world revolution. But to suggest that the Kremlin is spending vast sums of money for vague yet pernicious purposes in the United States or elsewhere is just about as absurd as the talk of a Bolshevist "virus" or "bacillus"—as if bolshevism was to be caught by a millionaire or a satisfied American worker or Matthew Woll or a Representative as unwillingly as they would catch the bubonic plague.

When the people of Russia are being sweated to make Russia modern, independent and prosperous as no people has been sweated in peace time since the Egyptian Pharaohs built the pyramids for their own glory, it is sheer fantasy to tell of millions wasted in so-called propaganda.

The morality question is hard to answer. The Soviet has shifted its regulation of sex relations back to nature—men and women can unite and separate at their own free will. There are certain simple rules for the benefit of the children or the weaker party in the union and for disposal of common property—beyond that sexual freedom is complete.

Indeed, the younger generation of Russians is surprised that the rest of the world still confuses sex with morality or ethics. On the other hand, it is a fact that prostitution has decreased to a degree your correspondent could not believe unless he had seen it with his own eyes. And as far as one can judge, the proportion of happy marriages with or without benefit of clergy or the State is as high as anywhere. Nor has legalized abortion affected the birth rate or seemed to reduce the number of smiling and apparently well nurtured babies.

That the Russian masses have gained materially by the revolution can hardly be denied, although the present commodity shortage in town and country and the immense upset of rural ways caused by the collective farm movement might and does produce doubtful grumblings from individuals when they are asked for a direct comparison. This is inevitable in this country, which is deliberately sacrificing today for tomorrow.

Success Held Likely.

Whether the Bolshevist experiment will succeed, who can tell? To this question I always give the same answer:

"Unless there is a disastrous war or a great natural misfortune, such as a total crop failure or an internecine struggle within the Communist party I cannot see what will prevent its success in this country of unlimited resources, whose population has never known Western individualism or freedom in our sense and which is far more appropriate for communal effort imposed from above than Karl Marx ever dreamed."

Finally, the five-year plan is, after all, only a budget scheme on a grand scale extended over five years instead of one for convenience. Soviet Russia started an earlier five-year plan in 1922-23, although it got less advertising, and Russia will doubtless start another when the present period has elapsed.

When the former five-year plan was conceived foreigners here were frankly contemptuous and the Bolsheviki themselves were mostly sceptical. Yet it was carried out—near enough. History will probably repeat itself and 1932 will see Russian progress fairly close to what the plan demands. Then the Kremlin will announce a new mountain range to be conquered before the summit is reached.

And after that another and another will have to be reached. Because these five-year plans have mystic functions in this land of mysticism, which has disavowed God and religion. They represent the ideal of heaven—unattainable but always to be aimed at.

Average Age of Turks Unknown, Lawsuit Has to Be Adjourned

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

INSTANBUL, July 31.—Because the average span of life in Turkey is unknown, it has been necessary to postpone a damage suit pending in a local court.

Relatives of a man who died from accidental asphyxiation sued the gas company. Attorneys for the defense claimed that the man had lived his full span anyhow. The court requested the Ministry of Hygiene and several insurance companies to supply figures on which to base a decision, but the information was not forthcoming and the case was put over.

FRENCH MUSEUM GETS NOTED NAPOLEON BUST

Bartolini's Sculpture, Done at Emperor's Order, Will Stand in Josephine's Bedroom.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, July 31.—Of the many busts of Napoleon scattered in Europe, one of the most generally praised—a work by the Italian artist Lorenzo Bartolini—has just come into the possession of the French Government through the generosity of Lucien Baszanger, the Geneva jeweler, who is an enthusiastic collector of Napoleonic objects.

Bartolini's marble masterpiece has been accepted by the National Museum at Malmaison, which is devoted to Napoleonic souvenirs, and will be placed in the bedroom of the Empress Josephine there.

Bartolini, a Tuscan sculptor, was one of Napoleon's early protéges and did several likenesses of the Emperor. The one which will be placed in Malmaison was done between the years of 1808 and 1810, when Napoleon was at the summit of his glory, and is a remarkable work of art comparable to the finest work of classic sculptors. The purity of its lines and the rare intensity of expression are remarked by all Napoleon admirers. The chin expresses energy of character in the highest degree, and the profile is indicative of power and serenity seldom attained. The work displays both the high admiration and the affection with which the Emperor was regarded by the sculptor.

Bartolini made numerous other busts at Napoleon's order, including those of Josephine and Queen Hortense.

BELGIAN PHONE CHANGES.

Dial System Is to Be Extended to Intercity Communication.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BRUSSELS, July 31.—Most important changes in the Belgian telephone system are announced for the beginning of 1931. Subscribers who already use the automatic system for local calls in Brussels and Antwerp and who can put themselves through without the aid of the central office, will be able to call up other cities in Belgium without the assistance of the office. Dials, with an indicator for calling up the right city, will be put in. This innovation will probably be followed shortly by still another, enabling subscribers to call up foreign countries automatically.

Underground telephone cables are being laid down to connect the chief cities of Belgium, while in 1931, a Brussels-Mons-Valenciennes cable will be laid down, improving telephonic communications with Paris, which now pass over Lille.

A new telephonic cable will be placed during August between La Panne, on the Belgian coast, and Dumpton Gate, England, with a connection with Canterbury. This cable will have twenty-eight "conductors," taking 300 communications simultaneously. It will enable Great Britain to get through to Germany, Dantzig, Austria, Hungary, Poland and Czechoslovakia as well as to the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg.

From La Panne the line runs to Liége, Verviers and Eupen; on the German frontier, at Iseghem, it links up with the new Ghent-Courtrai-Mouscron-Lille and Paris line to be laid down in 1931. In 1932 a line from La Panne to Namur, Dinant, Jemelle, Bastogne and Arlon will be laid, with a branch toward Givet and Mezières to link up with the Strasbourg-Paris line.

FRENCH STUDY SEA SPRINGS

Diving Scientists Find Hot and Cold Water Spouting From Ocean Beds.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARS, July 31.—The French scientists, Gruvel and Bernard, have recently conducted researches into the origin of fresh water springs beneath the ocean bed.

Existence of these springs has been known ever since the time of the Phoenicians. The French scientists, with the use of diving apparatus, have been able to make a close study of the phenomenon, and their report describes in detail the nature of the different kinds of submarine springs. Some of these are hot springs and come from funnel-shaped orifices in the solid rock, projecting perpendicular streams with such force as to carry stones weighing as much as twenty grams to the surface of the sea. Others bubble up from myriad small openings and form a current of great volume. There are also cold water springs under the sea.

The scientists believe it possible to utilize these fresh water springs to furnish irrigation for arid countries bordering the ocean.

BRITISH DELEGATES TO BAN BRIAND PLAN

But They Will Laud Motives of His Pan-Europe Proposal at Geneva Meeting.

DOMINIONS OPPOSE SCHEME

Uncertainty on Fiscal Policy Adds to Difficulty—Faith in Free Trade Wanes.

By CHARLES A. SELDEN.

Wireless to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 15.—England's delegates to the League of Nations Assembly will go to Geneva three weeks hence very much in the mood of polite but not deeply stirred mourners at the funeral of a dear friend's favorite aunt.

The friend is Aristide Briand and the aunt, of course, is his plan for a United States of Europe, including Great Britain. England thinks the plan is already dead, but whether it is dead or not this country will have nothing to do with it and the British delegates will say so as pleasantly as possible and will again praise the French Foreign Minister for his motives, even though Downing Street is really much puzzled as to what those motives are.

This refusal of Britain to participate, which may be taken as one of the few certainties in the present Anglo-European relations, was foreshadowed a month ago by the MacDonald Government's response to the Briand proposals. But that reply was officially labeled tentative and preliminary, thereby leaving the door open for more enthusiastic second thoughts on the matter. Since then, however, the situation has crystallized and there will be no second thoughts.

Pressed Empire Consultation.

One reason given by the British Government for its initial hesitancy was that the governments of the dominions would first have to be consulted before England could definitely decide whether she would enter a new international combination from which other countries of the British Commonwealth would be automatically excluded by geographical considerations, regardless of any other objections there might be to them.

Such consultations, in any formal sense, would naturally come at the Imperial Conference of the Premiers of England and the dominions. But that conference will not begin until the end of September, when the League Assembly session at which the Briand plan is scheduled for discussion will presumably be over.

If the plan dies early in September at Geneva, or if it is allowed to drop into a long period of oblivion as England expects, there will be no necessity to bring the matter up at the London meeting of the British Premiers later in the month. There is no mention of the subject on the Imperial Conference agenda.

If, on the other hand, the plan should develop some life at the assembly discussions England will be able to avoid the awkwardness of flatly refusing it by saying again that she must first consult the dominions. She will not care to carry on an even apparently serious flirtation with the United States of Europe idea just before her tryst at London with the jealous dominions.

Dominions Against Plan.

At the most the supposed need for consultation with the other parts of the empire is only camouflage, for without any formal exchange of views on the matter London already knows what Ottawa, Canberra, Wellington and the other empire capitals think of the plan. On the eve of their difficult struggle to reach some agreement for better trade relations among all the parts of the empire the dominion Premiers resent the very thought of the mother country going off alone to tie herself up to some European economic system from which they would be excluded.

England's experience last February when William Graham, president of the British Board of Trade, failed to get the European States to agree to increase their tariffs for two years, is another cause of this country's complete lack of enthusiasm for the Briand project.

Free Trade Criticized.

There was a paradox in Mr. Graham's trying to get a tariff truce in Europe while a large section of the English people was clamoring against any agreement which would prohibit Britain from joining the tariff countries. Never since Sir Robert Peel rescinded the corn laws under pressure from Richard Cobden has there been so much controversy in the British Isles over the relative merits of free trade and protection.

Except for such stalwarts as Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the extreme doctrinaires of the Liberal party, there is a rapidly growing skepticism in all political parties as to the wisdom of longer adhering to the country's traditional free-trade policy. England is certainly not prospering now and the protectionists are making the most of their opportunity to convince the people that the industrial depression is chiefly due to the fact that this country admits the products of the rest of the world duty free, while all the other countries, not excepting the British dominions, impose heavy duties on everything that England exports.

It is hardly an exaggeration to say that Great Britain is now in process of being stampeded toward a protective policy. The present government is theoretically opposed to any such change, but there is a large trade union element in the Labor party which put the MacDonald Government into power that is preaching protection all the time.

If the demand of the protectionists was merely for duties on manufactured goods they would probably prevail, for it would be comparatively easy for them to persuade the people that it would be worth while to try such an experiment as a means of increasing output and ending unemployment.

But the tariff advocates are insisting on the imposition of tariffs on foreign food products and they have not yet succeeded in getting that across to Englishmen. Perhaps they will after the Imperial Conference.

Also there is compromise proposal for a flat general tariff of 10 per cent for revenue only, supplemented by special protection for certain selected industries.

Greeks in Turkey Made Citizens.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ISTANBUL, Aug. 1.—Greeks resident in Turkey are now being provided with bona fide Turkish citizenship papers, one of the first tangible results of the signing of the recent treaty with Greece. This ends a period of doubt and unrest for many inhabitants of the country, who have not been sure of their status since the World War.

THE WEEK IN AMERICA: NATURE ITS OWN CURE

RAIN BRINGS RELIEF

Showers Fall in Stricken Areas as President and Governors Confer.

POLITICS AGAIN TO FORE

Radicals Regain Some Lost Favor—From Coast to Coast in a Hurry.

By ARTHUR KROCK.

A "one-point" program for drought relief, decided on by Providence, was of infinitely more effect than the "nine-point" plan evolved at the White House conference last week between the President and the Governors. For this one point was expressed in the form of rain—hard, soaking rain, which the parched earth of the stricken States drank eagerly. The news that the rain was falling at last came to the conferees as they were about to announce their program, and made their problem one of reconstruction only, with the worst of the damage (including a corn crop decrease of 690,000,000 bushels) done and known.

Federal financial relief was rejected as a policy. Each State is to have a drought committee—"not a loafing but a working one," promised the Governor of Illinois—and so in each of the 250 counties affected throughout the United States. These, with the cooperation of the government, the Red Cross and the banking interest, are to deal as locally as possible with the individual problem of seeing distressed families through the Winter. A general Federal committee, with a railway representative participating, will coordinate the local work. Where there are surplus live stock and a shortage of feed, the cattle will be sent to States which have a feed surplus. And so on. Apparently it is in Kentucky where most of the financial assistance will be needed, for whole counties in that State report total loss of corn crops and 60 per cent failure of tobacco. That is just as if a city workingman's wages were suddenly cut off, his savings stolen and his house burned down.

If the President were in the marines it might be said of him that he landed on the drought problem last week and by Friday had the situation well in hand. To do this he relinquished the Western holiday he had planned. For the first time in wrestling with the difficulties which have beset his administration, luck—in the form of the heavy rainfall—was with Mr. Hoover. Though many individual farm families are in distress the drought is definitely canceled as a national calamity.

Meanwhile those produce merchants who took advantage of newspaper headlines to raise prices met the full brunt of the government's disapproval. Its agencies, including publicity of actual produce conditions and wholesale prices, were marshaled in the interest of the consumer. In arranging this wall of defense against profiteering Representative La Guardia of New York City played an initiatory part.

The State of New York, through the office of the Attorney General, joined the Federal effort to protect the purses of consumers by ordering public hearings, to begin tomorrow. A former Assistant United States Attorney, John Holley Clark Jr., with an excellent record for upsetting schemes of overcharge, graft and extortion, will preside at the first hearing; and the city department of markets is to furnish him with the results of a survey by its inspectors. In other parts of the Nation, State and city governments have been prompt to follow a similar course. Milk, fruit and vegetable dealers will be required to show cause why their prices must be increased.

It may be that this rapid and imposing mobilization of government forces will be able to check the tendency toward increases, although it is not clear how—if housewives choose to telephone their orders—dealers can be prevented from charging the price they can obtain. The solution will probably come as a result of the widespread publicity; shrewd dealers will ask normal prices and cut trade away from the profiteers, making even more than usual out of increased sales.

Some Radical Triumphs.

The voters of five States did a good deal more than to choose candidates during the week. Radical orators, a species which fared badly the week previous, triumphed in Nebraska and Oklahoma. In the latter State Thomas P. Gore, who was once a Senatorial thorn in Woodrow Wilson's side, won the run-off primary and will contest for Senator Pine's seat in November. Mr. Gore, who entered public life as a Populist, defeated a wealthy oil operator, as did "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, whose nomination for Governor was ratified by the Oklahoma Democrats. If this tendency spreads into Texas, this week will see the downfall of another oil millionaire—Ross Sterling—and the renaissance of "Ma" Ferguson. Ohio's Democratic balloting was notable for the nomination of a pro-repeal wet, former Representative Bulkley of Cleveland, for Senator, and a professing dry, former National Chairman George White, for Governor. In Mr. Bulkley's contest he made prohibition the issue; Mr. White said little if anything on the subject. How these two will get together on the party platform is interesting observers of politics everywhere in the country.

Arkansas stood pat on Senator Joe Robinson, declining to retire the minority leader and member of the American delegation to the London naval conference. It is clear that he is again to be the State's favorite son in 1932. The small vote—well below 200,000—cast by Alabama Democrats in their Heflin-less Senatorial primary unquestionably gives that exiled son of Aeolus a slight chance for success as an independent candidate. He counseled remaining away from the primary at which Representative Bankhead was chosen, and the Attorney General has ruled that an Alabaman who participated in that polling may legally and morally vote for whomever he chooses in November. The elements in the State which are hoping for the retirement of Mr. Heflin are appealing to Republicans not to seek to prolong his public life, in mere partisan malice, by voting for him in November. As to all that, we shall see.

Chairmen Shouse and Fess jousted valiantly on the tariff. The Republican named it as the Fall issue; the Democrat accepted in a burst of sarcasm. The two difficulties with all this are: (1) that issues are born, not made by chairmen, and (2) the records of both parties on the tariff are confused. Without Democratic votes it could not have been passed. More dramatic was the proclamation of Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, reading out of the Republican party all drys and calling his adherents to fight on the New York State convention floor. More entertaining than the tariff debate was the decision of Norman Thomas to stand for Congress in Brooklyn. And the most amusing political situation of the week was percipitated by Chairman Fess's statement that the Republican National Committee will support all Republican nominees, including Senator Norris of Nebraska, who endorsed Smith in 1928 and attacks the administration every day. The very next day Washington semi-officially announced that the President had quite the opposite idea of what the committee would do. But Mr. Fess is accustomed to these embarrassments.

The Man and the Machine.

The Pacific and the Atlantic Oceans were brought as close together by air as New York and Pittsburgh are by rail in the twelve and one-half-hour flight of Captain Frank M. Hawks from Los Angeles to Long Island. He reduced by two and one-half hours the record made by the Lindberghs, flying a 230-mile per hour Travelair motored by a Wright Whirlwind. Again Charles Lawrance, inventor of this engine, failed of mention while aviator, plane and engine were being celebrated. "But who," asks Mr. Lawrance on these occasions, "ever knew the name of Paul Revere's horse?" As Captain Hawks swung round some small storms in the St. Louis area he might have heard the drone of the Challenger motor in the Greater St. Louis, the plane in which Jackson and O'Brine this week beat the endurance record of the Hunter brothers of Illinois—553 hours and 41 minutes.

Keenly alert to all these miracles of the air—praising Hawks, watching the endurance fliers, broadcasting on aviation in New York and speaking to the Institute of Politics at Williamstown about it—Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh helped to make last week a notable period for flying. And while these airplane men were engaged in their activities the R-100 turned her silver nose homeward to London from Canada, with hope of lowering her own record, and by a flight of fifty hours decreasing by six hours the low mark of the Graf Zeppelin.

But the uses of aircraft are not all in humanity's interest. An orange-and-black bombing plane dropped explosives in the mine area around Providence, Ky., the lawless outgrowth of a strike. Because the number on the plane was imperfectly smudged, and because of the colors of the craft, it was quickly traced, and the pilot—Paul Montgomery—was arrested in Illinois. This rapid work stilled the alarms of those who had begun to fear that the skies hold a new and masked instrument of private vengeance.

Various Interesting Things.

On the surface of the continent Americans proceeded as usual about their work and their play. So accustomed to billions has the public become that little comment greeted an announcement that the Sinclair oil interests are about to form a world chain, representing ten hundred millions of dollars in assets. Our exports to Argentina, it was published, declined 41 per cent in June. In the red-ink column of news was also the item that there are 393 vacancies in the student body of the Naval Academy, suggesting that the service is losing its popularity. But the less thoughtful paid not so much attention to these things as to the news that, headed by Mary Pickford, five film stars—their popularity dimmed by the talkies—are coming back to the legitimate theatre; that religious leaders called for another "clean-up of the New York stage about the time the grand jury was refusing to indict Earl Carroll for his revue; that the Brooklyn Robins and the Chicago Cubs were fighting bitterly for first place in the national baseball league; that Helen Wills Moody is not to defend her tennis primacy this year, preferring to remain with her husband and her family; that Whichone and Gallant Fox at Saratoga met on the turf at last, and that Shamrock V arrived to contest for the America's Cup, victorious over the perils of the Atlantic.

OHIO GOES LIBERAL IN PRIMARY VOTING

Bulkley Victory Held to Indicate 80 Per Cent Democratic Anti-Dry Sentiment.

G. O. P. UNREST ALSO SEEN

Toledo District Vote for White Is Interpreted as Sign of Republican Discontent.

By HERBERT R. MENGERT.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

CINCINNATI, Aug. 13.—Frankness and candor have been restored in Ohio as political qualities of value—as tangible assets at the polling places.

This has been demonstrated in two outstanding primary results, in one of which former Representative Robert J. Bulkley of Cleveland, upstanding attorney and wealthy business man, won the Democratic nomination for United States Senator and in the other Wilbur M. White of Toledo won the Republican nomination for Congress in the Ninth District.

Bulkley's victory attracted the greatest amount of attention, although in other respects White's victory was as notable. Bulkley took a bold position, asking the voters to support him upon a platform in which he espoused repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. As a remedy for current evils of prohibition he gave incidental endorsement to modification of the Volstead act. His canvass, save in the city of Cleveland, was handled by Democratic political novices, former Republicans and independents.

Bulkley Entered Race Late.

After leaders throughout the State had made their arrangements for the primary canvass and after many endorsements had been given for three other candidates, Bulkley came into the field. His announcement was made on June 5, when former Governor James M. Cox, Democratic nominee for President in 1920, expressed a personal opinion at a Democratic "victory dinner" that the Eighteenth Amendment should be repealed. Cox gave no open support to Bulkley in the canvass. Nor did he ask the Democrats to follow the Cox ideas. The former Governor rather tantalizingly told his fellow partisans that such a declaration seemed to bar him from consideration and constituted a sufficient reason as to why he should not be "drafted" to became a candidate either for Governor or for Senator.

After the Cox address a hubbub of discussion followed. For a time it appeared that the Democrats would shun the idea of a nomination to raise the prohibition question. Bulkley opened his canvass under discouraging circumstances. Then a group of Clevelanders, headed by Carl E. Moore, a Cleveland business man and newspaper reporter, decided to take an appeal by advertising direct to the people. As a result Bulkley carried half the counties of the State and was either first or second in 80 per cent of the counties. In the cities he had many times the votes of all his opponents put together.

Liberal Sentiment Grows.

Interpreting the vote as an expression on prohibition, the party is approximately 80 per cent liberal.

Bulkley has to make his Fall canvass against Senator Roscoe Conkling McCulloch of Canton, who was appointed to succeed the late Senator Burton. McCulloch is not personally very popular and never has demonstrated any particular vote-getting ability. He is of the conservative type, wealthy and inclined to hold strictly to partisan lines. To say that he was a keen disappointment to that large section of Republicans which doubted the wisdom of the Hawley-Smoot tariff act is but to assert a well-known that. Whether he can resurrect the militant prohibition force that has made Ohio a dry State in the voting for twelve years is a question. McCulloch has indicated his willingness to try. In the polling, although unopposed, his vote was below another Republican candidate, Clarence J. Brown, nominee for Secretary of State, who had opposition. It also was far below the vote cast for Governor Myers Y. Cooper, who escaped opposition in his quest for a second term.

In November all will depend upon psychological waves. If the liberal sentiment is mounting, as the wets contend, Bulkley is likely to be swept into office. If there is nothing but mirage to the liberal promise, he may make as poor a showing as Graham P. Hunt of Cincinnati, liberal candidate of 1928, who lost to Burton by 800,000 plurality.

The Toledo victory of White gives evidence of growing discontent among Republicans over prohibition. White took a bold stand. Representative W. W. Chalmers, whom he defeated, refused to speak, although he was bound by a dry Congressional record. Chalmers carried the support of Walter F. Brown, Postmaster General and political strategist of the Hoover Administration. Here lies the importance of his victory. The Republicans may veer to the notion that they must readjust for 1932, and while they can follow the Democrats bag and baggage they may take a defeat this year and realign themselves for 1932.

Governorship Fight Dull.

The canvass for the Governorship in Ohio is largely to be colorless. The Democrats nominated George White of Marietta, a wealthy man who had been national chairman, but who had not proved popular in 1928, when he lost the Senatorial nomination to Truax. White has been silent on prohibition, although secretly sharing the disgust which many people feel for it. He ran rather poorly in the cities against Stephen M. Young of Cleveland, a boyish type of political hustler who was outspokenly liberal. What White is to do now is a puzzle. The Democratic platform position may be evasive, although Bulkley is his own platform. There is a growing sentiment, however, for Democrats to speak as they feel, and that is in opposition to Volstead and his works.

In the primary Governor Cooper had his jolts, too, along with the one suffered by President Hoover's man Brown. In a Columbus district a judicial appointee was defeated for renomination. In the nomination for treasurer of the State his appointee, H. Ross Ake of Canton, had difficulty in keeping out of third place.

Besides these incidents in Cincinnati and Hamilton County, the old stalwart Republican organization was threatened by an insurgent labor movement in contests for legislative positions.

Cincinnati election returns spoke volumes on the latent discontent that is smoldering and has had no opportunity to become articulate. It is the greatest menace that Republicans have to face. They hope that a Democratic wet campaign may be their refuge. Maybe it will be.

ARKANSANS BOOST ROBINSON FOR 1932

Senator's Overwhelming Primary Victory Makes Him "Favorite Son" for Presidency.

By CHARLES MORROW WILSON.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark., Aug. 13.—As the smoke clears from one of the fiercest primaries in the history of Arkansas politics, Senator Robinson, running mate of Alfred E. Smith in the 1928 national election, emerges from the struggle with the greatest majorities ever polled in an Arkansas Senatorial race. In the spirited Gubernatorial contest, Harvey Parnell, the present Governor, led Brooks Hayes, his youthful rival, by a safe margin.

The Arkansas Democratic primary virtually stands for election, since the Democratic party is overwhelmingly in the majority.

The race for the Gubernatorial nomination was essentially a contest between idealistic youth and proved middle age. Governor Parnell based his campaign wholly upon tangible accomplishments in highway building and betterments of schools and improved methods in taxation.

Mr. Hayes, who aspired to be the nation's youngest Governor, sought to give a breath of new air and idealism to the complicated and rapidly expanding issues of state. Both avoided extravagant promises and kept to hard, fast campaigning.

Mr. Hayes demanded the immediate removal of the State Highway Commission. Mr. Parnell insisted that such a move would inevitably cause the loss of several million dollars of needed road-building funds. Business interests of the State appear to have been about equally divided between the two contenders. But the citizenry of Arkansas has obviously reached the stage for appreciation of mature and proved tactics.

Robinson Stronger Than Ever.

Senator Robinson's outstanding victory is essentially a vote of confidence from his home constituency. His relations with the "powers" of the East and his long attendance upon the complexities of naval disarmament lost him none of his footing in his home State; indeed, they only increased his popularity and political prominence.

For nearly twenty years Mr. Robinson has been recognized as an outstanding power in Arkansas politics, and for at least ten years in national politics. Elected Governor in 1912, before the expiration of his term he received a legislative appointment to the Senate, to which, until the present primary, he has been re-elected without opposition.

His opponent, Tom W. Campbell, Little Rock lawyer and party referee of long standing, waged a forceful campaign, charging Senator Robinson with coalition with Eastern financial interests, with high-handed dictatorship while chairman of the Houston convention, with opposition to farm relief proposals and with having acquired the notion that he "owned the whole State of Arkansas."

Mr. Campbell's sallies brought the minority leader back to his native stamping grounds. But instead of launching an aggressive and fire-eating defense, Mr. Robinson spoke only on invitation. He talked at gatherings of various sorts made addresses of dedication and memorial and offered non-political explanations of the London disarmament parley. About two weeks before the date of the primary he launched a brief campaign. His opponent's charges bounced aside like a rubber ball.

So Robinson stands as Arkansas's most powerful political figure. Arkansas recognizes that fact and her people are intensely proud of the State's illustrious son.

ZARO AGHA'S PAY STOPPED.

Ancient Turk's Family Want Him to Return Home.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ISTANBUL, July 31.—Zaro Agha, Turkey's oldest living citizen, has had his "salary" from the municipality canceled, due to a clause in the city laws causing a cessation of pay after two weeks' absence.

Zaro's job, ever since he ceased to be a porter for the Prefecture, has been to draw a pension for honoring the city with his presence. This Summer he went to New York to parade his 156 years before a curious public. Now his family are indignant to learn that he was not invited to the United States by the enemies of alcohol, but in order to appear in a Coney Island side show. So they want him to come home.

FOR MORE SOVIET DOCTORS.

Provision Being Made to Admit 11,000 Medical Students This Year.

In an effort to overcome the shortage of physicians in the Soviet Unions, which seriously handicaps the Commissariat of Health in its grandiose plans for sanitation and medical treatment, the Soviet authorities, upon recommendation of the All-Russian Medical Congress, held recently in Moscow, are to open new medical schools in Ivanovo-Vosnessensk, Samara and Khabarovsky this Fall and in Alma Ata, Simferopol and Sverdlovsk at the beginning of the college year of 1931-32, according to a report found in the Moskauer Rundschau.

It has also been decided to begin the admission of students semi-annually next year and to establish evening courses.

Oregon Independents' Revolt Against Hawley Gains Strength

Representative's Re-election, With That of Senator McNary, Believed Endangered—Portland Man Named For the Governorship.

By WALLACE S. WHARTON.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 13.—Nomination of Julius L. Meier, prominent Portland merchant, as independent candidate for Governor, opposing Phil Metschan, Republican, and E. F. Bailey, Democrat, was an event that clearly indicated the serious intent of the independents to carry their flag of political revolt to the last ditch.

The group rallying around Meier in a monster open meeting in Portland was composed of those who nominated the late George W. Joseph on the Republican ticket in May, and who refused to accept the mandate of the machine-controlled State Central Committee in placing the Republican mantle on Metschan, one of the most regular of regulars.

Citizens of the State are looking forward to a three-ring circus from now until the November election, and it is likely to be a show in which the regular Republican candidates will find little of an amusing nature. The assault against the organized machine is gaining in strength and may make itself felt in the national phase of the election.

Ballot Was Secret.

Mr. Joseph was nominated by the ultra-progressive elements in a primary race with two outstanding candidates for the nomination. Upon the death of the candidate the State Central Committee was called upon to make the nomination anew. It gave scant heed to the mandate of the electors and nominated Metschan, former chairman of the State Central Committee, on the fourteenth ballot, cast in secret, while Meier, close personal friend of Joseph's, was a dangerous runner-up.

Meier has pledged himself to support the platform adopted by his friend, which centres about development of the State's hydroelectric resources and abolition of the State Public Service Commission. He was nominated by one of the largest and most enthusiastic public gatherings held in the State in recent years.

Since nomination Meier seems to have gained strength in all parts of the State, and certainly in Multnomah County. The secret voting of the State Central Committee aroused antagonism and made friends for Meier who might otherwise have remained in the regular ranks.

Revolt Believed Spreading.

The political revolt is spreading in other phases of the campaign, and it is generally conceded that Senator Charles L. McNary, Representative Willis C. Hawley and Representative Franklin F. Korell will not have an easy time of it. Major Gen. Charles H. Martin (retired), Democratic candidate in the Third District against Korell, is waging a vigorous campaign and gaining strength rapidly.

In the First District Mr. Hawley is facing a constituency that is not at all pleased with his conduct as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and William A. Delzell, a vigorous Democratic candidate. It is believed that if the Democratic Congressional Committee would concentrate on this district the defeat of Hawley could be accomplished. He has ruled supreme for twenty-three years.

Although much can happen between now and November, it appears that dissatisfaction with the State political control and the Hoover Administration will result in election of Meier as Governor and possible defeat of three of Oregon's delegates in Congress.

DROUGHT SEEN AS AID TO NORTHWEST TRADE

Crop Damage in Middle West Is Expected to Bring Higher Prices to Wheat Growers.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 13.—General improvement of business conditions throughout the Pacific Northwest is anticipated as a result of the drought and crop damage in the Middle West. Oregon crops are in good shape and above the average yield. The wheat crop for Oregon, Washington and Idaho is estimated at 94,000,000 bushels, with a carryover from last year of 20,000,000 bushels. Increased prices resulting from the shortage in the Middle West will place the Northwestern farmer in a better condition than he has been for the past two years.

Incidentally, the farmer is not on friendly terms with the national administration because of a recent visit of Alexander Legge, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, who told the farmers they could not expect any aid from the government and that prices might go down.

Treatment of lumber interests has also been a sore point. Refusal of the Treasury Department to bar Russian lumber and wood pulp, competing against products of the Pacific Northwest, has not made the trade any more friendly toward the administration and its stand on lumber in the new tariff.

Factors to correct the general lumber problem are now at work and it is believed that the industry will be on a sound basis before another two-year period has elapsed. Lumber is being sold for less than the cost of production and shipped to the East Coast on ships at less than the cost of carrying, with the result that surplus stocks are being diminished, slowly, but with an increasing movement, during the last few weeks.

ACADIAN DESCENDANTS TO MEET IN NOVA SCOTIA

They Will Observe 175th Anniversary of Expulsion on Aug. 20.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

OTTAWA, Aug. 13.—It is 175 years since 6,000 Acadians were expelled from Nova Scotia by the British, to be scattered throughout British settlements in North America, and on Aug. 20 the anniversary of this historic dispersion will be observed at Evangeline Memorial Park at Grand Pré, N. S. Descendants of the 6,000 now number hundreds of thousands, and they have kept alive the heroic traditions of their race and the legends of tragedy and evolution inherited from the days when Acadian familiies were sundered and lovers parted.

More than 1,000 representative Acadians from Louisiana, the New England States, New Brunswick and Quebec are expected to join their Nova Scotian compatriots in the Grand Pré exercises. The Governments of Great Britain, France and Canada will be represented, as well as the States of Massachusetts and Louisiana and several provinces of the Dominion. There will be patriotic and historical addresses after pontifical high mass is celebrated, and much tracing of family trees and comparing of notes.

The following day, Acadians from the United States will be tendered an official reception at Halifax by the Government of Nova Scotia.

In the passing of the years the cause of the Acadian expulsion has been buried in the pages of history and the present generation has no bitterness but only a vast pride as it considers the record. Acadians hold and have held high positions in this country and in the United States and through a century and three-quarters have given abundant evidence of high character and ability.

Township Fears Loss of Its Earthly Support As Coal Men Talk About Taking Mine Pillars

By WILLIAM T. MARTIN.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 13.—Next to the drought the principal topic of discussion here has been what was construed as a threat to the foundation of Pittsburgh's fastest growing suburb, Mount Lebanon Township.

Mount Lebanon, which in ten years has jumped in population from 2,258 to 13,476, is built over a worked-out coal mine, owned by the Pittsburgh Coal Company. Recently some 100 residents of the township received from the company an offer to sell them the pillars under their property, with the implied alternative that if they did not buy, the coal would be pulled out. The first reaction was a massed public attack, led by the newspapers, on the coal company. The least that was said against it was that it was literally trying to shake down the property owners for its pound of flesh, the mining rights having been waived in the deeds to the surface.

By now the storm has modified somewhat. As the mine is 300 feet beneath the surface, experts have told the surface property owners that they do not need to be much afraid; the possible subsidence could do their buildings little damage. Other experts also have indicated that the price asked by the company was far too high. Under all the circumstances it is felt that some amicable settlement will be reached eventually.

But the question raised is of far-reaching importance to Western Pennsylvania, the bituminous coal section of the State. A number of towns are not so far above the coal as Mount Lebanon. Damage to houses by cave-ins are not infrequent, and sections of land suggest old battlefields.

It is recognized, of course, that the buyers of the coal have their legal rights, but even so, it is argued that the State, through its police powers and local bodies through the zoning laws may act to prevent any undue menace to the surface owners. Much is heard of "the higher law"—of adjustment upon the basis of good-will.

In the anthracite district a State commission cooperated in dealing with the cave-in problem of Scranton. Already pledges have been given by State representatives that such cases as that of Mount Lebanon in the bituminous fields will be laid before the next Legislature.

HEFLIN STILL HAS HOPE OF WINNING

Alabama Primary Vote Indicates Many Democrats Who Bolted in 1928 Have Not Returned.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 13.—As late returns from Tuesday's Democratic primary filter in, it becomes obvious that the hopes of Senator Tom Heflin for re-election next November have been bloodied but by no means bowed.

The combined vote for John H. Bankhead, who won the Democratic Senatorial nomination, and for Frederick I. Thompson, his only opponent in the primary, will not be more than 125,000. Since the normal Democratic strength in Alabama is about 200,000, this indicates that a substantial portion of those who bolted the party with Senator Heflin in 1928 have failed to return.

Even though the smaller vote is undoubtedly due in some part to the lesser public interest this year's campaign has aroused in comparison with the Presidential campaign, the Heflin leaders are likely to take it as easily encouraging enough to warrant them in proceeding with their "Jeffersonian party" primaries in a number of counties, and with the State-wide convention planned for Sept. 1.

Only One Real Contest.

However, it would seem that the only real contest next November will centre on the Senatorship. Hugh Locke, who is running for Governor on the Heflin party ticket, can find considerably less satisfaction in the Democratic primary vote than Senator Heflin. The Gubernatorial vote was about 20 per cent larger than the Senatorial one, and suggests that Mr. Heflin alone is to be the recipient of whatever substantial defalcations from the party fold occur next November.

Even with the comparatively small Senatorial vote cast in Tuesday's primary, the mathematics of the situation seem against a Heflin victory at the general election. In the Presidential campaign of 1928 Hoover pulled 120,000 votes and Smith 127,000. Of the Hoover votes 75,000 came from Democratic bolters and the remainder from regular Republicans.

If the combined bolter and Republican vote could not carry the State in 1928, it is hardly likely that the bolter vote alone, even if it remains intact, can win for Mr. Heflin. Then, too, many Republicans are expected to neglect their own nominee next November in order to make their vote count by giving it to Bankhead against Heflin.

On the other hand, there may be a number of Democrats who voted in Tuesday's primary who will be won over or back to the Heflin ranks by November. Attorney General McCall's decision that there is no "legal or moral obligation under the law" to vote in the general election as in the primary undoubtedly will contribute to this tendency.

DEMOCRATS CHEERED BY LOW NORRIS VOTE

35,000 Margin Fell Far Short of Figure Senator's Managers Had Hoped For.

EVEN CHANCE EXPECTED

Hitchcock's Supporters Are Heartened by His Party's Strong Showing in Quiet Campaign.

By ROLAND M. JONES.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

OMAHA, Aug. 13.—George W. Norris feels that he has justified his insurgency, which reached the climax in his bolting his party's candidate for President, by capturing for the fourth time the Nebraska Republican nomination for United States Senator.

While he was doing it, Nebraska Democrats were rebuking the bolter by nominating former Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock by a four-to-one vote over his feminine opponent, Dr. Jennie M. Callfas, who deserted the party two years ago to become a "Hoover Democrat."

Senator Norris put forth the most strenuous campaign fight he has ever been called upon to wage. While he won by a safe margin over his chief competitor, State Treasurer Stebbins, it was by a margin much less than was expected by his manager, who had talked of a two-to-one or even three-to-one victory. It will really amount to less than 35,000 in a total of approximately 200,000 votes.

Democratic Aid Believed Little.

How many of these were Democrats who went into the Republican primary to pay a debt of gratitude to Mr. Norris for having "gone Democratic" in 1928 there is no way of telling. There were undoubtedly some of that class, but there is no evidence that the number was large.

As a matter of fact that Democratic primary, with no beating of tom toms, no spirited contests to arouse either bitterness or enthusiasm, brought out a vote equal to or a little larger than that of two years ago.

While the Republican campaign was at fever heat Mr. Hitchcock confined his campaign to just two statements, one at the time he accepted the filing in his behalf, and one just before the primary, urging Democrats to stay in their primary and Republicans in theirs as a matter of political honesty.

In view of these things Democrats are emboldened to believe they can enter the forthcoming campaign on fairly even terms against the Republican ticket, notwithstanding the great personal popularity of Mr. Norris.

Bolt Created New Factor.

Hitherto Senator Norris and the regulars of his party have managed to form an offensive and defensive alliance in spite of their differences, the latter being glad to accept the votes which the Senator could bring to the whole ticket. But Senator Norris had never at those times been an open and avowed bolter. Hatchet burying will be much more difficult this year, especially since there is a large element in the party which will not feel at all badly if it loses the Governorship and the Attorney Generalship to boot.

It was previously observed in this correspondence that both Mr. Norris and Mr. Hitchcock believed economic issues to be above moral issues and that the campaign of each was predicated on hostility to the Hoover Administration. That is true, but it is not the whole truth. There is an issue between them which will doubtless appear in the campaign. Mr. Hitchcock believes that organization is necessary for the accomplishment of results. Mr. Norris plays a lone hand. The issue will be whether tariff reduction can be accomplished and economic justice done the farmer better by Democratic organization or sniping by insurgent guerrillas wearing a Republican label.

BULGARIA TO HALT MACEDONIAN TERROR

"SERBIZATION" THE ISSUE

Yugoslavia's Efforts to Nationalize Partitioned Territory Alleged Cause of Imro Violence.

By WALTER LITTLEFIELD.

Under pressure from Great Britain, France and Italy the Liapcheff Government of Bulgaria, as reorganized last May, has issued a warrant for the arrest of Ivan Michailoff, the head of the Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Organization, charging him with instigating the murder of Vassil Poundeff. It has also ordered an investigation into the murder of General Alexander Protogueroff, who was fatally wounded in July, 1928. This decisive action of the government is also due to the exertions of one of its members, former Premier Zankoff, who holds the portfolio of education, and whose coup d'état in the Spring of 1923 was materially aided by General Protogueroff. The warrant was issued by publication on July 18 and the investigation ordered on Aug. 11.

This illegal Macedonian organization, familiarly known as the Imro, has for ten years used revolvers and bombs to prevent Yugoslavia from Serbizing Macedonia, and has incidentally helped to keep Bulgaria from enjoying the good-will of her neighbors and the League of Nations, on account of its alleged popular support of the Imro and the official neutrality toward it.

Although Michailoff had freely admitted his responsibility for the "execution" of General Protogueroff in July, 1928, and for similar affairs, the warrant specifically charges him with having ordered the "liquidation" of Vassil Poundeff on March 4. Poundeff edited Vardar, which had been advising a less terroristic attitude on the part of Michailoff. Two men shot Poundeff down in the streets of Sofia and announced when arrested that they had acted under Michailoff's orders.

The Editor's Murder.

Still, the attitude of Vardar, however annoying to Michailoff, may not have been the whole reason for Poundeff's demise. On Jan. 24 Poundeff was said to have been recognized as the director of three gunmen who attempted to shoot Jordan Chkatroff, the delegate of the Macedonian organizations of the United States and Canada, as he was leaving the Union News Telegraph Agency in Sofia. Chkatroff complained to the police. Then Michailoff said that unless the police acted he would. The police did not act. The death of Poundeff followed; hence the warrant against Michailoff for presumably ordering it.

This supplementary incident is held to show how Michailoff, while working to free Macedonia from Yugoslavia, disposes of those in the organization who do not see eye-to-eye with him, as well as the helplessness of the Bulgarian authorities to circumvent him. In these circumstances the serving of the warrant will be watched with great interest all over the world—particularly so as the Bulgarians, by a large majority, are considered Macedonian sympathizers.

Freedom Long a Goal.

From the days of the Macedonian monk Paissi Hilendarski, in 1762, almost down to the World War, every European congress which dealt with the Balkans promised the Macedonians their freedom or union with Bulgaria, provided they would prevent the Turk from further European trespassing. With their commitajis, or committeemen, the Macedonians kept their side of the bargain pretty well. But the treaty of Bucharest in 1913 failed to deal with the other side, and the peace treaties of Paris in 1919 repudiated the Macedonians' right of nationality and carved up their territory. The major part of it, which had only a few hundred Serbs, went to Yugoslavia; a smaller part, with about 300,000 Greeks, went to Greece, and the smallest part went to Bulgaria, although there were 1,136,000 Bulgarians all over Macedonia.

The treaties which authorized this partition contained clauses as to how the minorities in each part were to be treated. As Bulgaria had only Bulgarians to deal with, her task was easy; besides, 300,000 Bulgarians from the other parts fled to her territory when Greece began to Hellenize her part and Yugoslavia to Serbize hers. Finally, the Greeks refrained from nationalization through lack of material, but the Yugoslavs continued for the opposite reason. There were 350,000 Bulgarians in Serb-Macedonia who were told to change their language, religion and names or suffer the consequences.

The Imro Organizes.

The population protested and revived the old commitajis when their protests, not only to Belgrade but also to Geneva, went unanswered, even unacknowledged. And thus the Imro was organized by Todor Alexandroff and General Protogueroff and sought to drive the Serbs from Macedonia by force of arms.

For a time the Imro, as the Stambulisky government did at Sofia, began to imagine that salvation might come from Moscow. A revolution convinced Stambulisky of his error in 1923, when Zankoff became Premier, and Alexandroff repudiated him, only to be slain for so doing at the alleged direction of Protogueroff a year later. Protogueroff himself then repudiated Moscow and became a pacifist. This led to a definite split in the Imro.

Alexandroff's death brought Michailoff, a youth of 26, to the head of the autonomist faction of the Imro, while Protogueroff led the federalist faction. The federalists gradually came to believe that all requisite freedom could be obtained in Macedonia by peaceful means and even made overtures to the Sofia Government to that effect. Protogueroff's "execution" followed and Michailoff with his "terror" prevailed in the organization. His answer to his critics was: "Other people, seeking freedom, have employed the pistol and the bomb, when necessary. Why should not we?"

As a matter of historical record: on three occasions Bulgaria has offered to surrender to the autonomists her part of Macedonia if Yugoslavia and Greece would act in like manner. The American delegation to the Paris peace conference, supported by the Japanese and Italian delegations, formally proposed the autonomy of Macedonia, but the French delegation, at the instigation of the Serbian, resolutely opposed it, and a compromise was effected through the minority clauses in the St. Germain Treaty.

SOUGHT AS IMRO HEAD.

Peace Efforts Renewed.

Finally, the chief organ of the Macedonian organizations, La Macédoine, published in Geneva, advised legal methods. The Sofia Government took courage and began to negotiate with Yugoslavia, after admitting that in certain cases the Macedonians, after their work in Serb-Macedonia, had returned to Bulgarian territory. A treaty calculated to snuff out the Imro by mutual attention resulted. It was at once ratified by Yugoslavia but not by Bulgaria.

But the slogan of "legality of action" was in the air, and three Bulgar Macedonians, Anastassoff, Chaleff and Ilieff, made their way to Geneva. On Jan. 14 they presented a petition to Sir Eric Drummond, Secretary General of the League. Later a letter of explanation was sent to the Yugoslav Foreign Minister. The petition suggested that the League apply the minority clauses in the treaties and establish a commission to see that they were executed. Annexes tabulated the atrocities of which Yugoslavia was alleged to be guilty.

The League undoubtedly has the authority to do the things requested. Its power is another matter. Sir Eric turned the petition and its documents over to the Committee of Three, headed by M. Zalesky, who declined to present them to the Council for action on the ground that Yugoslavia had affirmed there were no longer any Bulgarians in Serb-Macedonia!

After this setback Michailoff returned to his old methods and the Liaptcheff Government, undismayed, issued the warrant for his arrest and ordered the investigation.

RESERVOIRS URGED FOR FLOOD CONTROL

Pittsburgh Board Sees 'Benefit in Plan Discouraged by Federal Engineers.

By WILLIAM T. MARTIN.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 13.—The drought is emphasizing the "other angle" of the proposal of storage reservoirs on the headwaters of rivers as a means of controlling floods. As the Pittsburgh Flood Commission was a pioneer in developing the sentiment that caused Congress to include in the 1928 flood act provision for investigation of the reservoir feature it naturally is active now in stressing the twofold character of the proposal—the conservation of water as well as restraint of its destructive forces. The idea is to turn into a blessing what otherwise might cause a disaster. Reference is made to the great advantage there would now be to river navigation, hampered by low stages, if the water that went to waste last Winter and in the Spring had been caught and saved for the dry period.

No one, of course, is attempting to obscure that the fundamental purpose of the reservoirs would be flood prevention. Still, in a period of drought a stored supply of water could scarcely be considered merely as an incidental benefit. In addition to the aid to navigation and possible supplying of water to towns, there also would be the power development side.

The plan of the commission calls for seventeen reservoirs on the headwaters of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers that unite at Pittsburgh to form the Ohio. Recently it found a practical illustration of its idea of service in dry weather. The West Penn Power Company delivered into the Monongahela water from its Lynn Haven reservoir on the Cheat River. Government engineers credited this with being a material aid to navigation.

It will have to be admitted, however, that the United States engineers who have gone into the subject, designing a system containing eleven reservoirs in the same district, were not so enthusiastic at the time. They estimated the cost of the system at $95,000,000 and its benefits at only $60,000,000. The Pittsburgh commission immediately protested, declaring that an adequate system can be produced for $58,000,000 and that its benefits would go far beyond those indicated by the government engineers.

Along with the ordinary features of flood damage, it says that such things as the effect of the menace as a deterrent to development also must be considered. It is added that while the Ohio is supposed to have a nine-foot stage from Pittsburgh to Cairo, it was short of the standard by about a foot even before the drought became pronounced. Silt had been carried in by the Spring floods, requiring resort to expensive dredging. The reservoirs, it is contended by their proponents, would obviate the necessity of dredging and vastly improve the channel for navigation purposes.

As the commission has been studying and advocating the reservoir system for twenty years, its plan calling for the carrying out of the project by the nation, the State and local interests, it can be depended upon to keep up its effort as long as necessary.

CALIFORNIA BATTLE IS ANYBODY'S FIGHT

Three Candidates Apparently Have Equal Chances in Republican Primary.

WET-DRY ISSUE MAY RULE

Question Has Been Submerged in Campaign, but Many Favor Expression of Sentiment.

By FREDERICK F. FORBES.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—The California primary campaign, with the Republican nomination for Governor as the chief feature, is drawing toward its closing week with the peculiar characteristic that a submerged issue may prove to have been the decisive factor.

If Mayor James Rolph should win the nomination or if he should draw enough votes from Governor Young to throw the prize to Buron Fitts of Los Angeles, it will be regarded largely as a protest against prohibition, and yet Mr. Fitts is as dry as Governor Young, while Mayor Rolph has carefully refrained from mentioning the wet and dry issue in his picturesque campaigning.

The Mayor's entrance into the field was hailed by thousands of voters as their chance to register in the primaries the sentiments they expressed last Spring when California showed overwhelmingly wet in the Literary Digest poll.

Anti-Saloon League for Young.

The Anti-Saloon League looked on the Rolph candidacy as a challenge and forced the issue by abandoning Mr. Fitts, who is the darling of the W. C. T. U. and other dry organizations in Southern California. But the anti-saloon politicians regarded the candidacy of the "liberal" Mayor as a menace and called on all good drys to concentrate on the renomination of Governor Young. Some militant drys in Northern California and many organizations in the South either covertly or openly repudiated the Anti-Saloon League action and stuck to Mr. Fitts.

With the opposition thus split, it seemed to be the part of good politics for the Mayor to rally the wet sentiment. It is known that his chief adviser urged him, after the New Jersey primaries, to declare for the Morrow plan. But the suave Mayor is strangely obstinate. Perhaps he figured that he has the wets anyhow. The moistest thing he has said is itself a declaration of personal dryness to the effect that he "has been on the water wagon for two years." In the meantime the mass of his following insist on regarding him at least as damp, although he has some prominent out-and-out drys working for him.

Johnson Support a Factor.

While this submerged issue gives promise of being a deciding factor, the surface campaign has raged around two issues—the record of the Young administration and the association of Senator Hiram Johnson's forces with the Young organization. The burden of the attack has been borne by the Fitts forces. On the score of the Governor's record, they have had hard sledding. There is a pretty widespread feeling that Mr. Young has been a notably diligent and efficient administrator. While his appointments have been partisan, they mainly made for efficiency in service. On his administrative record, the Governor has gained rather than lost strength. A notable instance is seen in The San Francisco Chronicle's declaration for him a week ago, although The Chronicle four years ago was one of the two leading anti-Young newspapers of the State.

The Fitts attack on the Johnson color of the Young organization finds easier breaches in the Governor's defenses. The Senator's tantrums over the naval treaty embittered a very substantial element of the party here and it is unfortunately true that too many of the men in strategic positions in the Young organization "are for Johnson first and Young second." It would have been very comforting to thousands of voters inclined toward him on other matters if the Governor had made some specific declaration in favor of those policies on which Senator Johnson has been opposing President Hoover.

Fitts Has Good Backing.

Mr. Fitts has been working on this line of attack for all it is worth. During the heated days toward the close of Congress, the San Francisco County Republican Committee passed a sweeping resolution in support of the President. The committee is under the control of former Sheriff Finn, who four years ago supported Mr. Young but this year is behind the Fitts candidacy. Mr. Fitts has rallied the old organization of former Governor Richardson and has added the defections from the Young camp, inevitable over questions of policy, but mainly of patronage. He has, besides, the tremendous force of Southern California's local pride.

Governor Young has the appeal of a successful first term in the office and the backing of the Anti-Saloon League. The Mooney-Billings case has been annoying and may lose him the votes of some persons who suspect that he will yield to his friends who are leading the campaign for pardon for the convicted dynamiters, while others are resentful because he did not free the prisoners long ago. But as the case will still be pending on primary day, the effect on the vote will probably not be appreciable. To the Fitts attempt to rally Hoover sentiment, the Young forces reply that the Governor is a loyal Hoover man, whatever Senator Johnson may be.

In the meantime, Mayor Rolph flies from county to county, milks cows, kisses babies, tells funny stories on himself, draws amazing crowds, is the most talked-of candidate, and has whatever encouragement there is in seeing his buttons and stickers fill the landscape and shine in hotel lobbies, barber shops, gas stations, cigar stands and on windshields. If these straws could be taken as indicative, the odds would be strong on the Mayor. But the odds are not that way. The Mayor is riding on personal popularity and anti-prohibition sentiment. The Governor represents the ins and has a strong State-wide organization. Mr. Fitts speaks for the outs, has a good organization and is the only candidate from Southern California, which now has the majority of the vote.

The fight is anybody's until the ballots are counted.

TEXAS G. O. P. LEADER OUT FOR MR. HOOVER

Creager Spikes Rumor That He Will Support Ambassador Morrow in 1932.

By IRVIN S. TAUBKIN.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

DALLAS, Aug. 13.—The politician figures as the old crow flies. Which puts 1932 just around the corner and explains to some extent the speculation among the politically wise the other day when R. B. Creager, Republican National Committeeman, accepted an invitation of Ambassador Morrow and visited at his home near Mexico City. It was at once obvious to the wiseacres that Mr. Creager would succeed Mr. Morrow in Mexico and that Mr. Morrow was bargaining for the Texas delegation's support for the Presidential nomination in 1932.

Mr. Creager is much too astute a politician to commit himself to anything or anybody unless he is reasonably sure that he is right. It is conceded, of course, such is his power among Texas Republicans, that as he votes, so votes the Texas delegation.

This was his telegraphic reply to the Morrow rumor: "President Hoover's record and his conduct of governmental affairs under trying circumstances have been so admirable his renomination and re-election, if he desires it, I regard as a foregone conclusion."

Mr. Creager will be remembered as the first National Committeeman to declare himself for Herbert Hoover's nomination. It has been a profitable commitment, for at no other administration's hands has the Texas member of the national committee fared so well. Mr. Hoover is understood to have given Mr. Creager all he has asked, and Mr. Creager knows enough not to ask too much.

Party Feels Responsibility.

Probably to no other administration has the Texas organization felt so close, and for no other has it felt such personal responsibility. For no matter how Texas Democrats deplore the State's misstep in 1928, no matter how hard they kick the unfaithful, no matter with what oaths they swear that such betrayal of Democratic allegiance will never occur again, Texas Republicans insist that Texas voted for Herbert Hoover, not against Al Smith and in 1932, they predict, the State will repeat. The responsibility goes even further, for they recall that at the Kansas City convention there were some who claimed that the California and Texas delegations swung the nomination to Hoover.

At recent Republican County conventions throughout the State it was routine to adopt resolutions praising without stint the Hoover administration for what it has done for Texas and in the very next breath to endorse the Creager administration of party affairs. This answers Creager's critics who insist that he has lost considerable strength recently. His recent successes have not been attained without some fighting, and once the breath of personal scandal created a tense situation. There are some who privately say they would welcome a change of committeemen, but even these wonder how it can be accomplished so long as Mr. Creager has such undisputed control over the delegates to the State and national conventions.

Refused Offer of Post.

So far as a promotion into diplomatic ranks is concerned, he says, "I have no desire to leave and no intention of leaving the State of Texas for Mexico or elsewhere." Once before he refused the Mexico City post when Mr. Coolidge offered it to him.

Since Congress adjourned there has been a gentle flood of administration defense let loose upon Texas, but all too little to stem either the damages of the drought and the government's crop estimates on cotton or the flood of anti-Hoover material used by the Democrats in their primary campaigns.

Most of the Hoover material has come from Captain John F. Lucey, an oil man who is close to the President. Since his return from a recent White House visit he has defended the administration in newspaper stories and radio talks.

Captain Lucey feels that Texas Republicans can do nothing else than support the President for renomination. He thinks it is still too early to talk about this, but when the proper times comes, he says, it would not be amiss for the Hoover boom for 1932 to come out of Texas. There has been some criticism that Captain Lucey should spring such a move for the President while Mr. Creager remains comparatively silent. But Captain Lucey is unofficially in politics, to use his words: "In it only so long as Herbert Hoover is."

Creager a Professional.

Mr. Creager, however, is officially in politics. By all the rules of the game, and from his own statements, he will play through, remaining a Hoover man for the customary two terms. But no politician—no wise one—remains on a sinking ship. So if the Hoover ship shows signs of foundering any time between now and 1932 it will not be surprising to see Mr. Creager do some fancy footwork.

In national party affairs the Democrats are beginning to sense a problem. It was provoked the other day by a brief story in a newspaper to the effect that Governor Dan Moody is being thought of for national committeeman to succeed Jed Adams. Mr. Adams has not been very aggressive in the position, and it is felt that he does not want it another time.

Fight by Love Looked For.

There is a strong suspicion, not without justification, that Tom Love is going to fight for it. This means the Smith fight all over again. Love, retiring as State Senator and badly defeated for the Gubernatorial nomination, thinks the wet-dry Tammany-anti-Tammany fight is still a good vehicle for personal victory such as he enjoyed in 1928 when he rode the anti-Smith band wagon here, one hand on the reins. Love has been National Committeeman, and for more than a year now there has been a rumor linking his name with William Gibbs McAdoo, Josephus Daniels and Senator Carter Glass in an international reorganization of the Democratic party to make it rural and dry without argument.

The hitch in this is that Claude Bowers's name also has been linked with it.

It is certain that Mr. Love would like to see Chairman Raskob ousted from the National Committee. The very name pains him. He seems not to have thoroughly digested the fact that Representative John Box, who served his district for many years in Congress and who in 1928 was most outspoken against Mr. Raskob, suffered a severe defeat for renomination this year at the hands of a young attorney. Martin Dies, it is true, bears the name of his father, who also served many years in Congress. The victory, however, was due to his personal strength and not to tradition.

California Finds Problems In Its Direct Legislation

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—The beauties of direct legislation were further illustrated to Californians when it became known that of the twenty-six propositions which will clutter up the ballot this Fall, one changes the method of taxing marine insurance companies, another fixes the tax rate on the Huntington Library. Still another defines the number of messengers the Legislature may have and fixes their pay. Another provides for the Sunday closing of barber shops, and still another changes the method of forming corporations.

Electricity Saves "Handwerker."

Electricity has come to the rescue of the smaller industrial establishments of Germany and is enabling the "Handwerk" (a sort of collective label for little independent manufacturers, none of whom employs more than ten workers and most of whom toil in the shop themselves) successfully to resist modern industry's tendency to eliminate small-scale producers. It is explained that when the small producers of Germany seemed doomed to be crushed by the development of costly steam power, along came the era of electricity, with comparatively cheap motors for almost every little shop, and saved the day for the "Handwerker."

Cyclone Breaks Every Window in Adrianople And Damages Famous Sultan Selim Mosque

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ISTANBUL, July 31.—Glaziers are at a premium in Adrianople since the cyclone of July 26 wrecked every window in the city. Some stores were unable to open because there was not a bit of glass left to protect their goods.

By the time necessary repairs are made Adrianople will have undergone a general overhauling. Leads were stripped from the prison roof, chimneys departed from the Town Hall and many wooden houses collapsed. Four minarets are gone from the Sultan Selim mosque, chef d'oeuvre of Turkish architecture and the finest example of the work of the famous architect Sinan. One minaret fell through the dome. The Bourmali mosque was similarly injured and its two minarets are gone.

Had the cyclone not occurred at an hour when people had gone home to dinner, loss of life might have been great. So far as known two children, killed by flying rock, were the only fatalities. Taxi drivers escaped by crawling under their cabs. The cyclone proper passed in twelve minutes, but a hail and rain storm that followed it lasted three hours, causing great damage to crops. The storm did not strike Istanbul.

Adrianople, once a large, thriving city, suffered greatly during the last wars. Because the through trains do not enter its limits, the population has decreased greatly. The only travelers who go there are those interested in viewing the Selim mosque, which will require $50,000 for adequate repairs. It is unlikely that much will be done to restore it.

NEW ENGLAND FINDS TRADE IS NOT SO BAD

But Business Men in That Section Have Adopted a Canny Spirit of Cautious Optimism.

By F. LAURISTON BULLARD.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—The one topic of universal interest in New England is the business situation. Every conversation bristles with interrogations about "the slump and how long will it last?" and "the upturn, and when will it arrive?" On the golf links and in the counting room, sunning on the beaches and "in conference" in offices in all the manufacturing centres, interchange of opinions on these matters is taking place. Politics with a Senator and a Governor to elect, to say nothing of a full quota of Congressmen and a complete corps of State officers, is far outranked in the popular mind by the various phases of the business outlook.

The prevailing notion held by a great many persons who have only a hunch to go on, is that "things are not so bad in New England as elsewhere in the country." This idea is entitled to highly respectable standing, however, because many men who qualify as expert students of business conditions, and who have far more than a hunch to go on, hold essentially the same view.

The best short summary of the New England spirit of today is contained in two words—"cautious optimism." There are plenty of disconcerting elements in the present situation, though. For instance, the consumption of raw cotton by our mills is very low. But, on the other hand, the woolen mills, which usually expect a seasonal decline of 11 per cent in the Summer, have been increasing their wool consumption quite substantially, and whereas for the first half of the year the diminution in the consumption of wool for the United States as a whole was nearly 24½ per cent, the decrease in New England was only 20½ per cent. The opening week of the present month has sustained this hopeful trend.

Many Encouraging Factors.

There is a widespread feeling here that mass psychology has magnified popular apprehensions to a far greater extent than the facts justify. It is, of course, on the basis of patient and discriminating examination of the facts that the financiers and the economists support their optimism. Not a few of them hold that the encouraging factors have not had their proper weight in the balancing of the scales. Some of them declare that "we have hit bottom," some that a seasonal upturn in any event is due in a few weeks, with a greater upturn to follow by the end of the year, others that genuine recovery will start soon if only because stocks are nearing exhaustion and replacements will have to be made.

As to industry: Boots and shoes have fallen below the levels of the corresponding months of last year, but it must be borne in mind that the first half of 1929 was a boom period. When our decline is figured out, however, it seems that it has been less than the usual seasonal falling off. Production of women's novelty shoes is at high level. The shoe men also face the future with more confidence because the tariff uncertainties are out of the way and a duty of 20 per cent on imported shoes is in effect. There are indications that the shoe manufacturers will undertake a constructive campaign, based on good labor relations, expert research and adequate publicity.

Automobile sales are smaller than last year, but there was a five months' total larger than for the corresponding period in any year except 1929. The half year's sales of the department stores stand at almost the 1929 level. Building has been depressed, but was saved from a greater slump by several enterprises of magnitude, especially in the educational field.

OREGON VOTERS TO PASS ON NEW STATE SYSTEM

Proposed Amendment Provides for Cabinet Administration Under Governor's Rule.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PORTLAND, Ore., Aug. 13.—In November Oregon will vote on a constitutional amendment designed to completely change the machinery for the administration of State affairs. The amendment authorizes a cabinet form of government to replace the archaic board of control, which has made the Governors of the past mere figureheads.

The Board of Control, consisting of the Governor, Secretary of State and State Treasurer, all elective officers, passes on matters of policy in State administration. In the past it has been used effectively to defeat progressive policies of Governors at variance with the two other members and to shape policies for Governors who were weak.

Under the proposed cabinet form, departmental heads, including the Secretary of State and the State Treasurer, would be appointed by the Governor, making the Executive solely responsible for the administrative affairs.

BRIGHT HOPES HELD FOR THE COLLEGES

SCHOLARSHIP SEEN RISING

Less Emphasis Placed on Athletics, More on Study, Proper Housing and Higher Staff Salaries.

By CHARLES F. THWING.
President Emeritus of Western Reserve University.

What is right with the colleges? The first answer to this question is a higher appreciation of scholarship. The student is becoming a scholar, or is at least becoming scholarly. He interprets the increased valuation of scholarship in at least two forms: First, knowledge; second, human value. The first stands for a knowing of great subjects, a knowing which is thorough, well proportioned, accurate, comprehensive, analytical and synthetical. Such a knowing the student recognizes as of richest intellectual worth.

He is also coming to understand that scholarship has general human value. It represents power. It has a "rating" on the exchanges. It is a foundation of moral character. It opens doors which are closed to most. It creates broader companionships of the day and deeper fellowships of the year. It gives to young people some of the wisdom of years without the necessity of living these years themselves. As said a merchant employing college graduates, "these college men are just wonderful; they know so many things without ever having learned."

As a part of the increasing appreciation of scholarship may be linked an increasing appreciation (and discipline) of the power of thinking. Of course, learning as a basis for scholarship is good. But learning and scholarship as a basis of the power of thinking are far better. Students in increasing numbers are coming to be thinkers. They are learning to think cubically, to think in relationship, to think in world terms, to think cosmically. To think as well as to know is becoming a larger value in the college.

Sport Interest on Decline.

The increasing recognition of scholarship in its scholarly and human values and of the worth of thinking become more significant as they are contrasted with the diminishing worth attached to athletics. At once be it said that athletics, in its manifold forms of baseball, football, track and boating, has its place. But in the past the place has been altogether too assuming and commanding. It has taken a too big share of the student's time, strength, interest, loyalties. Roosevelt was right when he said early in his career, in an address delivered at the Harvard Union: "These groups—athletic, artistic, scientific, social—must inevitably exist. My plea is not for their abolition. My plea is that they shall be got into the right focus in the eyes of college men; that the relative importance of the different groups shall be understood when compared with the infinitely greater life of the college as a whole."

The right proportion is now being restored. College baseball declines. Boating, followed only by a few colleges, commands yet smaller participation. College track does not increase in interest. College football, despite the big stadiums, represents less loyalty on the campus; it is harder to get the fellows out to the rallies before the games or to arouse them to greater enthusiasms by the yells and contortions of the cheer leaders at the games.

The fact is that the interest in scholarship and thinking increases as college sports and games decline in interest. Graduating seniors taking part in the poll of college values on commencement day are coming in enlarging numbers to declare that they prefer the Phi Beta Kappa key to the athletic letter. They vote for the first scholar's A before the "gentleman's" C of the rank list. They do not, indeed, crave the title of the grind, as it was given formerly. But they do welcome the honor of being called the hardest-working man in their class, as a friend of mine was called in the last class at Yale.

Dormitory Improvements.

A second answer that can be given to the question of what is right with the colleges is the better care taken with the living conditions of students. These conditions assume at least three normal forms: First, dormitories; second, fraternity houses; third, private boarding homes. In the historic universities the dormitories or halls and the fraternity houses are the more common. The typical college dormitory has the three advantages of independence, seclusion and possession. These the students should and do prize.

But the dormitory system, viewed historically, as it can be for almost 300 years in America and twice 300 years in English colleges, is subject to most serious evils. Its independence gravitates easily into personal carelessness and slovenliness. Its seclusion is broken by closeness of personal association of classmates living in neighboring rooms. The sense of possession united with independence and seclusion is liable to create a kind of selfishness, or at least selfwardness, which easily comes to dominate college youth. The dormitory, moreover, in case of sickness, breeds hardships and often disasters thoroughly bad for the immediate time and boding worse ills for permanent health.

This condition is in the way of becoming cured and removed. Harvard and Yale lead in this long-delayed and sorely needed reformation. The gift of many millions by a practical philosopher, Edward S. Harkness of New York, is giving wisdom, force, efficiency, creation, to this academic revolution. In the beginning of the year 1930-31 Harvard will open its first "student houses." They will have the merits without the limitations and evils of the historic dormitories. They will have independence and seclusion for the individual student without creating the temptation of personal carelessness. For in each home will live a professor with his family, who is called the "master," as head and heart. About him will be gathered a number of proper official associates.

A Friendly Arrangement.

The older and the younger will thus live together in an association which will mean guidance without interference, inspiration without grandfatherliness, counseling without commandingness, care in sickness and companionship in loneliness. Moreover, the life that is thus lived and the work that is done in these houses at Harvard and the quadrangles at Yale, in the future years, will prove an example to scores of other colleges all the way from the university on the Penobscot to the university on the Golden Gate.

There is a third answer for the question of what is right with the colleges. It represents the element of fitting students, both men and women, for the general duty of serving the American community. This general duty of service belongs to all callings. Harvard itself and William and Mary were founded in the seventeenth century and Yale in the first year of the eighteenth, as theological training schools. The scope and purpose of the colleges have broadened with every passing decade. At present more than one-half of the graduates enter callings which are not professional, even though the definition of a profession has broadened to include teaching, editorship, engineering, architecture and other occupations.

To business and to business of all sorts and conditions graduates are devoting their trained powers. Colleges are opening business schools coordinate with schools of law and medicine. Constructive advantages are thus offered to graduates in choosing and following their future occupations.

But even richer advantages are vouchsafed to all as members of our comprehensive American community. For college education lifts the whole intellectual level. It gives breadth for narrowness, depth for shallowness, aspiration for weak ambitions, understanding for misconceptions, tolerance for impatience and a spirit of cooperation for impotent aloofness.

Teaching Salaries Rise.

So far, I have referred largely to the good conditions prevailing among students. These conditions are by far the most important, for the colleges exist for the students. I do wish, however, to add a glad and grateful interpretation concerning what is right with the colleges in respect to the teaching staffs. They are receiving salaries more adequate to increased expenses, and also more expressive of the recognition on the part of the community which a professorship merits. Salaries have within a decade in many colleges doubled. Full chairs in some universities are now commanding $10,000 or more as an annual stipend. Many instructors are beginning their academic service at $2,000 a year instead of $1,200 or $1,500 as formerly. The annual increase of $1,000 for the following years is quite normal.

The resulting larger budget is largely met by increased fees for tuition. These fees in some colleges have likewise increased by 100 per cent. If a college is generously endowed with scholarship and other aid funds, this increase in the cost of tuition is most fitting. For the poor-in-purse and rich-in-brain student is not to be kept out of the college, and the rich student, of course, is able to meet the extra cost. A larger stipend for all college teachers is right both for the immediate present and as a permanent academic policy. For it naturally attracts a higher type of scholarship and character to the teaching staff of the colleges. Money is not an end to the teacher, but it is a condition of the best work.

The Public's Recognition.

The last answer which I wish to give as to what is right with the colleges relates not to the content of rightness itself but more to the evidence that the people do believe that there is a right and, indeed, a superlative right pervading colleges. This evidence consists, first, in the number of students entering the colleges. This number approaches a million, one for every hundred souls, a proportion new to America and hitherto unknown in all history. Even if the number be not increased in the next few years, as it may not be, the present proportion is full of rich prophecies and gives proof of the belief of the people that all is well with the college.

Additional evidence lies in the vast appropriations made by Legislatures to the State universities. Annual appropriations of $10,000,000 are not unusual. Still further evidence is found in the enormous gifts and bequests made to the historic colleges, like Princeton, Columbia, Yale and Harvard. At its last commencement President Lowell announced that Harvard had received $11,000,000 in the year 1929-1930, and President Angell said that Yale had received no less than $23,000,000. The American people are coming to practice the belief that money given to the well-founded and well-conducted college is sure to bear richest blessings to the welfare of their country and of the whole world.

Purdue Freshmen of Today Excel Their Predecessors

Students entering college today, in spite of their vast increase in numbers, are better equipped than they were ten years ago, if an investigation recently made by Purdue University applies in general. Tests in mathematics, English and physics identical with those administered to freshmen in the engineering course a decade ago showed a marked superiority in this year's entering class.

Since in the meantime standards for high school teachers in Indiana, as elsewhere, have been raised and the per capita cost per pupil greatly increased, the conclusion seems justified, in the opinion of Dr. H. H. Remmers, that the better scholastic preparation is due to improved high school instruction.

A concurrent increase in the number of freshman failures in college would therefore point to a raising of university standards rather than a deterioration of ability in the entering class.

LABORATORY ON A MOUNTAIN

A biological laboratory located on the top of a mountain on the shores of a lake sixty feet deep has been established as a permanent centre for research and graduate study by the University of Virginia. The laboratory, at Mountain Lake, Va., is the first such mountain station east of the Mississippi.

In addition to research in cooperation with the Virginia Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, graduate courses in botany, zoology and biology are being given at the laboratory this Summer. Some of the courses are particularly adapted to the needs of high school teachers and others to those of medical students and public health workers. An abundance of flora and fauna and a mean Summer temperature of 68 degrees are said to make the location of the new mountain laboratory especially fortuitous.

HEALTH DRIVE TO AID SCHOOL BEGINNERS

PARENTS URGED TO HELP

Appeals Sent to Doctors as Well—Other Educational Trends of Modern America.

By EUNICE FULLER BARNARD.

Children with shining morning faces, reflecting genuine inner health, will occupy New York's first-grade classrooms this September, if the unique community drive for pre-school medical examinations now being directed by Dr. Shirley Wynne, Commissioner of Health, achieves success. For the first time physicians, parents, principals and public-spirited citizens have banded together in a volunteer campaign to give every child a fair physical start in the educational race. By radio talks and personal letters to the parents of the 42,000 children about to enter the schools for the first time, they are urging that every child have a thorough examination by the family doctor before school opens. Thus it is hoped to discover and correct the defects of eyesight, hearing and nutrition, and of faulty tonsils, heart and lungs that so often cause tragic failure and maladjustment in the classroom.

Such a widespread community demonstration of the faith in a sound body as a necessity for a sound mind has rarely been given before in New York City. The five county medical societies have joined with the commissioner in sending letters reminding every physician of the Sanitary Code requirement of a health certificate for every child entering school for the first time. The New York Principals' Association, with praiseworthy professional interest, is employing a special executive in this health campaign, while the United Parents' Association and the Tuberculosis and Health Associations of Brooklyn and of Queens are also aiding. Locally, the churches, department stores, chambers of commerce, Young Men and Young Women's Christian Associations, and Boy and Girl Scouts are taking active part.

The Movement Explained.

"This drive for the health of pre-school children," said Helen C. Manzer, executive of the committee of health of the New York Principals' Association, "is really the application to New York City of a campaign which is nation-wide in its scope. The office of education in Washington, cooperating with the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, instituted five years ago a prize contest of parent-teacher associations for the best method of securing the maximum number of children entering school free from remedial defects. This campaign has since extended to every State in the Union and has enlisted the support of the vast majority of community health authorities and parent-teacher associations.

"What may be accomplished in New York was foreshadowed in Queens last year when, after a concerted effort, 38 per cent of some 10,000 children presented health certificates issued by private physicians at registration for school. When the purpose of the pre-school health campaign—every child entering school with a health certificate—will have been attained, failures caused by physical defects will be reduced in number, and the child's entire education will function with increased efficiency."

Schools for Babies.

The lack in America of nursery schools for the children of the poor, whose need is greatest, was brought into sharp relief recently by an article in the Sunday TIMES describing anew the McMillan Nursery School, which provides all-day educational care at an annual per capita cost of $59 for 300 children in a London slum district.

It should not be forgotten, however, that, while we have nothing equal in size and self-support to the English school, we have a few experiments similar in aim. Of these, that conducted by the Nursery Training School of Boston for fifty workingmen's children at a charge of $1 a week is, perhaps, most nearly comparable. Its director, who has just received at the Harvard Graduate School of Education the first doctor's degree to be given in the pre-school field, took some of her first training at the McMillan School.

Even in benighted New York, in such philanthropic ventures as the nursery schools at Greenwich House Settlement and the Bowling Green Neighborhood Association, we have begun to touch the problem of the education of the 3-year-old child who has no place to grow and learn but the crowded tenement.

Personal Troubles Interfere.

Even the collegiate raccoon coat, symbol of nonchalance, sometimes hides a troubled breast, it is indicated in a series of tests of the attitudes and emotional difficulties of some 200 students of the University of Michigan. One of the most significant outcomes of this survey, according to its director, Robert C. Angell, Assistant Professor of Sociology, is the unearthing of the "wide amount of disorganization and uncertainty which occurs in the lives of the supposedly carefree college students" and the number whose academic records and future attitudes are being injured by failure to solve personal troubles. Almost 10 per cent of the students examined were in need of mental hygiene.

Not study itself, but such problems as those of sex and social adjustments and the necessity of working to earn a college education were factors that loomed large as causes of undergraduate difficulties. Many students felt that having to work their way through college by waiting on table or washing dishes handicapped them socially, although there was no evidence that this was true. Both men and women admitted that love affairs, or lack of them, often constituted a disturbing feature.

Religion, the study showed, seemed to be a decreasing influence in undergraduate life as compared with that of earlier generations. Only 37 per cent stated that religion was a deep interest. A general aspect of the tests, according to Dr. Angell, was that the least intelligent persons, especially among the men, were found in the group who expressed traditional viewpoints on social and economic problems and in their philosophies of life. The students of best academic rank showed more modern and liberal tendencies.

THE NEW YORK TIMES AS A TEXTBOOK

I have been using The New York Times in connection with an advanced course entitled Current Economic Problems, and find it admirably suited to my purpose. In fact, after a careful survey of most of the prominent newspapers of the country I can state unqualifiedly that I regard The New York Times as in a class by itself. For those who wish authoritative information about current events, whether economic, social, political or otherwise, I know of no better day-to-day medium. The headlines always accurately summarize the contents of the articles; the form and layout are so uniform with each issue that, once accustomed to the paper, it takes but a few minutes daily to keep well informed about current progress, and the articles themselves contain all the details necessary to provide an intelligent understanding along particular lines.

NEW REGIME TAKES UP TASK IN CANADA

Bennett Cabinet Assumes Reins of Government With Minimum of Criticism.

PREMIER'S BURDEN HEAVY

His Budget Is Expected to Be Sensational—Unemployment Problem Presses for Solution.

By V. M. KIPP.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

OTTAWA, Aug. 13.—Ten days after the general election the Canadian Ship of State changed crews and now a Conservative hand is at the helm. The transfer was made expeditiously, but with calm dignity and the best of feeling on both sides. Mackenzie King, Liberal Prime Minister for nine years, vacated his office and R. B. Bennett, Conservative leader, moved in and took possession.

Never was there a better illustration of the elasticity of the Canadian political system. The retiring ministry, in the ten days during which it lingered following defeat, acted with perfect propriety and in the utmost good taste. There were no recriminations, no attempt to dispute the people's will so indisputably expressed. No contracts were let, nor any appointments made. Then when the new administration was constituted, Mr. King become leader of his Majesty's Loyal Opposition, a post recognized by law and carrying a salary of $10,000, which is only $5,000 less than is paid the Prime Minister, retired to his Summer place in the Gatineau Hills to enjoy the relief from official duties denied him these many years.

Minister Faces Hard Task.

Mr. Bennett, who had taken for himself the tremendous burden of Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council, Secretary of State for External Affairs and Minister of Finance, plunged immediately into his task. Out of a Ministry largely untried he must make a cohesive and effective force before Parliament meets early in September to deal with unemployment. He has to prepare his case for the Imperial Economic Conference in London later in the same month and choose his associates. As Minister of Finance, pledged to Canadianize and stabilize the tariff, he must set in motion the departmental machinery of inquiry and research, because there is no doubt the Bennett budget, when it is presented to Parliament a few months hence, will prove a sensational document of vast and far-reaching political and economic importance.

The new Cabinet has had, on the whole, a good press. There is criticism, of course. Liberals declare that man for man it does not measure up to the old one. Conservatives, some of them, are critical of the placement of portfolios, and since many who felt themselves of Cabinet calibre had to be disappointed, there is some bitterness. But the attitude of the general public is one of fairness, a willingness to give the new administration a chance to accomplish the things which were promised from a thousand platforms.

Veterans and Untried Men.

Viewed from the sidelines, the Cabinet seems to present a fair admixture of able, experienced administrators and of young men with much in their favor but with their reputations to be made. There are veterans like the Prime Minister himself, Sir George Perley, C. P. Capan, Hugh Guthrie, Senator Gideon Robertson, P. P. Stevens and Dr. R. J. Manion. E. N. Rhodes, a former Speaker of the House of Commons, gave up the Premiership of Nova Scotia to take a post with Mr. Bennett. But also there are eleven men new to Cabinet rank, and six of these never before sat in Parliament. Sir George Perley, who is 73 years old, is the oldest member, and Maurice Dupré the youngest at 42.

Ontario has received seven portfolios, and there is some feeling that this is more than a fair share. Quebec received five, of which three have gone to the French-speaking majority in that Province. Each of the other seven Provinces gets one Minister. Presently, however, there is to be a readjustment, and it is probable that Quebec will get one or two more Ministers. Senator Robertson has assumed the portfolio of Labor temporarily. When the present unemployment emergency has passed he will make way for a Minister with a seat in the House of Commons. Similarly, Premier Bennett will give up the Finance post, though perhaps not until his first budget has been made law.

Possessed of an unchallengeable majority in the House, Mr. Bennett is in a position to have his way. Nevertheless, the opposition includes stalwart fighters and distinguished parliamentarians who were members of the late government and who may be expected to take very seriously their constitutional duties.

Interest in Unemployment Relief.

Apparently the September session will last not more than two or three weeks, and there is much speculation over the steps the government will initiate for the relief of unemployment. Public works launched after that time could make little progress before Winter sets in, and completion of a trans-Canada highway, mentioned as a possible source of work, would involve negotiations with several provincial governments as a necessary preliminary. It is probable that Mr. Bennett will announce a policy of cooperation with provincial and municipal governments for the relief of distress among the jobless in the coming Winter, and in his budget will aim at the construction of a tariff which will solve the employment problem through encouragement of Canadian industry and agriculture.

As a matter of fact, little has been heard of unemployment since the election, and there are many observers who declare business shows unmistakable signs of improvement. For the immediate future much depends upon the grain markets. If the Prairie Provinces move the new crop, and what remains in the storage elevators of last year's production, at figures which pay a fair profit, the railways and steamships and every associated enterprise in the country will feel the impetus. The next year may easily establish the ultimate fate of the Bennett Government, which has come into power on a wave of great expectations, and so it is a safe conclusion that it will bend its last bit of enterprise and ingenuity toward the rehabilitation and encouragement of business.

Men to Doff, Women to Kneel, As Funeral Corteges Pass By

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

DALLAS, Aug. 13.—If the efforts of Martin Weiss, president of a group of civic improvement leagues here, are successful, Emily Post will have a chapter to add to her book.

Mr. Weiss is urging the City Commission, his leagues, school and church leaders to bring about universal adoption here of the European custom of making a show of respect for a passing funeral cortège. He would have men doff their hats and pause for a moment of respectful silence, while women kneel.

FLORIDA CITRUS MEN SEE END OF TROUBLE

Coming Crop Expected to Bring $60,000,000 to Make Up Last Season's Loss.

By HARRIS G. SIMS.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

LAKELAND, Fla., Aug. 13.—Growers of oranges and grapefruit in Florida, whose Christmas shopping last year consisted for the most part of window shopping, are going to have their pocketbooks more comfortably lined when the next Yuletide arrives. They are getting ready for a harvest of 20,000,000 boxes, which will bring a gross total of $60,000,000, and State economists are pointing out that the ratio of 5 to 1 may safely be depended upon to boost business credits to $300,000,000.

With such an encouraging citrus season just ahead, Floridians are showing more optimism than has been in evidence since the collapse of the boom. It is optimism born of the soil instead of the offspring of real estate paper, and is certain to go a long way toward moving the economics of Florida in the direction of normalcy. Already the big yield just ahead is restoring confidence and increasing credit. Nearly $2,000,000 worth of construction on packing houses is under way, and the unemployment problem will be much less acute when the fruit is ripe enough to be picked. Many growers plan to begin harvesting early in October.

Not a Record Yield.

Although the forthcoming citrus crop will not be the largest ever produced by Florida, it will exceed last year's crop by 4,000,000 boxes and will fall short of the record yield by about 2,000,000 boxes. But the crop that is about ready for harvesting will come at a time when the circumstances are more favorable for best returns to the growers than was the case in 1928. Improved packing facilities are ready and, most significant of all, a better marketing system has been developed, which will be patronized by a liberal majority of the growers.

Slowly but surely growers have come to realize the importance of a more stabilized marketing system. They were reluctant to cast their lot with market representatives lest they lose advantages they enjoyed as individual dealers. Their present organization, apparently operating smoothly and to the satisfaction of the majority, is one of the chief factors behind the present optimism.

If all goes well between now and picking time, the grower will pocket $1.75 for each box of fruit picked from his grove. This will bring a total of approximately $35,000,000, from which the grower will have to subtract production costs of from 60 cents to $1 a box.

More Money for Advertising.

It would be treason to say that Florida has taken a tip from California so far as the advertising of native products is concerned. Nevertheless growers of citrus fruits, strawberries, celery and other truck products are spending more money on advertising. No budget is complete without an allowance for national advertising. This is particularly true among the citrus growers, now that they have perfected a harmonious organization.

Canning of grapefruit and grapefruit juice will be carried on extensively this season and in all probability will result in better prices over a longer period for the grower. This probability is based on the contention that canning companies will be competing for the raw product. If the competition becomes so keen as to interfere with operations, promoters of the canning industry probably will buy land and set out their own groves. It is already known that some companies are considering options.

GAS BOOM ENRICHES HIGH PLAINS FARMER

He Worries Not at All Over Poor Crops as Money From Rents and Royalties Pours In.

By ROY BUCKINGHAM.

Editorial Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES

DODGE CITY, Kan., Aug. 13.—In ordinary years a short wheat crop in the high plains country, Southwest Kansas and the Panhandle of Oklahoma, along with a drought would find the cattlemen, wheat raisers and broom corn growers near the freezing point in optimism. But this year, although this area harvested a third of a wheat crop and the broom corn quality will be poor because of the dry season, towns are growing, farmers are adding to their equipment, miles and miles of highway are being built and the prosperity impulse appears to be as strong as ever.

Hydrocarbons explain this anomaly. Out here in the short grass the discovery of gas and oil have wrought a transformation in business and established an unexpected resource in time of need. Stevens County alone this year will return to the farmers who have leased their acreages for oil exploration or gas production more than $500,000. Oil companies estimate that revenue from gas alone in ten or twelve of the high plains counties will go beyond the million mark, and most of this money goes into the bank accounts of farmers who own the land.

Pipe Lines Provide Work.

So it is not exaggeration to point out that the Southwest plains farmer and business man are not taking the drought and its incident depression as seriously as those who are outside the derrick-dotted areas. This gas impulse, however, would not have reached its maximum had not the gas-starving East turned to the Middle West for relief.

Right now criss-crossing the hard wheat and broom corn country and the picturesque terrain of Kit Carson and other plainsmen of the day when gathering buffalo hides and bones was the chief industry are three gigantic gas pipe lines. These projects with their employment of hundreds of farmers as well as the elastic labor class in the towns and cities have obliterated to a large degree any depression that could have leaped from the East to the Middle West. The gas line companies when possible employ local labor, and besides giving employment at a season which usually finds the farmer and the town man marking time until Spring work opens, the construction of these lines which will send natural gas to St. Paul, Omaha, Indiana and Chicago has given impetus to the development of the gas reservoir which is believed to underlie Texas County, Okla., and Stevens, Morton and Grant Counties in Kansas. More than one hundred locations have been made in Stevens County where the first gas well came in two years ago and thirty wells are under way.

Scores of farmers in this area are receiving more per acre for leases than they paid originally for the land. There are hundreds of farms in Stevens and Morton Counties which were purchased for $3 to $5 an acre, and $6 to $7 an acre is paid for yearly leases in addition to a royalty. The farmer is finding that the old sandy section that fifteen years ago could have blown away without being missed has a potential value that means a new automobile, a new house and a steady income.

"These huge gas projects have dramatized this new resource," is the explanation of A. K. Lee, who with A. J. Hardendorff pioneered the Stevens County gas field. "When these big utilities poured in their millions to build lines to transport the fuel under these prairies, the farmer took notice. He is gaining revenue now from two sources—agricultural and mineral. No wonder the drought makes no difference."

At present more than 2,000 men are at work on the construction of the primary pipe lines which will go to Eastern and Northeastern industrial centres. Five hundred more are at work on two lines which will carry gas from Kansas to Colorado towns. Another line will be built to serve Northwest Kansas and Western Nebraska. And the farmer chuckles because he is getting a cut both ways—pay for building the pipe line to carry the gas that brings up his income.

Has $1.49 Left of $77,000,000.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 13.—The public is familiar with the financial troubles of Josiah V. Thompson of Uniontown, former banker and coal baron. His latest plan of insolvency, however, has attracted attention anew to the completeness with which one of the great personal fortunes of the country has disappeared. Thompson now says he is worth exactly $1.49. Not many years ago his assets were appraised at $77,000,000.

FEAR OF DROUGHT POTENT

Pittsburgh Threat to Shut Off Water Brings Flood of Tax Payments.

Special Correspondence, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PITTSBURGH, Aug. 13.—Although Pittsburgh's water supply has always been adequate, the City Treasurer, Roy D. Schooley, recently threatened to make a drought for those delinquent in meeting municipal water rents. The delinquency totaled $1,300,000. If those able to pay do not start making up the arrears by a certain date, he warned, the service would be shut off. Those who pay their taxes stood by the Treasurer.

The results furnish an illustration that no municipality needs to suffer through delinquency in meeting its water charges. The "wrench gang" had scarcely got started before the back water taxes were flowing to the treasury in record volume.

SIR JOHN SIMON REPORTS ON INDIA

His Official Recommendations Urge Increased Self-Government

REPORT OF THE INDIAN STATUTORY COMMISSION, Sir John Simon, Chairman. Volume I, Survey; Volume II, Recommendations. London: H. M. Stationery Office. Each volume 3s.

By CHARLES JOHNSTON

JULY 4, 1776, is a significant date, as is July 14, 1789. The corresponding day for India is Aug. 20, 1917. But India's declaration was not made in India, nor by one or many natives of India. It was made in the British House of Commons by Edwin Samuel Montagu, M. P., at that time and for the next five years Secretary of State for India. The heart of that declaration is in the first paragraph:

> The policy of his Majesty's Government, with which the Government of India are in complete accord, is that of the increasing association of Indians in every branch of the administration and the gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to the progressive realization of responsible government in India as an integral part of the British Empire.

That is the point of departure of Sir John Simon's commission. The promise of the Secretary of State for India, whose function it is to interpret the will of the Parliament at Westminster to the Viceroy of India at New Delhi, or at Simla, was fulfilled by the Government of India act of 1919; this act contained a provision that, after a period of ten years had elapsed, and therefore in the year 1929, a commission should be appointed to inquire into the working of the act of 1919 and to report as to whether, and to what extent, "it is desirable to establish the principle of responsible government in British India, or to extend, modify or restrict the degree of responsible government" after the act had been in force for ten years. This commission was duly appointed with Sir John Simon as chairman, and, after two visits to India, it has submitted to his Majesty King George the two volumes of the report which are under review.

The first volume, entitled "Survey," gives an outline of the history and geography of India in dignified and diplomatic language. We may, perhaps, allow ourselves something more of freedom in conveying its substance.

A generation ago the Government of India was in fact a military despotism, whose strength lay, first, in the British Army of some 75,000 men, and, second, in the peaceful disposition and in the many divisions of the immense population of India. As a military despotism India had enjoyed, and was destined to enjoy, complete internal peace, a government of law, administered by something less than one thousand Indian civil servants, who, by universal testimony, were wholly incorruptible; India further enjoyed, or suffered, an entire absence of partisan politics, with the manifold activities which accompany partisan politics. When the government of Queen Victoria had taken the reins of power from the defunct East India Company after the Indian mutiny of 1857, her Majesty had proclaimed a determination to admit natives of India to the various branches of government, to the degree that they were qualified "by their education, ability and integrity." By 1861 a beginning was made to redeem this promise by surrounding the Viceroy and the Governors of provinces with councils, which included distinguished natives of India, who were free to give advice but had no effective votes. In 1892 these councils were expanded.

In 1909 John Morley, who had been made a Viscount, was Secretary of State for India. As a good Gladstonian Liberal Morley felt it to be his duty to extend to India the principle of democracy, which, in association with Lord Minto, then Viceroy, he proceeded to do by introducing a very limited election into the councils, though they still had only an advisory capacity.

Eight years later came the famous Montagu Declaration, and then, in 1919, the Government of India act, embodying what are called the "Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms." The act of 1919 created a Legislature for each of nine provinces, of which Madras, Bengal and Bombay are the oldest. It also created a Legislature for the whole of British India, which we may call a central parliament or a federal congress, with the reservation that it is not exactly either of these two institutions. Each of the nine provincial Legislatures, a single chamber assembly, contained certain outstanding members, who were called Ministers, and to whom portfolios were entrusted, giving them authority over the making of good roads, education, public health and similar subjects, but in no case over police, the courts of law, or land revenue. These "reserved" subjects continued to be administered in fact by the members of the Indian Civil Service, who had supervised the whole system of government and all its details since the days of the Indian Mutiny. The awkward division between these stalwart civilians and the new native Ministers was known by the awkward name "Dyarchy," which has had all the disadvantages inseparable from divided authority.

The Liberal aspirations of Morley and Montagu were not completely realized. Little clouds, such as presage the rains, gathered in the sky. The class of English-speaking native politicians, who had been voicing their ideas since about the year 1885, when the National Congress came into being, expressed themselves as, on the whole, entirely dissatisfied with the Dyarchy. The Montagu-Chelmsford reforms had not gone nearly far enough to please them. Further, the effort of the reform-makers to do justice at the same time to the Hindu majority and the Mohammedan minority had widened the rift between these two communities, each of which was afraid of being overreached by the other; and exactly in proportion as the reforms developed, hostility between the two communities increased, with the result that in India the word "communal" has come to refer to this fundamental religious cleavage. We need not include in this survey incidents springing from the agitation set in motion by Mohandas Gandhi, since the Simon report was avowedly completed before that complication arose.

So far the historic background, very superficially sketched. Now a word about geography. The fundamental division in India is between that part which is directly under British rule (primarily the nine provinces with their Governors and Legislatures, already outlined) and the Native States, which are autonomous countries under the suzerainty of the King-Emperor, represented in India by the Viceroy at New Delhi. Since the status of these Native States is fixed by treaty, the British Parliament is not in a position to legislate for them. Therefore, the Native States, in area about 800,000 square miles, with a population of about 70,000,000, are not affected by the Montagu-Chelmsford reforms, and enter only incidentally into the report of the Simon commission under review.

Oscar Lewis Unearths Fresh Material Bearing on an Old Literary Controversy

HEARN AND HIS BIOGRAPHERS: THE RECORD OF A LITERARY CONTROVERSY. By Oscar Lewis. 111 pp. San Francisco; The Westgate Press. $15.

By HERBERT GORMAN

FOR a time Lafcadio Hearn achieved the peculiar status of one of our literary mysteries. There were obscure aspects of his life that were not known to the general public. This was not so much the fault of Hearn as it was that of a series of circumstances and the decidedly diverse presentations of two of his biographers. Hearn, first of all, was an itinerant journalist wandering from place to place. He was poor and unknown and the white light of publicity was not cast upon him. He was an exotic phenomenon in the civilization of his day, a man suffering under a grievous physical disability which necessarily transformed him into a creature somewhat removed from his fellows. He was impulsive, quixotic, impregnated with the contemporary French literature of his day, and he did not conform to the cultural conventionalites of the placid '80s. All this, however, did not make a mystery of him. It was the antagonistic views of two of his biographers that did that. Elizabeth Bisland, in her official biography, made a saint of him. George Milbry Gould, in "Concerning Lafcadio Hearn," fashioned him into pretty much of a scoundrel. Of course, neither was accurate, and it is the purpose of Mr. Oscar Lewis in "Hearn and His Biographers" to establish the truth, for he did not know Hearn, and neither does he possess enough new revelatory material; but he does throw new light (not new to students of Hearn but rather for the general public) on certain aspects of Hearn's life that have been misrepresented or suppressed by his two biographers. This new light is due to a series of letters and the combing of old newspapers.

The principal episodes in Hearn's life which concern Mr. Lewis are Hearn's obscure marriage with a Cincinnati Negress and the loss of his treasured library. But before these matters are considered here, it may be of more interest to comment on the six new letters (one of them appeared long ago in Miss Bisland's biography and has been several times reprinted) which open "Hearn and His Biographers."

These letters were written to Joseph Tunison, a fellow-worker with Hearn on Cincinnati newspapers in the middle '70s. Hearn went to New Orleans in 1879, leaving Tunison behind him, and in 1884 Tunison come to New York to labor on a newspaper with Hearn's friend, H. E. Krehbiel. In 1888 the friendship of the two men was renewed when Hearn came to New York to prepare for his trip to the West Indies. Again in 1890, upon Hearn's return, the friends roomed together for some months at 149 West Tenth Street. It was here that Hearn translated Anatole France's "Le Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard" in two weeks (for which he received the princely fee of $100), and it was here also that he planned his Japanese expedition and set off on that journey to the East from which he never returned. The first two letters, here printed for the first time, are unimportant notes written in 1889 and are merely concerned with making an appointment with Tunison. The third letter is the well known "cubic miles of cut granite and iron fury" description of Hearn's reactions to New York, which appeared in Miss Bisland's "The Life and Letters of Lafcadio Hearn." The last three letters were written from Japan, and it is only letters 5 and 6 that are of any importance. Quotation from them would seem to be decidedly apropos. In letter 5 we have one of Hearn's first descriptions (if not his first) of his reaction to Japan, the country he was to adopt as his own.

> * * * The country, is, however full of the strangest charm. Artistically it is one vast museum. Socially and naturally it is really fairyland. The first impression produced by the Japanese themselves is that of being among the kindest kind of fairies. * * * The religions seized my emotions at once, and absorbed them. I am steeped in Buddhism, a Buddhism totally unlike that of books—something infinitely tender, touching, naif, beautiful. I mingle with crowds of pilgrims to the great shrines; I ring the great bells; and burn incense-rods before the great smiling gods. My study is confined to the popular religion, so far, and its relation to popular character and art. There are phases of this art surprisingly Greek, and legends amazing in their similarity to Hellenic myths — especially the myths of Hades. From the Greek kingdoms of India some Greek art is thought to have been filtered through China and Korea into antique Japan.
> The women are, at first sight, disappointing; at second sight delightful; on further acquaintance unapproachable in grace of manner, dainty simplicity, exquisiteness of character. They have something about them totally indescribable—something not physical so much as sympathetic and emotional—which belongs only to Japan, and resembles nothing one sees in any other country.

If one would place this first tentative approach to the mysterious Japanese character beside the expositions of the soul of Japan that Hearn wrote years later, a fair idea of how superbly he settled into the Oriental life and made himself a part of it may be inferred. One cannot help but think that Japan was the home for which Hearn had been seeking all his life. The sixth and last letter to Tunison is mainly concerned with the prospect of Tunison coming to Japan also.

> I do not know how you would like it [he writes to his American friend]. I should not return to American or English life for double my present salary of $200, [this was a monthly salary, by the way, and Hearn taught about twenty-four hours a week], although I might feel tempted to exchange this climate—about as severe in the main island as in Southern England—for a tropical one. But I cannot tell how you would feel. In time I am not sure whether you would not feel lonely. For a year or so, I imagine you would find every day something novel and pleasant. As for teaching, Japanese students are like imaginary beings for docility, earnestness, courtesy, &c. They are students of the dreamland of teachers. You would never have your patience tried, should you try the experiment. It requires some little time to know them; but a friend can post you on everything regarding school discipline in a week or less. You could pass a few months with me before teaching anywhere.
> In any of the large cities you can get Bass's Ale, whisky, beef, eggs and bread. Fine Western cooking only in open ports. I do not think you could live on purely Japanese fare for more than six months. I did it for nearly a year, but had to return to the flesh-pots after a severe sickness. The Japanese food is, however, a very pleasant alternative in the summertime and once a day, between two heavier meals. You would be expected to live an upright life: that would have been much less of an obstacle for you than for me in old times—I suppose it would be no obstacle to you now. The uprightness does not involve anything irrational.

All of this is quite interesting, and especially so is Hearn's reference to his difficulty to leading an upright life in the old day. It was the purpose of Miss Bisland, after she was authorized to write the official biography of Lafcadio Hearn, to present him as a saint. In fact, there seems to be no doubt but that she saw him as such. Her suppressions were suppressions of belief—that is, she could not accept the various anecdotes that revealed Hearn as all too human because she did not believe them. They were inconsistent with her ideal of Hearn. To her he was "a dear, imaginative, fantastic child, a child of genius, and was laways the prey of the vile in consequence. * * *" Such an attitude is always a betrayal of one's subject by a biographer. There are always literary jackals who will make the most out of suppressed or ignored material and dress it up so extravagantly that it will assume a notoriety out of all proportion to its importance. It is safest to tell the truth and let the facts speak for themselves. In this way the good and the evil are balanced and there is no undue emphasis on either.

The gravest suppressed episode in Lafcadio Hearn's life came to light in 1906 when one Alethea Foley, a Cincinnati Negress, instituted suit to "protect her rights" as the legal wife of Hearn. She claimed that Hearn married her in 1874 and that they lived together until 1877, when she went to Indianapolis, there to live with a young relative named Anderson. Nine months later, when she returned to Cincinnati, she discovered that Hearn had disappeared. She never saw Hearn again; but once in later years she received one of his "dreamy letters" from Cuba. In 1880 she received word that Hearn had died in Baton Rouge, and a year later she married one John Kleintank, but left him shortly after when she discovered that Hearn was not dead after all. Alethea Foley's suit to "protect her rights" was dismissed on curious grounds. From 1861 to 1877 there was a law on the statute books of Ohio which prohibited the marriages of whites and blacks, prohibited the issuance of a license to them and prohibited any person authorized to perform the marriage ceremony from doing so for such persons. As Alethea Foley claimed that she and Hearn were married in 1874 their marriage was voided by this law. Although no documents remain to establish the truth of this marriage (all records of the license and marriage were burned at the time of the court house riots in Cincinnati) there is small doubt but what it took place. Whether or not Hearn failed to tell the probate official

H. M. Tomlinson Discourses on Style

BETWEEN THE LINES. By H. M. Tomlinson. 51 pp. Cambridge: Harvard University Press. $1.25.

THE often debated but still debatable problem of style is discussed again in this brief address by H. M. Tomlinson, who endeavors to shed new light on a subject that will probably be open to dispute as long as men continue to write. But while by no means all that he says is novel, Mr. Tomlinson finds ample justification for his embarkation upon often-tried waters, for he not only expresses himself with insight and incisiveness, but has a particular point of attack that considers style, not so much in its general relations as with reference to the problems of the modern world.

The author's definition of style is one that has often been suggested before: that "style depends, first and last, on what a writer has to say, and the kind of man he is. It is not his dress, but the essential man. * * *" And from this belief it is but a short step to views that are a trifle less common: to the conception that the style of the present age is a reflection of the life and ideals of the present age; that the Epicureanism, the cynicism and frivolity of much of our writing "may be but the consequence of a lowered vitality"; and that it is because of a lack of courage, conviction and passion that we have the spectacle of "James Joyce and jazz." "You cannot do polemical prose like Swift's, let it be hinted, nor like Shaw's, without positive conviction moved by passion." And the absence of such convictions—other than in the domain of machinery and material forces — will explain why this century can produce a T. S. Eliot but not a Keats, the noisy syncopation of a dance orchestra but not a Beethoven.

Indeed, were some accident to place a Keats upon the modern scene, he "would fail to get into our more precious and sophisticated publications, for his lyrical emotion would seem spontaneous, innocent and foolish. * * * And certainly the popular journals would reject Keats on immediate printed forms." The spirit of Keats, in other words, does not accord with the spirit of the age; therefore the style of Keats does not accord with the style of the age; therefore he would not be permitted to make his impress upon the literary scroll of our times. Yet this does not mean that Mr. Tomlinson would advise Keats to seek to emulate T. S. Eliot. On the other hand, he would urge him, in the face of all powers that be, to aim to be Keats and none other. It is with no gentleness that the commentator refers to the writer "who would give his public what it wants"; such an individual, he believes, "is in the same class exactly as the other fellow who once took pieces of silver in payment for treachery," for both alike have committed the fault of denying the light. Although a generation, like a person, seeks to be taught that which it desires to be taught and prefers to believe that which is easiest to believe, the place of the creative artist is not to consider popular preferences, but to be swayed by that inner urgency which may rise above time and place and the individual and move writer and reader alike with the impulse of the universal. Only in such an aim can literature reach its fulfillment and style attain that consummation which is beyond analysis and moves we know not whence, like a free wind to release the chained spirit of man.

Queries and Answers

This department is designed to assist in the location of complete versions of poems and their sources, the names of authors, &c., which cannot be found through the usual channels of anthologies and books of reference. The Times receives a great many more queries than it can publish. It endeavors, therefore, to select those of the greatest general interest. Queries should be addressed to the Editor of Queries and Answers, New York Times. They should be written on one side of the paper only, and must contain the name and address of the writer as evidence of good faith. Requests for poems that appear in these columns must be accompanied by postage.

QUERIES

"I Had Not Been This Splendor"

C. T. E.—Wanted, the source and correct reading of the following quotation: "Had he not turned me in his hand and ground my hills to dust, I had not been this splendor, nor my wrongs an everlasting music."

"Love Shall Quote Its Own Beatitudes"

E. C. M.—Requested, the author's name and the poem containing the following passage:

Thy love shall quote its own beatitudes
After its own life workings;
A child's kiss upon thy singing lips
Shall make thee glad.

"The Bargain"

M. H.—Desired, the name of the author and the poem, entitled above, which begins:

Peter on Christmas bounty bent
Found his material assets nil,
He sighed: "They are not worth a cent,
But I can sell my soul—I will!"

"That Odious Smile of Boundless Self-Conceit"

N. T. P.—Wish the author's name and the poem containing the following lines:

That odious smile of boundless self-conceit
Which seems to take possession of the world,
And make of God a tame confederate.

"September"

L. E. L.—Wanted, the name of the author and the poem, entitled as above, expressing the feelings of a mother as she watches her boy start for school for the first time. It begins: "September, September, O where are you faring?"

"In Eighteen Forty-Nine"

M. M.—Requested, the name of the author and the complete text of a poem on the California gold rush, each verse ending as above.

"Why Does It Take the Heart So Long to Learn?"

S. M. G. C.—Desired, the author's name and the poem from which the following lines were taken:

Why does it take the heart so long to learn
What the mind perceives at every turn?

"The Man Who Will Take My Place"

G. O'B.—Wish the author's name, title and complete poem, which contains the lines:

I'd like to reach out in the pearly dawn
And grasp the hand of the man
Who will take my place when I am gone.

"A Prayer for Actors"

E. H. S.—Wanted, a poem, entitled as above, written by the late Henry Codman Potter, Bishop of New York. It contains the lines: "Be with them, whose is the actor's calling," and "Comfort them in their hours of loneliness, make them a power for good."

"Out of the Depths I Rise"

M. B.—Desired, the name of the author and the poem beginning with the words: "Out of the depths I rise * * * and to Thee."

"Always Wanting What Is Not"

F. S.—Wanted, the author's name and the poem in which the following lines occur:

As a rule, man's a fool;
When it's hot he wants it cool.
When it's cool he wants it hot,
Always wanting what is not.

"The Courage and Labors of a Single Man"

J. J. S.—Requested, the name of the author of the following quotation, possibly an English historian: "When the love of action is guided by a sense of public duty, accompanied by commensurate abilities, a State or an empire may be indebted for their safety and prosperity to the undaunted courage and labors of a single man."

"Sculplock"

F. N. B.—Wish the name of the author and information about a book entitled as above and published about twenty years ago.

"A Place Where Time Had Ceased"

W. R.—Requested, the name of the author and the poem beginning:

I sat alone with my conscience
In a place where time had ceased.

ANSWERS

"A Homely Hero, Born of Star and Sod"

MISS LOUELLA D. EVERETT, Boston, Mass.—There are but four lines to the poem, "Abraham Lincoln," wanted by M. I. A., Aug. 3. It is on page 6 of "Selected Poems," by Walter Malone, published by John P. Morton & Co., Inc., Louisville, Ky., 1919. Judge Malone was born in Mississippi, Feb. 10, 1866, and died May 18, 1915, in Memphis, Tenn., where he was judge of the Second Circuit Court of Shelby County. His poem, "Opportunity," beginning: "They do me wrong who say I come no more," is well known.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN
By Walter Malone

A blend of mirth and sadness, smiles and tears;
A quaint knight-errant of the pioneers;
A homely hero, born of star and sod;
A Peasant-Prince; a Masterpiece of God.

Miss Mary E. Burt, Fall River, Mass., informs us: "The four lines quoted by M. I. A. are printed in an anthology of Lincoln poems, "In Praise of Lincoln," collected by A. Dallas Williams. Judge Malone published several volumes of his own verse, the last of which, according to Stedman's American Anthology, appeared in 1897."

"Pilgrim Swallow"

FRANCES ELLEN KIRKPATRICK, Montgomery, Ala.—In your issue of July 13 R. P. requested a poem in which the words "Pilgrim swallow" were used. I think this must be "A una Golondrina" ("To a Swallow"), by the Cuban poet Juan Clementi Zenea, published in Mapes & Velasco's "Cuba y los Cubanos" (Gregg Publishing Company, New York, 1920). Zenea worked for the independence of Cuba, and was executed in the famous dry moat of the Castle of Cabana on Aug. 5, 1871.

The poem, beginning: "Mensajera peregrina," was written while he was in prison awaiting execution. It has seven stanzas. The word "peregrina" means "traveling" or "pilgrim." I enclose the Spanish lines and my own free translation, which begins:

TO A SWALLOW

Pilgrim messenger,
Who at the foot of my prison
Art merry, flying about,
Where do you come from, swallow?
Swallow, where are you going?

Mrs. Luella M. Runyon, Deposit, N. Y., sends an Italian poem in seven stanzas, beginning "Rondinella pellegrina," by Tommaso Grassi, which appears in his novel "Marco Visconti," and which she suggests may be the one desired by R. P.

"Alone With God"

Miss LUCY CARR, Richmond Hill, N. Y.—The lines desired by L. D. S., in your issue of July 27, are from the poem "Silence," by the Rev. Samuel Miller Hageman. He was a Princeton graduate and a minister in Brooklyn, N. Y. Other works of his are: "Greenwood, and Other Poems," "Songbirds Are They Known" and "Liberty." "Silence" was copyrighted and published in 1876 by Dodd, Mead & Co.

A. M. Blanchard, Pawtucket, R. I., adds: "It was later published by D. S. Holmes, Brooklyn, N. Y." The poem has twenty-three stanzas, the last of which runs as follows:

Every sound that breaks the silence only makes it more profound,
Like a crash of deafening thunder in the sweet blue stillness drowned;
Let thy soul walk softly in thee, as a saint in heaven unshod,
For to be alone with Silence is to be alone with God.

O. Wegelin, New York City, and Miss Edna Turner Carey, Brooklyn, N. Y., also answered this request.

"Rise Again and Drink Once More"

B. V. IMBRIE, Pittsburgh, Pa.—Answering M. M.'s inquiry in your issue of July 20, I attributed the lines: "Not drunk is he who from the floor," &c., to Eugene Field, quoting the "Stag's Hornbook" as my authority. I now find these lines as the heading for Chapter III of "The Misfortunes of Elphin," by Thomas Love Peacock (1785-1866). They are given as a translation from the Welsh language, and read:

Not drunk is he who from the floor
Can rise alone and still drink more;
But drunk is he, who prostrate lies,
Without the power to drink or rise.

"Will You Come Back Home?"

ALLAN R. REA, Hinsdale, Ill.—Supplementing J. A. M.'s reply in your issue of July 13 to an inquiry by C. C. V. on June 15, the verses requested under the title "Will You Come Back Home?" were embodied in a short story by Sir Gilbert Parker entitled "The Lane That Had a Turning," published in the Saturday Evening Post in the Summer or early Autumn of 1907. There are a few verbal errors in the verses as quoted by J. A. M. In the first verse the reading should be "open wide" for "opened widely," "a little lake I know," and "a boat you used to row." I give the second stanza as I have it:

Won't you come back, darlin',
Never mind the pain and blightin';
Never trouble that you're wounded,
That you bear the scars of fightin,'
Heres' the luck of Heaven to you;

Here's the hand of love will brew you
The cup of peace, O darlin',
Won't you come back home?

"What Did You Hear and What Did You See?"

Miss MARY E. BURT, Fall River, Mass.—The poem requested by J. N. in your issue of Aug. 3 is "A Ballad of War," by Menella Bute Smedley. It has sixteen four-line stanzas, and begins as follows:

Oh! were you at war in the red Eastern land?
What did you hear and what did you see?
Saw you my son with his sword in his hand,
Sent he by you any dear word to me?

"The Poplar Tree and the Cross"

Mrs. Alice M. McCluskey, Easton, Pa.—If it is not too late I should like to submit the following poem, which is, I believe, the one asked for by A. W. W. M. in your issue of June 1. I recited it years ago at Arbor Day exercises. I do not remember the author. It has eight four-line stanzas, and begins:

THE LEGEND OF THE ASPEN

(It is said that the cross was made of the aspen or poplar tree, and that since the day of the crucifixion the leaves have not ceased to tremble).

O'er the forests of Judea
Gayly early morning played,
While some men came armed with axes
Deep into the forest shade.

Passed by many a tree majestic—
Cypress grove and olive wood,
Till they came where in the thicket
Fair and proud the aspen stood.

THE DECLINE OF THE MEDIEVAL CHURCH. A Definitive Study of the Forces Operating Within and Without the Church from the Thirteenth Through the Fifteenth Centuries. By Alexander Clarence Flick, State Historian of New York. 2 Volumes. 4mo. 398 and 544 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $12.50.

By WALTER LITTLEFIELD

THE solution of the Roman question with the prospect of an early resumption of the Vatican Council, adjourned in the Autumn of 1870, has served greatly to augment the literature of the Holy See. Books feverishly prepared to meet a sudden public demand have been followed by others of more conspicuous scholarship and with an ever-growing adhesion to historical perspective and a weighing of historical precedents; and, by a careful analysis of the forces which produced the Council of 1869-70, material is offered from which a prevision may be formed as to the importance, almost the character, of its resumption.

Mr. Moore, former Secretary of the American Embassy at Rome, was privileged to witness with a diplomatic instinct of coordination the events which produced the solution and to study in the archives of Rome the documents which pertained to it, not only as to the formative influences, both civil and ecclesiastical, of the climax in 1929, but even those which had brought about the usurpation of the temporal power of the Popes nearly sixty years before. Curious as it may seem, as Mr. Moore points out and the late Professor Bury expounds, the very country which was most solicitous in preserving and augmenting the power of the Holy See in 1870 — most anxious to expand the authority of the Popes through an ecumenical council — was the very one which, toward the end of the previous century, had labored most persistently to destroy both the power and authority and had endowed the Roman question with its modern form. This was France, which did not succeed because Napoleon diverted the attributes of the Holy See to his own use—just as Philip IV of France had done five centuries before—and with a "Babylonian captivity," which, if not so long, was quite as arresting to the progress of the Church in its moral and spiritual aspects.

Although evidently a devout Catholic, the prevailing impression which the author of "Peter's City" brings into strong relief by the new situation produced by the Lateran Treaty and the Concordat, is the contrast produced between it and the temporal power enjoyed by the Papacy at the end of the thirteenth century. Now the actuality only embraces a few acres of ground with extraterritorial rights extending to certain ecclesiastical estates. Then, according to Professor Flick: "The ecclesiastical empire of Rome was the widest in territorial extent that up to that time had been obtained under any of the Pontiffs." Now we have in Italy an imperium in imperio with a complex fabric of political, civil and social relations between the two and a potential spiritual imperialism with an ever-growing urge for universal dominance.

It is an interesting occupation to conjecture whether the new Stato del Vaticano will not follow the path of the Stati della Chiesa and their political appendages and meet their fate, or be able to prevail over the material tendencies which are certain to arise both within and without. Mr. Moore, while comprehensively offering the basis of such a conjecture, does not occupy himself with it. He merely produces a spirited and graphic narrative firmly grounded on documents and developed through an observing eye by the events he actually witnessed. His equipment as historian is not stressed, but appears rather incidental to his rather fine gift as a graphic, at times epic, narrator, while his deductions, sparingly indulged in, seem both reasonable and just—at least as far as the present Pontiff is concerned, whose guiding purpose, he says, is "to lead humanity away from the unspeakable ills from which it has suffered," with "a love of peace, a striving for peace, and a determination to secure peace"—surely a good augury for the future of the Vatican State, Italy, and the world, and for the eternal wisdom of the Lateran Treaty and the Concordat.

Abbot Butler's well-documented, monumental work on the Vatican Council possesses two very conspicuous values—it is the first comprehensive attempt, from the point of view of Pius IX's government, to make known the genesis and results of that gathering in 1869-70, which ratified the dogma of papal infallibility and adjourned amid the conflicting forces of the Franco-Prussian War and the occupation of the Eternal City by the troops of Victor Emmanuel II. It offers a hitherto unequaled ground for the consideration of the program of the reassembling of the council when that program shall be offered to the world.

Hitherto readers of the English language have been obliged to draw most of their knowledge from the opposition—from the articles of "Janus" and the letters of "Quirinus," and even from the more intimate writings of Cardinal Newman, who then as a convert-priest was first opposed to the institution of the first ecumenical gathering since that of Trent as well as he was to the dogma of infallibility. Later he became converted to the importance of the first and to the expediency of the latter. At this time it is easy to see how the propaganda of the opposition gained measurable influence through the eloquent attitude of Episcopal churchmen like Mr. Gladstone, who beheld Ultramontanism conspiring to place an impassable, eternal barrier between a union of the Anglican and Roman communions, and new causes for friction between Church and State. This is not surprising, perhaps, when the original Ultramontane program is considered; the promulgation of the immaculate conception, the universal adoption of the Roman liturgy, the canonization of Bellarmine as the father of Ultramontanism and the ratification of the personal infallibility of the Pope, already held to be a matter of ex cathedra authority by Pius IX.

Dom Butler bases both narrative and deductions largely on the unpublished letters of Dr. Ullathorne, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Birmingham, England, written while the council was in progress, and emphasizes the decisive rôles played by two Englishmen, Archbishop, afterward Cardinal, Manning—a convert like Newman—and Odo Russell, the agent of the British Government at Rome, who, although not a Catholic, assisted Manning in his labors and plans and is shown to have played a decisive hand in disarming both his own and other secular governments which intrigued to obstruct the council. Added to theirs was the support of Louis Veuillot, the lay editor of the Univers and leader of the French Ultramontanes.

With the doctrine of infallibility ratified as a dogma, Dom Butler clearly places before his readers the exact nature of the victory of Ultramontanism, which received its coup de grâce at the conclave of 1922, when Pius XI was elected, and reveals how the central authority in the Church was gradually developed independent of it, as well as of the various national episcopates, and brought about the extinction of at least one national movement—that of the well-organized "Gallican" school in France, revived in the present day by Léon Daudet and his Action Française.

Apotheosis of St. Thomas Aquinas.

From the Painting by Francisco de Zurbaran.

Dom Butler's most academic expositions and conclusions have no taint of the laborious mental process which has afflicted several other writers on the same subject. He has even a fine sense of humor in handling the desperate antagonism of the leaders of the so-called Liberal Catholics, like the Munich historian, Johann Joseph Ignaz von Döllinger, and Lord Acton. The author brings into strong relief, possibly for the first time, the innate seriousness and utter conscientious purpose of the apparently heterogeneous assembly, and he does so with the saving grace of picturesqueness and a lightness of touch that is never flippant.

And what may be considered as a comprehensive preface to all this is the Bury book, containing lectures on "The Syllabus" of Pius IX, that Pontiff's great challenge to liberalism, the government of Cavour, and the dynasty of Savoy, "The Vatican Council," "The Doctrine of Infallibility," and "The Fall of the Temporal Power." The title of this book, however, it will be observed, is a misnomer, for neither in scope nor in character is it to be compared with that monumental work, "The History of the Papacy in the XIXth Century," by the late Bishop of Aalborg of the University of Copenhagen, Dr. Fredrik Nielsen, although possessing nearly the identical title.

The late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, editor of the finest edition of Gibbon's "Decline and Fall" yet produced, was a profound Hellenic and Latin scholar, who in his later years turned to the complexities of expounded religion. Although well fortified with the documents and literature of the papacy of Pius IX, unlike Abbot Butler, he makes little effort to understand the rivalries at the council, but frankly writes as a convinced opponent of Ultramontanism and all its ramifications. His hostile surmises, although many, are not always correct, as, for example, when he declares that "Manning and the Jesuits succeeded in excluding Newman from the preparatory work of the council," whereas the famous author of "Apologia pro Vita Sua" was invited to participate and declined.

The lectures, however, possess a great personal interest for those who admire the Bury style and scholarship. For them the value is greatly enhanced by the splendid memorial by Murray of Pershore Abbey which prefaces the volume. It is a moving, inspiring and altogether sympathetic account of a most instructive career.

Although much more comprehensively documented and by far a more elaborate work in the assembling and the discussion of material, the two-volume monograph by Professor Flick on "The Decline of the Medieval Church" bears the same relation to Guilbert Bagnani's book on "Rome and the Papacy" that Professor Bury's does to that of Dom Butler—with their titles exchanged. Aside from this, Bagnani is an Italian Catholic, blessed with both discernment and understanding and inspired by an alluring optimism which appears to be rather innate than imparted. His well-packed, little volume begins with the statement that "the propagation and establishment of the Christian religion is the greatest of the many achievements of the Roman Empire," and ends with a subjective analysis of the settlement of the Roman Question concluding with the words:

> The Lateran Treaty thus closes a period in the history of the Papacy, but at the same time it opens another. Future generations will have to deal with the far more difficult Italian question. Already we hear rumors of an internationalization of the Curia and the election of a for-

Dr. Clark Advances a New Theory of Evolution

A Smithsonian Biologist Maintains That All the Major Animal Groups Were Formed at the Same Time

From a Drawing Showing Various Methods of Flying and Swooping.

From "The Outline of Science," Edited by J. Arthur Thomson. (G. P. Putnam Sons.)

THE NEW EVOLUTION. Zoogenesis. By Austin H. Clark. 297 pp. Baltimore: The Williams & Wilkins Company. $3

THE HISTORY OF BIOLOGICAL THEORIES. By Emanuel Radl. Translated and adapted from the German by E. J. Hatfield. 408 pp. New York: Oxford University Press, American Branch. $6.

By R. L. DUFFUS

PERSONS who are under the uneasy suspicion that if they were to pursue their family tree far enough back they would come upon something that hung by its tail and threw cocoanuts will read Dr. Clark's "entirely new view of the evolution of life and of man's relation to the living world" with great satisfaction. Whether Dr. Clark's fellow-citizens will as a body regard it with the same satisfaction is more questionable. For Dr. Clark has done a striking thing. He has brought forward what certainly seems, at first glance, a novel theory, but he has written it for the general public. The general public, obviously, cannot make up its mind about so profound a thing as a new theory about evolution from the reading of a single book, even though that book is written in an easy and understandable style. In fact, the general public needs a good deal of pounding over the head before it will make up its mind about anything that matters. This is one of the balance-wheel phenomena that keep the race from becoming hysterical.

Dr. Clark's books ought, therefore, to be read by the layman as an ex parte statement. The layman should then sit back and listen to some of the ex parte statements that will be made by other scientific philosophers in reply. But it can be said definitely, without waiting for a final verdict, that Dr. Clark is a well-informed and highly entertaining writer. He even has a skill which carries him past some highly controversial corners so smoothly that the reader hardly notices that the argument is running with some of its wheels off the ground. He is, moreover, a biologist of standing, who has been a member of the staff of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington since 1908.

Mankind, so Dr. Clark reasons, has certain attributes which could not possibly have been derived one by one from an ape-like ancestor, and which, indeed, somewhat resemble those of the insects and the birds. An examination of the phyla or major groups of animals as far back as traces of life can be found shows that while the relation of species within the groups has changed the groups themselves have been distinct. Consequently we must assume a convergence toward a common ancestor, somewhere in pre-Cambrian time—a phenomenon of which we have no evidence—or we must take it for granted that the phyla were from the earliest dawn distinct. At first thought this sounds somewhat like the ancient, pre-Darwinian doctrine of special creation. But this is not what Dr. Clark has in mind.

The major groups have survived because creatures of each of these groups "have some special economic niche wherein they are safe from direct competition by creatures belonging to any of the other groups." Species have appeared, disappeared and altered because they compete within the group—a kind of family row. In a similar way climatic changes kill off species but not groups. The grand divisions of animate life go right on. They also go straight back as far as the scientist's eye can see. How does this theory check up with that of a primeval single cell, which Dr. Clark, like all biologists, accepts? At first there seems some difficulty, since it is common to assume that the development of animal forms must have taken an enormous length of time and that it must have been brought about by the evolution of simpler creatures into more complex. But, Dr. Clark tells us, "through the application of a principle derived from the careful and detailed study of the past history of animal types within the phylum we reach the conclusion that the phyla must have originated quite independently of each other from a common source." Evolution was "concurrent." Dr. Clark goes on:

> We may assume without the possibility of successful contradiction that all of the major groups of animals were formed at the same time as the result of following different developmental paths from the primitive single cell. No other reasonable conclusion can be drawn from the facts of embryology. There is no evidence of any kind which would lead us to suppose that any one of the major groups was derived through any of the others. * * * The single cell has inherent in itself the potentiality for development through selective and progressive reduction in various directions and in various ways, into every form of life which at any time may be capable of existence and of self-perpetuation under the conditions obtaining at the time. All animal types are therefore to be regarded, in their relation to cosmic evolution, simply as varied and varying manifestations of the inherent potentialities of the fundamental substance, protoplasm. Such a concept contemplates the animal world as in reality but a single unit finding its expression in an infinity of equations, all of which, no matter how complicated they may seem, reduce themselves to the same fundamental term.

This theory, it may be noted, does not relieve mankind of those aspersions upon its ancestry to which the Legislature of the State of Tennessee objected so strenuously. We are, like the ape, mammalian and primate. But Dr. Clark agrees with Dr. Osborn that the ape is not one of our first families. He is out on the end of a limb of the same tree from which we also branched. He is a cousin many times removed—a cousin who did not do very well in the world and who cannot claim the privilege of moving in our social circle. Thus, we have a theory which is brilliantly stated, simple enough for general comprehension and easy on our pride. It gives us all the advantages of the special creation theory, except that it does not imply a God. It relieves us of the tedious and apparently hopeless search for missing links. It does not, obviously, explain how the single primitive cell came to possess its infinite possibilities. The mystery of life remains. The protoplasm flowed into the crevices of the environment like jelly into a mold. But where and how did it learn the trick? "Zoogenesis" does not bring us much nearer that riddle.

If the reader wishes to get a perspective on Dr. Clark's theory by reviewing the history and criticism of Darwinism he can hardly do better than pick up Dr. Rádl's "History of Biological Theories." This book, originally published in German in 1909, now re-edited and translated by Mr. Hatfield, is a complete and careful statement and in the English version, at least, it is eminently readable. As Dr. Rádl saw the situation more than twenty years ago, Darwinism is dead. It has not so much been refuted as left behind, not so much destroyed as built upon. But natural selection, a theory as beautifully simple as that now advanced by Dr. Clark, was incapable of carrying the burden of the whole mass of evolutionary phenomena. The great mystery behind life is darker than it was half a century ago. Yet if books like these did nothing else they would at least be of service in startling us into recognition of that fact.

An Exciting History of the Concept of Number

NUMBER THE LANGUAGE OF SCIENCE. By Tobias Dantzig. Illustrated. 260 pp. New York: The Macmillan Company. $3.

LIKE Bulwer Lytton in "The Coming Race," Jules Verne in "A Voyage to the Centre of the Earth" and W. H. Hudson in one of his least-known books, "Crystal Age," Dr. Tobias Dantzig of the University of Maryland conducts his readers into a hidden world within the world, a world that we might never have suspected, never have entered, without his chaperonage; a world with its heroes, its wild adventures, and, as we discover, not without its entertainments. Dr. Dantzig himself gives us a more prosaic account of his undertaking. He reminds us that a textbook of arithmetic suggests, by its formal order, that discoveries in the science of number happened, or were revealed, in that order, under the guidance of abstract destiny without human intervention. But the history of mathematics shows that this impression is quite false; the science of numbers came into being and progressed by a series of intuitions, of mutations and sports in the biological sense, and often amid exciting if somewhat tenuous mental adventures.

How far is our sense of number inherent in the human mind? Dr. Dantzig approaches this question by giving surprising instances of number in the minds of birds, and, still more unexpected, in the minds of solitary wasps, those fiendish insects which provide fresh meat for their unborn young by paralyzing a caterpillar by an injection of poison, and then laying an egg in it. Some species always provide 5, others always 12, others 24 caterpillars for each cannibalistic infant. So we may take it that in some measure number is inherent in mind, and that the higher mathematics are adventures of the mind, whether or not they correspond to external realities.

Dr. Dantzig quotes Laplace as showing that it is not to Greece that we are indebted for our science of numbers, but to India, from whence, through the Arabs, we borrowed our numerals and the zero which makes it possible to write 1, 10, 100, 1,000 and so on, the first figure having in each case a different value of position. To India, we are told, we also owe the science of algebra. It is somewhat astonishing to learn that the tally, a stick with notches cut on its edges, was in use in the English Court of Exchequer until 1826, in the reign of George IV, but Charles Dickens is cited at length to prove it.

We come to the book's practical adventures with the discussion of "prime numbers," that is, numbers which have no divisors except unity. The earlier numbers of this kind are 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 11, 13, 17, 19, 23, 29, 31, 37, 41, 43, 47. They appear to have been studied by the Greek astronomer Eratosthenes.

Then there are "perfect numbers" which are equal to the sum of their divisors. Thus 6 can be divided by 1, 2 and 3; these added together make 6. The next "perfect number" is 28; it appears that only twelve perfect numbers are known.

Immensely interesting are the four arguments of Zeno, who began by saying that "What has been said once can always be repeated," and went on from this truism to show that, as a number can always be added to any number, there can be no "last number"; numbers are infinite. But odd numbers, which are only a part of the total of numbers, are also infinite; hence, when we come to deal with infinites, it may be true that a part is equal to the whole. It was Zeno who propounded the famous problem of Achilles and the tortoise, demonstrating that, as the tortoise did his little bit while Achilles was doing his big bit, the hero could never overtake the reptile. The classical answer is: Solvitur ambulando—"the problem is solved by walking!"

Then there are the perpetually insoluble problems, like "squaring the circle," or, more accurately, finding the exact relation between the circumference of a circle and its diameter, this ratio being symbolized by the Greek letter pi. This ratio, which is written 3.14159 * * *, has been worked out to 700 figures, concerning which our astronomer Simon Newcomb says most consolingly:

> Ten decimals are sufficient to give the circumference of the earth to the fraction of an inch, and thirty decimals would give the circumference of the whole visible universe to a quantity imperceptible to the most powerful microscope.

So we are under no invincible obligation to carry the value of pi to a few more decimal places.

Mathematics are not always divorced from malice. It appears that Bertrand Russell and A. N. Whitehead collaborated in a very learned work, "Principia Mathematica"; our author says that the story current in mathematical circles is that there are but two people who have ever read the "Principia" from cover to cover, and adds that it is not certain whether the two authors are included in this restricted though perhaps highly appreciative total.

The book is summed up by the phrase that the mathematician recognizes that he is dealing exclusively with acts of the mind. Dr. Dantzig helps us to realize that this formidable commerce may have its entertaining side.

Round Cape Horn in the Last Of the Square-Riggers

Mr. Villiers Writes a Thrilling Narrative of the Sea in Its Aspect of Ruthlessness

BY WAY OF CAPE HORN. By A. J. Villiers. 336 pp. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $3.50.

By WALTER B. HAYWARD

All Hands on the Weather Mainyard.

Below—The Grace Harwar.

Both These Photographs Are Copyrighted by A. J. Villiers.

A FEW of the square-riggers are left to remind us of the glorious days of sail, now almost gone. The craft that builders fashioned into things of grace and beauty were popularly endowed with the spirit of romance, but the men who drove them over the seas knew better. To them the square-riggers were ships in which sailors worked like galley slaves, suffered many hardships and found little comfort. Yet with all their faults the sailors loved them. That is the seaman's way. His ship is home—something to fight for when danger arises and something to remember when he leaves her.

Mr. Villiers's book is more than an entertaining and often thrilling narrative of a voyage around Cape Horn, the cape of great winds; it is a useful record of life today in the last fleet of square-rigged vessels. He speaks with authority, for he learned his trade in sail, and he writes with the grace and sincerity of one who knows the ways of ships.

Many of the remaining square-riggers fly the flag of Finland and are engaged in moving the Australian wheat crop to England. A few carry nitrates and guano from South American ports to Europe. Necessarily they must be operated economically in order to return a profit to their owners, and as a consequence, Mr. Villiers states, they are ill-found and sadly undermanned. Indeed, their men are often boys, some of whom have never been to sea before. Herein lies a strong contrast to the old American clippers, whose owners took pride in making them seaworthy and manning them with seasoned crews. Even in the American clippers, which afforded the best conditions, life was not a picnic; today in the last of the square-riggers sometimes it approaches misery.

After a long voyage Mr. Villiers turned temporarily to newspaper work and was serving as a reporter in Tasmania when he and Ronald Walker, a fellow reporter, determined to make a moving picture of a square-rigger at sea before Davy Jones or the shipbreakers had taken their final toll of the sailing fleet. They found berths aboard the Finnish full-rigged ship Grace Harwar, Clyde built, forty years old and none too safe for a voyage around Cape Horn in the southern Winter. The making of their film is incidental to the main story.

The Grace Harwar left Wallaroo, Australia, in April, 1929, with 3,000 tons of wheat and thirteen men in the foc'sle to work the ship, watch and watch, to England. Counting Captain Svensson, two mates, the cook and mess boy, carpenter and sailmaker, she mustered twenty men, plus a Negro passenger who was being deported from Australia. There was work for twenty-odd seamen aboard the Grace Harwar, but thirteen hands in the foc'sle were all that the owners deemed necessary. It was a crew in which boys predominated. Two of them had been "on the beach" and were minus warm clothing and bedding; two others knew nothing about the sea and less about the gear of a sailing ship, and Walker was also a greenhorn.

They soon learned that the sea was unkind, treacherous and ruthless, and that a sailing ship demanded strong muscles and stout hearts. They had their taste of ugly weather the first night they stood out to sea and were soon wet and chilled. They remained sodden and cold for weeks. They were wet on deck and wet in their bunks, for the sea washed into the foc'sle, their only place of refuge. Still they thrived, growing strong on coarse food and hard work.

Withal, the Grace Harwar was a contented ship. Her master and mates were just men; the foc'sle hands lived in peace, if not in comfort, taking the good with the bad and always looking forward to the far distant day when they would leave Cape Horn behind and find themselves in the comparatively peaceful latitudes of the South Atlantic.

From Australia the Grace Harwar sailed southeast past Tasmania, thence to New Zealand, passing through Cook Strait out into the lonely stretch of ocean that is the road to Cape Horn. On the thirty-eighth day Ronald Walker was killed aloft, crushed by a falling yard. It was a bitter day for the foc'sle. Walker's death leads Mr. Villiers into a discussion of the loss of life in these undermanned ships. He cites many tragedies and adds:

> Sail has always taken its toll, of course, and there always have been ships with bad names that killed some one upon every voyage. But I could not name one of these surviving sailors that has not killed some one, and in their declining years they seem to have taken a turn for the worse. One almost hopes that soon they will all be gone.

The Grace Harwar encountered baffling winds and gales of great force, with rain, sleet and snow. Day and night the men were trimming yards, fisting wet canvas, mending gear and saving the remnants of torn sails. But the Grace Harwar behaved with the dignity of the veteran that she was; the men liked to fight with her and for her. Again and again she displayed her admirable qualities when the seas raced down upon her. Tons of water fell on the deck, but the old ship shook herself free and always rose and sailed on. The diabolical persistence of Cape Horn weather is proverbial. Mr. Villiers gives this vivid picture:

> With thermometer at four or five Fahrenheit, a living gale blowing from ice-wastes of the Antarctic not many miles away, a great murderous sea running, foam-topped and angry; and the old ship battling on against the east winds and the snow flurries, day after day, week after week, fighting always, winning little, swept end to end by the great seas, weighed down with water that turned to ice where it touched her steel, sails blown bodily from their gaskets at times, and ripped to their belt ropes where they stood upon more than one black night—it was scarcely a holiday! It was near enough to hell for us.
> Aloft it was not so bad, though it was torture getting there, and clewing the sails up from the deck was beset with danger and surrounded by immense difficulties, with the seas that swept aboard and the gear that carried away. But aloft you were fighting something; there came the call of adventure to your bones. You fought on. You forgot the cold and the shrieking wind that cut through you. You only handled the murderous sails, and fought to get them in, forgetting all else—even your foothold. Often aloft our hands are torn; wet strong canvas, with the demon of the gale in it, easily tears out the nails. We kept our nails clipped, but sometimes they went, for all that. * * *

The Cape Horner's voyage, as Mr. Villiers says, is one long fight with circumstance, one long, wretched battle with the unfriendly wind and the treacherous sea. It was so with the Grace Harwar. She did not round the Cape until her fifty-seventh day. Before that event the greatest gale of all, the Cape's parting storm, had been weathered.

A few days more and the men were revelling in warm sunshine. They had not seen the sun for weeks. They dried their ragged clothes, clipped their beards and set about the task of overhauling the gear and rigging. They were going home but their troubles were not yet over. The second mate broke down, a victim of the delusion that he had been responsible for Walker's death. And finally the Grace Harwar ran short of food, 2,000 miles from her destination. A passing steamer supplied her, and the voyage ended at Queenstown—a voyage of 138 days.

There were fourteen sailing vessels in the Australian grain fleet of 1929. Only two of them made a passage of under 100 days, but none exceeded the Grace Harwar's time. The boys who sail these ships are worthy descendants of the old breed of deep-water seamen. The sea uses them hard, ages them quickly, and often kills them. But the boys carry on and the grain is taken to market. Mr. Villiers has done well with their story. His illustrations, the work of Ronald Walker and himself, add charm to the book.

Recent Civic Progress in the United States

AMERICAN CIVIC ANNUAL. A Record of Recent Civic Advance With a List of Who's Who in Civic Achievement. Edited by Harlean James. Illustrated. 340 pages. Vol. II. Washington, D. C.: American Civic Association, Inc.

THIS is the second volume in the series of year books that was initiated last year by the American Civic Association. The purpose of the series is to form a record year by year of outstanding civic developments of varied character throughout the United States. This new volume quite equals that of last year in the variety and interest of its text and its illustrations. The contents are comprehensive in their scope and include, first, civic achievements of a national character, such as developments in the national parks, the housing problem and the Federal city, with articles by thirty contributors; second, five contributions describing the progress of the year in regional planning; third, what has been done by the States in such matters as State planning, parks, roadside improvements and public building, sixteen writers furnishing the articles; fourth, twenty-six contributors tell of civic progress in cities and towns in such matters as public structures of moment, planned college campuses, city planning, civic improvements. Over fifty pages of brief biographies fill the "Who's Who" section.

SO I SAID TO MR. MORGAN

By Michael Shepard

with 28 hilarious pictures

By Shermund

A fine, racy story that tears thru night clubs of New York and Atlantic City, sets Wall Street on its ear, pauses for breath among the hokus pokus literati, zigzags along Park Avenue, and ends up amidst the quiet hills of Connecticut.

If you are a gentleman who prefers blondes, if you ever held Radio stock, if you ever took a drink or loved a girl or shook a foot to wicked syncopated music, you will enjoy meeting Otto Munson.

who issued the license that Alethea Foley was a Negress and so committed a fraud upon the court is a mystery. But contemporary evidence, from persons who remembered the affair and from remarks in the Cincinnati newspapers of the time tend to show that Hearn did contract a union with this woman and that he did live with her for some time. It was this story that Miss Bisland strove to suppress, but as the facts became common property while she was working on her biography she was forced to make some reference to it, which she did (according to Mr. Lewis) in "a few oblique sentences that were so vague as to convey nothing whatever to any reader unacquainted with the facts." It would be presumptuous on a commentator's part to indulge in any discussion of the moral aspects of Hearn's marriage, but it is in order to indicate that Miss Bisland was decidedly at fault in being "oblique" and "vague." A clear-cut statement always kills insidious speculation.

The second important matter which Mr. Lewis takes up in "Hearn and His Biographers" is that of the disappearance of Hearn's library. Of course, it did not disappear at all. Everybody knew where it was, but what was important was the reason (if any) why Hearn should not recover it. In 1889 Hearn stopped for five months with one Dr. George M. Gould in Philadelphia, and when Hearn left the Doctor's home they parted enemies. In 1908 Dr. Gould published his "Concerning Lafcadio Hearn," a volume which, as Mr. Lewis states, "is without question the bitterest attack on a literary man of importance ever published in America." It was into Dr. Gould's house that Hearn's library disappeared. A letter from Hearn to Ellwood Hendrick (published before, of course) explains the matter.

* * * Oh, about patronizing authors after that Chicago man's fashion, I forgot to tell you a story. You may remember I was in Philadelphia for about five months at the house of a physician named George M. Gould. This person had begged and prayed me to pass a Summer with him before I went. He told me if I ever mentioned money to him he would think it an insult; his only desire was to aid me. Really, I don't know much about Northern human nature—never did; I always take people seriously. Well, his wife, he told me at last, was jealous of his friends; she was not pleased to have me about. Of that I had good evidence. He gave me money—for I was dead broke, and said: "Go to New York and see what the Harpers can do to sending you to the tropics. Then come back and tell me." A glorious friend! I told him: "Alden has my books, worth $2,500; I can't take them from him just now, but later on I will get you to get them from him, and give him this letter" (which I left with him). "All right," he said, "when you want money on those books I'll be glad to let you have it. And my home is your home." Splendid fellow! I gave him a note of hand for the small sum he loaned me.

As soon as I got to New York I found a letter from him telling me he could never see me at his house again, but that as I had done some literary work for him he could lend me a little more ($20). At last I was forced on this Japan expedition. As soon as I left New York he sent the letter to Alden without waiting for news from me and got the books. From Japan I wrote him to do so, only after he had already done it without my knowledge. On application for some of them by mail he wrote that our correspondence was over, sending me a volume for which he charged postage. And he never even returned my notes in lieu of which I had asked him to take the books and settle the debt—trusting to his honor. So I paid dearly for that patronage. "Bitter," saith the Italian proverb, "is another man's bread." Isn't this sort of thing enough to disgust one with Western civilization?

This is Hearn's side of the matter. Any one who desires to go deeper into this question may be referred to "Hearn and His Biographers." That Hearn was mistreated by the late doctor there is no doubt; that he on his side was a difficult person to have as a guest there is no doubt, either. Mr. Lewis's book, beautifully printed and with several excellent facsimiles of letters, is an instructive and interesting addition to Hearniana.

Brief Reviews

turning of interest in philately to educational use. It is a subject upon which he is so enthusiastic that he asserts several times that a liberal education can be obtained by intensive study of postage stamps. Doubtless much can be conceded to—and even forgiven—the ardent pursuer of a hobby, but for him thus to mistake the possession of a large number and great variety of miscellaneous facts for the long process and complicated results meant by the term "liberal education" is really going a little too far. Still, Mr. Rothschild is doing an excellent and fruitful work in showing the philatelists, young and old, how they can make their collections a source of intellectual interest and a potent inspiration to intellectual curiosity.

Mr. Rothschild, who has been collecting and studying stamps for thirty years, has managed his specimens and his theme with very considerable skill. Apparently, the book is an adaptation of his lectures to the printed page. Collecting a great quantity of stamps into about fifty different groups, with each group illustrative of some one special subject, he has filled a page—the book is of large quarto size—with reproductions of the stamps illustrating that particular theme. Then in a page or two of text he describes the stamps and points out their historical, economic or political significance. Thus, for example, there are pages devoted to stamps that are interesting because their pictures deal with astronomy, or bird life, or history, or ships, or sports, or animals, or sculpture, or music, or archaeology, or heraldry, or industry, or agriculture.

In his introductory chapter Mr. Rothschild, taking the regular 2-cent stamp of this country with its picture of Washington, makes over a dozen suggestions of ways in which it can be made to yield a great amount of widely varied information.

HISTORY OF ANATOMY

ANATOMY. By George W. Corner, M. D. Illustrated. 82 pp. Volume III of Clio Medica, a series of primers on the History of Medicine. Edited by E. B. Krumbhaar, M. D. New York: Paul B. Hoeber, Inc. $1.50.

IN his preface Dr. Krumbhaar, general editor of this series of little handbooks, explains that its aim is to present in each volume "the story of some individualized phase of the history of medicine" in a form that will be compact but reasonably complete, short and readable enough to hold the interest alike of the intelligent layman, the medical student and the busy physician and so authoritative as to repay each one for the time spent on the reading of a book that is small enough to be carried in his pocket ready for the odd moments. The author, Dr. Corner, who is Professor of Anatomy in the University of Rochester, begins his rapid survey of the history of anatomy with the work of the Greeks and carries it down to the present day, devoting a final chapter to current trends in anatomy, which he ends with the statement that "The problems of human structure demand for their solution all the resources of science." There is a five-page list of sources in modern languages.

RUSSIAN AGRICULTURE DURING THE WAR by A.N.ANTSIFEROV AND A.D.BILIMOVICH

The World War broke upon Russia at a time when she was already facing momentous internal changes. The land settlement was in process, designed to transform the status of the peasantry and alter the whole social organization of the country. This volume describes the conditions which brought about the reform, explains the radical changes which took place in the agricultural system, and points to the almost insurmountable difficulties imposed on the program by the War. In this penetrating survey, these authors, with first-hand knowledge, contribute much to our understanding of the complex situation in Russia today.

"Prosperity Street" and Some Other Works of Fiction

PROSPERITY STREET. By Barnaby Brook. 308 pp. New York: Minton, Balch & Co. $2.50

HERE is a portrait of a modern statesman, a man who, without actual greatness of mind or character, attains great position. Frank Peyton's rise from a warehouse clerkship to the Prime Ministry was accomplished partly through sacrifice, and not only the ordinary sacrifices demanded of all specialists, the subordination of their preferences and avocations to the advancement of their major interests. The lives and ambitions of other persons, as well, were sometimes crushed in the path of Frank Peyton's career. Yet Peyton was fundamentally a kindly man, a generous friend and a fairly honest and disinterested public servant. The apparent ruthlessness of his life was largely unconscious on his own part. Certain values to be obtained from life appeared to him to be essential and other values, less necessary, had to be relinquished. It was almost as if his own destiny had laid upon him an obligation—an obligation as unobtrusive and inexorable as the physical laws of nature and no more susceptible to compromise.

If there is an issue of right or wrong involved in Frank Peyton's career, it is implied here, rather than stated. Mr. Brook has set down the facts and has left the reader to interpret them as he will. In this, his artistic conscience has guided him well. One may feel that Peyton would have been a greater man, at certain moments of his life, if he had not allowed his ambition to stand in the way of the happiness of others. One may feel that he would have been a lesser man if the plan of his life had been more flexible. But, whatever one's reaction, the problem of Frank Peyton's career acquires for us an additional artistic significance and a greater strength and reality because of the discretion with which Mr. Brook has stated it.

Prosperity Street was a mean road of narrow, cramped houses, in a growing industrial city of the north of England. Yet Frank Peyton, at 23, found it a friendly place, and comfortable enough. He had just been graduated from his clerkship to a post as editorial assistant on a decaying county newspaper, and he was afire with ambition, and dramatically conscious of his important mission to the public. At Mrs. Gallus's boarding house in Prosperity Street, Frank met and fell romantically in love with a young woman as idealistic as himself. In the meantime, his own lively talents, and his fortunate business connections, had enabled him to acquire a controlling interest in the newspaper. He built it into an influential political organ, and from that, it was only a short step to actual participation in county politics. Joan, who had expected him to adopt a literary career, viewed with growing uneasiness Frank's translation into a public figure. Her misgivings were explained at the time of her deliberate disappearance. She was the daughter of a notorious murderess, and her marriage with Frank would seriously damage his political future.

For the first time Frank was faced with a choice. He could leave his own affairs, which were rapidly growing in importance, and spend what money he had accumulated in seeking out Joan. Or he could accept her decision as wise and final. A seat in Parliament loomed in the immediate future, and so, in spite of the depth of his passion for Joan, Frank remained at his post. His enterprises were crowned with a quite precocious success. In time he became a Cabinet Minister, and cemented his position by a marriage with the daughter of an immensely wealthy manufacturer. The second crisis of his life is precipitated by Joan Agnew's return. Frank, still romantically in love with the girl who represents the best of his youth, realizes also that she is in love with him. His position is now impregnable, and he is slated for the Prime Ministry, but his success has begun to seem dry and tasteless. His decision this time, less selfishly determined, demonstrates, not actual greatness, perhaps, but a measure of superior capacity and steadfastness.

Mr. Brook has drawn an excellent and compelling portrait of Frank Peyton. He is presented fully and without bias, and the reader will find him no more, and no less sympathetic than such a personage might be in actual life. The narrative itself has movement and color. Quite apart from the problem which it contains, "Prosperity Street" justifies its existence on its merits as a lively and readable story.

COCKTAIL IN HAND

PARTIES. By Carl Van Vechten. 260 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $2.50.

IT is probably no accident that the publishers have failed to write a blurb for Mr. Van Vechten's latest novel. To speak favorably of it with even a feigned sense of conviction would have proved a difficult job. For the man who once in "Peter Whiffle" and once again in "Nigger Heaven" proved himself a bright and deft entertainer has in "Parties" written a book as unsavory and sniggering as it is dull. It is something of a shock that a man so well acquainted with the arts as Mr. Van Vechten should so far have forgotten himself as to spin out this tasteless and specious tale. For he has done something worse than kill our enjoyment by repeating a worn-out formula once too often; aware, rather, that the formula needed refurbishing, he has stripped it of all reserves and carried it to a most unpleasant extreme.

"Parties," in accordance with his usual formula, is a novel about a group of people constantly seeking fresh thrills and diversions, a group with free morals and free manners, drifting through days and nights of speakeasies and night clubs and impromptu parties. They are either people with no occupations in life at all or with strange and picturesque ones: a dancer, an actress, a gigolo, a taxi-driver, a speakeasy proprietor, a septuagenarian old German countess with a vigorous love of life, and an assortment of unhappily and unsteadily married couples. None of them is practically ever sober; one or two attempt to paint the lily by adding dope to drink. They form erotic attachments which lead in most cases to either insipid farce or half-hearted wrangling and in one case to violent melodrama.

Such a group as Mr. Van Vechten has gathered together is not at all new to contemporary literature; but in the past, in one way or another, it has given us successful novels. Mr. Van Vechten himself has proved that such people in such a milieu, when treated with a light and clever touch, can make highly entertaining reading. Others have made the same kind of people the targets for satire full of point. Still others have made of their unhappy and unnatural lives a symbol of our disillusioned post-war existence, and by letting the bottom drop out of all their pleasures, brought us to grips with a problem that cannot easily be sidestepped. But Mr. Van Vechten has done none of these things with "Parties." His bright easy touch has deserted him, skillful invention has failed him, and for 260 pages a crowd of the dullest people imaginable wander in and out of rooms with cocktails in their hands, stupidly wisecracking, insincerely attitudinizing, disingenuously smirking and hinting at vice and debauchery. And how unreal they are, as either people or symbols! None of them ever has a real impulse, a real problem, a real bewilderment.

And it is for this reason that one finds Mr. Van Vechten needlessly frivolous and vulgar and unsavory where, making an almost identical use of such material, Aldous Huxley would be acquitted. Mr. Van Vechten shows signs, here and there, of trying to paint a picture with the same significance as Huxley's. But there is the profoundest difference between the two men. Both, no doubt, draw exaggerated pictures of a rudderless and decadent life; but Huxley reveals a seriousness of purpose which Van Vechten never does, and his exaggeration is an imaginative extension of truth where Van Vechten's is a frivolous extension of fancy. But there is an even more significant difference between the two men: in Huxley's novels his âmes égarées are people with brains, with nerves, with egos, however maladjusted all these things may be; the people in "Parties" are so many pasteboard rabbits whose excesses, far from horrifying our minds, merely offend our tastes. Mr. Huxley's people may take licenses, but he takes none with them himself; we may question his point of view but not his integrity. So much cannot be said for Mr. Van Vechten. In an attempt to hold the reader's attention he has stooped, time and again in this book, to a cheap suggestiveness. As always, too, he makes lavish use of his up-to-the-minute knowledge of plays and songs and music and dances to give a note of social culture to his people and their surroundings; but these things, at best, only provide a deceptively tempting sauce for yesterday's fish.

AN UNCONVINCING IMPOSTOR

THE TRIUMPHANT FOOTMAN. By Edith Olivier. 303 pp. New York: The Viking Press. $2.50.

AFTER two books outstanding for their delicacy, pathos and finesse, Miss Olivier has, in "The Triumphant Footman," made an attempt at humor that is not very humorous and an attempt at fantastic adventure that is seldom better than boring. In spite of this, she has created one character, not her main one, which is remarkable and which redeems the book.

When the story opens Alphonse Biskin is footman to Captain and Mrs. Lemaur, English people who live in Florence. Mrs. Lemaur, a hypochondriac, is petted and fussed over by her husband, guarded from annoyance by her maid and served in every capacity by Alphonse. Mrs. Lemaur's fretful inadequacy in every situation makes her the only real personage in the story and her death, after which Alphonse is launched on further adventures with her money, marks the end of the best part of the story.

Alphonse's first adventure is to go to a large affair arranged for Señor Ortez of the Spanish Museum. He goes disguised as Señor Ortez, who has been detained. Every one is enchanted with the manners and charm of the supposed Ortez, so that when the real man appears he is taken for an impostor and treated very rudely indeed. When the mistake is discovered Alphonse is the first to lead in a police hunt for the gang of gem robbers who must surely have been behind an attempt to introduce some unknown villain as Señor Ortez.

The footman's second adventure comes when the Lemaur family is passing its yearly holiday in England. He joins the chorus of the operetta "Ruddigore," in order to be near the leading lady and is allowed to make love to her, only to discover afterward that it is not the leading lady whom he has been kissing but her understudy.

On the death of Captain Lemaur Alphonse becomes the widow's secretary and on her death he inherits her money and furniture. Assuming the title of Vicomte de Beaujeu he starts life over again in England as a nobleman, running into members of the real family of de Beaujeu, one of whom he marries.

So on, through practically unrelated incidents, this impostor is always audacious, suave, vulgar and compelling. Unfortunately he is not nearly so compelling for the reader as he is for other characters in the book and one finishes the story with the feeling that this is too absurd to be believed and too monotonous to be enjoyed without being believed. Which is a shame, because Miss Olivier previously has shown herself a writer of unusual ability and even in this has flashes that make one wish the entire book had been about the very possible Mrs. Lemaur, instead of the very impossible Alphonse.

Mrs. Lemaur wears her evening dress under her negligee all day long so that when it is time to dress for dinner she will be spared the tiring effort it would take to dress completely over again. She > * * * washed her hands in the little basin which had been brought to her, but this was the limit of her ablutions. As she said, one does not get really dirty lying all day upon the sofa. Moreover, it tired her to wash too often, or too completely.

Miscellaneous Books in Brief Review

ENGLISH, PAST AND PRESENT. By Janet Rankin Aiken. Introduction by George Philip Krapp. 287 pp. New York: The Ronald Press Company. $3.

IF you open Mrs. Aiken's book at Page 11 and read her modest but convinced defense of the locution "ain't I," you may, if you are a stickler for "pure English," be so offended that you will shut the volume and refuse to have anything more to do with it. And then you would be very greatly the loser, for her spirit throughout the book is as independent and her viewpoint as fresh as in this one instance. Moreover, her pages attest a rich and sound scholarship. But the particularly interesting qualities of her study of the English language are the vitality which she imparts by her emphasis upon its immediate past as explanatory of its present state and her insistence upon the necessity of understanding the forces which are constantly changing and developing it and keeping it a living, vigorous speech. In as many sections she considers the English language as a whole, its component words, its sounds, its inflections and syntax. She does not offer any new material or facts, but her attitude toward her subject is novel, modern, sometimes a bit daring, and her treatment is fresh and zestful.

Some portions of the book, especially those that discuss the origin, growth and obsolescence of words, have the interest of human stories, so clearly does the author, who is an instructor in English in Columbia University, show such birth and death to reflect human interests. Thus, speaking of the fate of names for horse-drawn vehicles, she asks:

> What American under 40 years of age can describe accurately a stanhope, a victoria, a gig, a chaise, or even a surrey or a buggy? Sulky has remained with horse racing, and coupé has been transferred to the realm of motor vehicles. The others seem to be dead.

The obsolescence of words, when a whole group of them disappear together, as has happened many times in the history of English speech, is especially illuminating, she notes, for it always means the complete change of some mode of life or of the temper and ideals of a whole people.

While the volume is intended especially for use as a textbook, the general reader interested in the study of the English language will find it well worth his attention.

HUMAN BENEFACTORS

PIONEERS OF PUBLIC HEALTH. By M. E. M. Walker. Illustrated. 262 pp. Edinburgh: Oliver & Boyd. 12s 6d net.

THROUGH this study of the lives of twenty-one pioneers in public health, Mrs. Walker hopes to interest the passer-by in a group of men whose careers, however closely they have affected the lives of all of us, are little known in comparison with some more spectacular. Thomas Sydenham, regarded as the "founder of English medicine," is not well known, for example, but he laid the foundations of the modern science of epidemiology. He was the first to study the progress and actual symptoms of the epidemics which in his day were so inexplicable and destructive. His great work on the "Method of Curing Fevers" contained a complete record of the epidemics in London between 1661 and 1675, including the year of the Great Plague. The famous Dutch physician, Boerhaave, "is said to have held his name in such high regard that he doffed his hat every time it was mentioned."

Johan Peter Frank (1745-1821) laid the foundations of modern hygiene in Europe. The work of Edward Jenner in stamping out smallpox is fairly well known to the public, but its importance can hardly be overestimated. In the use of the principle of immunization he was a full century ahead of his time, though he was in the dark as to the true nature of the disease.

Sir John Pringle (1707-1782) was a pioneer in military hygiene, and through his influence was first established the custom of regarding hospitals as neutral territory in time of war. Much the same work was accomplished for the navy by James Lind, for twenty years physician to his Majesty's Royal Hospital at Haslau, who succeeded by means of diet and hygiene in eliminating the plague of scurvy.

The early nineteenth century saw a great advance in the science of preventive medicine. The registration of vital statistics was seen to be necessary to any real coping with the problem. In England Thomas Chadwick brought about the passage of the births and deaths registration act in 1836, and the founding of the first Board of Health. In the United States Lemuel Shattuck was a pioneer in the same line.

The work of Pasteur in the development of the germ theory and the science of immunization, and that of Lister in antiseptic surgery have deeply affected every department of modern life. Walter Reed's experiments with yellow fever and the work of General Gorgas in eliminating it from the Canal Zone make a story that cannot be told too often. A fine bibliography gives opportunity to those readers who may be inspired to know more of the men whose lives are here briefly summarized.

BURROUGHS'S RELIGION

THE RELIGION OF JOHN BURROUGHS. By Clifford Hazeldine Osborne. 105 pp. Boston: Houghton Miflin Company. $1.25.

DURING John Burroughs's long life of literary production there were many readers who looked askance at him because of his opposition to organized Christianity and his scoffing attitude toward the activities of theology. Mr. Osborne thinks that this feeling against him still persists, notwithstanding a better general knowledge of his ideas and the very great relaxation there has been almost everywhere in convictions, ideas and sentiments concerning religion; and he has therefore written this cogent little book to show that Burroughs was essentially a man of deep spirituality, somewhat pained and bewildered because he could not work out a philosophy that would account satisfactorily to him for all the facts of nature and the aspirations of man, but who did evolve for himself a practical religion as a guide for conduct.

Mr. Osborne thinks that Burroughs's early religious environment must be known and appreciated before the later evolution of his ideas can be understood. For it was, thinks the author, "largely responsible for his attitude to the church and the religion for which he considered it stood." His family and the group in a remote Catskill settlement in which he grew up were Baptists of the old school and of the severest faith and strictest discipline. His father, he said, would "no more be seen in a Methodist Church than he would in a saloon." And Mr. Osborne thinks that such an origin as this and such an outcome from it as John Burroughs became "is another historic answer to the question as to whether any good thing can come out of Nazareth."

His study of the evolution of Burroughs's thought about religion carries the author through a rapid account of his subject's youth and early manhood, the intellectual and spiritual contacts he made during those years and their influence upon him. Afterward Mr. Osborne, with insight and discrimination, follows his development spiritually rather than chronologically.

He illustrates his conclusions by copious short quotations from Burroughs's published works. His discussion is alway clear-sighted and honest and he points out, whenever he thinks it exists, his subject's failure to realize some fullness of truth. His conclusion is that "John Burroughs's religion—his quest for a completely satisfying life—gave to the world a man of simplicity and sincerity; with a teachable mind, a loving heart and an adoring spirit."

FRESH WATER LIFE

FIELD BOOK OF PONDS AND STREAMS. An Introduction to the Life of Fresh Water. By Ann Haven Morgan. Foreword by James B. Needham. Illustrated. 448 pp. Putnam's Nature Field Books Series. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.50.

AS with a magic key Dr. Morgan, who is Professor of Zoology at Mount Holyoke College, throws open a whole fairylike land crowded with busy denizens and makes her readers free of their homes, their activities and their lives. She deals with all forms of life that make their homes in fresh water, from algae to turtles and snakes and fishes, and her book is a mine of information about all of them. Its comprehensiveness, the interesting way in which its material is presented and the care which has made it throughout scientifically accurate combine to provide a fascinating guide and companion for those who wish to inform themselves on its subject. The author explains in her preface that its several chapters have been read by specialists on the faculties of half a dozen or more colleges and universities, so that their sanction of the book's scientific dependability stands behind her own authorship. In addition there are also general chapters on the busy, interlocking life of brooks and ponds and on how it uses its water environment and ample directions for the making of aquaria. The excellent illustrations deserve a word of praise, for there are over three hundred of them, including a great number of drawings and twenty-three page plates, some in color and others in black and white.

THE CRIPPLE'S PROBLEM

CIVILIZATION AND THE CRIPPLE. By Frederick Watson. Illustrated. 120 pp. London: John Bale Sons & Danielsson, Ltd. 10s. 6d.

A PIONEER in its study of the cripple as a social and industrial problem, Mr. Watson's survey is animated by a sympathetic and understanding spirit that never ceases to insist upon the humane basis on which that problem must be met. He is an Englishman who has long been interested in this question and for several years has been studying in Great Britain, the United States and elsewhere the diseases and the social and industrial conditions that produce cripples, both children and adults, the very great personal suffering and economic loss caused by these crippling agencies, and the ways in which the governments and the people in these several countries are trying to prevent the crippling and rehabilitate the crippled. In this book he presents the results of his studies. Six years ago he founded and has since been editing a magazine called The Cripple, in which he offers quarterly a survey of the whole international field of his theme, the causes which produce cripples, and the developments in curative and preventive measures. The book has many quotations from the magazine.

In this volume Mr. Watson first pictures the historical background of his subject in a rapid survey of ancient and more recent times, finding that although the modern attitude toward the cripple had its birth two hundred years ago, it was not until the nineteenth century was well on its way that civilization began to be conscious of the cripple as a social problem. He shows how the vast and sudden necessities of the war years forced into the background the work for crippled children and at the same time developed rehabilitating measures and social sympathy for the adult cripple. A long chapter on the education and training of the cripple sets forth present methods and results for both young and older unfortunates in Great Britain, and another deals quite fully in a similar way with preventive, curative and rehabilitating methods and measures in the United States. Mr. Watson is warmly in favor of a voluntary system of social service in the care of cripples rather than one based on State aid and control.

with puns and wise-cracks and the law of averages will see to it that some of them are funny. As for the rest, if you like your humor slapped on broadly and heavily, somewhat in the manner of vaudeville, you may find it as uproariously funny as the jacket blurb promises.

"Ex-'It'" is the confessions of Fanny Hill, who writes of her brief and stormy career as a gold digger always digging in the wrong places, with great relish and an abundance of detail, helped out by a lavish use of asterisks in the censorable paragraphs. From St. Simon's Orphan Asylum, where she learned to say 'Pees dimmy dat" at the age of 4, Fanny graduates at the age of 20, to the apartment of her mother, an erratic Countess. When the Countess's fortune is gone and her son has spent both his and Fanny's share on a new kind of elevator that will come down but won't go up, Fanny is left alone on the cruel world. Her efforts at getting on have a strange and disastrous similarity and all end by depleting her larder of eggs. But we leave her on the verge of safety.

Whether or not this book ends burlesques, as the jacket blurb suggests, we hope it will end the "Ex" books.

THREE GENERATIONS

FRANKINCENSE. By Guy Fletcher. 317 pp. New York: Edward J. Clode, Inc. $2.

IN "Frankincense" Mr. Fletcher has written a swiftly moving account of three generations, tracing the mingled characteristics of Emily and George Evans-Winsloe through their daughter, Fanny, and their grandchild, Geoffrey. More interested in his characters and the events which sweep them through life than in a psychological analysis of their reactions, he has written a story that will hold one's attention for a Summer afternoon or evening.

George, profligate in life as in love, deserts his timid young bride, leaving her at his country place in Wales, friendless and alone. He returns only when his sister Margaret informs him of his wife's death at the birth of their daughter, Fanny. Left to Margaret's care, Fanny leads the life of the average young English girl until her father returns and takes her to Africa. There she meets Jimmy Dreen of the Guards and, against her father's wishes, they return to England and are married. The rest of the book deals with their marriage, the war and Geoffrey, whose life finally avenges the wrong done Emily.

In writing of Emily, of Margaret's care of the child and of Geoffrey after he leaves school, Mr. Fletcher is at his best and his work here approaches both sincerity and simplicity. The remainder is crudely done and overburdened with English idioms and schoolboy slang.

DARK DEEDS

ALTHOUGH the action of "Emmet Thorpe" takes place in 1917, the war becomes important only as a convenient peg on which to hang the black deeds of the man we immediately recognize as the villain. For this is a novel in which the characters are as conventional as those in Italian opera and have the same unsurprising views on life and love. The plot, however, is inventive and exciting at times.

Leo Joseph lived in Chicago and as a little boy read dime novels in which his sympathies were always with the villain. Consequently, it is not surprising to find him negotiating with the Madame of a "massage parlour" to steal the plans of an airplane stabilizer for the Germans and to bring back a girl for her business at the same time. He goes to Boston and introduces himself as the erudite Mr. Vincent to a professor of languages, Dr. Abbott. There he meets the doctor's daughter, Dorcas; a handsome young lawyer, Emmet Thorpe, and the inventor he is looking for, Ralph Batchelder. Vincent leers unsuccessfully at Dorcas, but schemes to abduct her to Chicago. Then he goes to Ralph's laboratory to steal the invention. Bomb throwing and melodramatic japeries take place in quick succession. In the meantime, Emmet has been doing some secret service work in a tough part of Boston, so that he happens to be around when Vincent—completing the other half of his plan—lures Dorcas into a trap. Then, and for the rest of the book, through a crescendo of chopped-up sentences, Emmet is the god of the machine.

OLD WORLD LEGENDS

THE CHRIST OF THE FOREST. By Robert Michel. Translated by Sybil Campbell Lethbridge. 246 pp. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co., Inc. $2.50.

THE mystery of Old-World legends handed down from remote times by a simple pastoral folk permeates this beautiful story. Its author, a German poet, has wrought it from a tradition to the Böhmerwald, a great forest district in Czechoslovakia. Though the events are recounted as happening in our own day, "within the memory of men now living," the scent of the far distant past lingers as one reads.

Perhaps the special charm of this book is that the uncanny beatific influence exerted by a boy dressed like the Messiah, appearing, among a shrewd peasantry, on the back of a cow, is rationally explained. There really is no mystery in this, or in the "miracle" the boy performed, if one is but casually familiar with morbid pathology. It is simply the tragic and, happily, rare case of a child sedulously preserved from contact with the world, brought up by a demented mother in the belief that he is the Christ reincarnate. Delusions of a pathological "case" are far more real to the deluded than the realities of the sane. But the phenomenon of this deluded child of an insane mother holds a deeper mystery, like certain conjurers' tricks which, when their mechanism is laid bare, still savor of the magical. It is the allegorical undermeaning that captures the imagination.

Marie, daughter of a charcoal burner living in a remote part of the mountains, sees her father in his death agony. She calls despairingly on the Saviour, her piercing cries echoing through the woodland solitude in vain. The shock caused by the old man's death results in religious mania. However, Balthasar Huber, a smithy worker in the nearest village, loves the girl and persuades her to marry him. Before the marriage Marie has a vision which she interprets as a divine visitation, though the reality happens to be a neurotic misanthrope, an artist named Christian who, abandoning all hope of a career, wanders about the world a wretched outcast. Overcome with remorse at taking a shameful advantage, Christian flees. Marie, on awakening from her trance, is convinced that she will bear the Saviour. Only a Joseph is lacking. Balthasar is persuaded to fill this rôle, becoming a husband in name only. In due time a son is born to Marie in the stable where all has been arranged to duplicate the biblical scene of the Nativity.

The strange life of Marie's child, secretly baptized with the name of Jesus, forms the theme of a tale in which mysticism and realism are commingled in a setting of wild nature. A poetic story in which the horror of a starkly tragic climax is redeemed by great delicacy of treatment.

A COMEDY OF BAD MANNERS

THIS month's book by Compton Mackenzie is very funny. In fact, it is, in spots, hilariously funny. The humor concerns the misadventures of a group of rather seedy in-laws who are presented with an English country house. That all was not utterly serene might be anticipated. But the episodes in their comedy of bad manners are so masterfully developed that only the uncharitable will complain of the malice in much of the humor and the age of many of the situations.

It all began, as so many things do, when John Touchwood decided to marry his pretty secretary. John, a prosperous romantic playwright and until then the family's good provider, had got pretty sick of the lot of his relatives. So he gave them his house, to have and to hold jointly. There was his elder brother, James, a rather embittered critic of beautiful letters, his patiently uncomprehending wife, Beatrice, and his dog, Beyle. Then there was his sister, Hilda, who had a son called Harold, the platonic idea of an offensively precocious brat. In the company also was a brother-in-law who had given up the ministry to go on the stage, drifted toward the writing of religious drama and finally got bogged for a time in spiritualism. George, another brother, could not rise before noon, knitted and lived largely upon his wife's salary as an actress. Little Frida, son of the pompous drifting clergyman, was in the gallery, too.

But the catalysts were Bertam and Viola, two of the most engagingly Satanic youngsters in print. Their father and mother were George and the actress, so they found a good deal of leisure from authority for their undertakings. These always got other people into trouble, and before the period of nearly a year that they all spent at Ambles together was over they had practically made the house untenable. In their schemes they were abetted by their uncle, Hugh.

From the day they all moved in there was discord, and the blame might not always be laid at the door of Bertram and Viola. Hugh and George decided to raise pigs. That caused some consternation when one of the pigs visited various bedrooms at what might be called an early hour. When the ex-parson took up spiritualism his seances reached their climax on the day that Harold was reported lost, and his reappearance at a crucial moment gave an unexpected validity to the experiment. On another occasion private theatricals arranged by Bertram and Viola evoked more melodrama in the audience than on the stage. But the finest scene of all was staged on the day that John returned to Ambles to find out how his relatives were getting along.

MONTMARTRE ALLEYS

THE BLACK VENUS. By Andre Salmon. Translated by Slater Brown. 293 pp. New York: The Macaulay Company. $2.50.

BEFORE reading "The Black Venus" it is necessary to glance at the preface by Robert Coates; otherwise the reader will find himself wandering aimlessly among the back alleys of Montmartre, stumbling into a rubber plantation owned by Mederic Bouthor, who wears a Mexican hat and keeps a black slave. In another alley he will find Septime Febur, a religious poet who wears a top hat; a sordid beggar and a little girl called Leontine. In the same neighborhood will appear two painters, Sorgue and Paroli. On any street he will run into Mumu, the solicitor, or Paul Darneting, a German poet, some prostitutes and Florimond Daubelle. He will wonder why Leontine should commit suicide and Mumu be stabbed to death; why Darneting should join the Foreign Legion and the slave be thrown naked into the street. However, the preface explains that Sorgue is Picasso, and Paroli, Derain. Darneting is the German poet Wedekind, and Septime, Max Jacob; while Florimond Daubelle is the author.

Reading this book is like looking at a painting by the newer school; in endeavoring to find a scheme you stumble into details, well drawn, but the plot remains forever elusive; it cannot be said to be a novel, and unfortunately those characters that would make it interesting as a biography are scantily drawn. So call the book a page from the life of a group of prominent people, and, while you are not being disgusted, be entertained.

PORTRAIT OF A GENIUS

WHOEVER is concealed beneath the pseudonym of Mary Westmacott may well feel proud of "Giants' Bread." The blurb lends mystery to Miss Westmacott's identity. She has written half a dozen successful books under her own name, it says, but they have been so different from "Giants' Bread" that she decided to have it "judged on its own merits and not in the light of previous success." Who she is does not matter, for her book is far above the average of current fiction, in fact, comes well under the classification of a "good book." And it is only a satisfying novel that can claim that appellation. In "Giants'

Mr. Norris Wrestles With a Social Problem

SEED"—"a novel of birth control"—is in what some one has called the brick-and-mortar tradition. Certainly it seems the product of a very patient trowel rather than that of a flowing pen. It is a roman à thèse, but not offensively so, for there is no preaching in it that does not spring from the point of view of one character or another. Nevertheless, in spite of the absence of the soap box, it leaves one with the impression that Charles G. Norris got his situation first, and then cast about him for suitable characters to plod through it. The result is that, while most of the motivations are plausible, they are often simply adumbrated, and the reader is more or less forced to be his own dramatist. And in one special instance, which occurs at the crucial point of the book, Mr. Norris decamps as dramatist entirely, and leaves it up to his reader to choose one of two possible motivations, either one of which would be in character. One might say that this is small loss, provided one brings imagination to the novel, were it not that the esthetic effect is greatly weakened. It is like looking at a drawing in which the artist has left out some necessary strokes: one concentrates on the vacancy and thereby loses the effect of the whole.

The lapse occurs when Bart, husband of Peggy, gets into conversation with a woman who is managing editor of a popular magazine. Bart had come on from California to New York ten years previous to this conversation, his eye upon the market for manuscript and his heart set upon his bride of a week. He had already sold a few stories to Crosby's, and he gets a job on the magazine almost upon his arrival. At that time Mildred Bransome is not managing editor: she rises to that eminence after Bart has left for the more opulent post of art editor of a shoe magazine. When Bart encounters her on the train to Port Washington he is in a state of despair. His second novel had been turned down by publisher after publisher during the war years; he has five children on his hands; and Peggy, a Roman Catholic who takes the attitude of her Church on the subject of birth control with the utmost seriousness, has as little faith in her husband's ability as a writer as she has a fervent belief in the sanctified inevitability of God's will in the matter of offspring. Incidentally, Peggy believes in an impossible self-control in the sexual relationship.

Bart, of course, is ready to be disturbed, and Mildred disturbs him. She talks to him about his talent, and he promises to call her up and talk over a serial for Crosby's. When he gets home to Peggy he fails to mention the meeting with Mildred on the train, and it is here that the weakening lacuna in the structure of the novel becomes apparent. Either Bart didn't refer to the encounter because he had a subconscious wish to philander with Mildred or he remained silent because Peggy had hurt him by refusing to take his literature seriously. The talk with Mildred having been about literature, he might have kept a sore subject under his hat. But Mr. Norris skims over all this, and we are left to flounder.

Otherwise, the story has undoubted merits—its author's patience, knowledge of his California background (fully one-half the action, that dealing with Bart's forebears and first marriage, takes place in the fruit country), and entire willingness to deal honestly and unflinchingly with a subject that Anthony Comstock liked to think of as strictly taboo. All aspects of the problem of fecundity are touched upon, for all of Bart's relatives—his Roman Catholic mother (who wears herself out with a brood of nine); his Margaret Sanger of a cousin, his priest brother, and his two very rational mistresses — have differing viewpoints. His uncle, Peter Farnsworth, gives a tubercular line to the world: birth control would have profited much in his particular case. On the other hand, brother Gill has only one child, and when she is taken away from him he loses all real desire for life. If a moral is to be extracted from the story it is this: Birth control is a two-edged sword.

The characters of "Seed" are all appealing, and that is why one is not satisfied to know them only sketchily. From Old Dan Carter, Bart's blustery, dominating father, to Peggy, his ardent, religious wife, they present real, troublesome lives. One wishes that Mr. Norris had made them live more intensely within the regions of their own thought. As it is, the author depends too much on environmental detail.

Ten New Books of Poetry

Howe has not only so reasoned but he has put his argument to the test. "Yankee Ballads" is a collection of eleven of Mr. Howe's experiments, with two short pieces without "foundation" added for good measure. In the back of the book will be found the historical warrant for the poetic fabrication. The historical pieces are too long for quotation, but we append the author's own addendum, "The Ascent of Parnassus," in this case "Via the Public Garden," that spot of grass and flowers adjacent to Boston's famous Common.

Upon a sunny bench he sat
One morning in a public park—
Ragged and old, with shoes and hat
That must have dated from the Ark.

And could it be? Yes, in his hand
The tattered graybeard held a book!
"Lo, how enlightened is our land!"
I said, and bent my look

To note what mine of hidden truth
He quarried in a vein so deep:—
'Twas just a Primer, and, forsooth,
The poor old chap was fast asleep.

The modest volume is decorated with amusing sketches in black and white.

Poems From the Ranges. By Charles Erskine Scott Wood. Frontispiece Cut on Wood by Ray Bornton. 32 pp. San Francisco: The Lantern Press. Edition limited to 500 copies.

A poet as American as the percentage demanded by orators is Charles Erskine Scott Wood. As readers know, he did one long symphonic piece devoted to national themes. Love of his country and high hopes for its mission in the family of nations he has voiced in lofty verse. Today he turns to a more circumscribed field: the poetry of the Western ranges.

Mr. Wood's verse, in this little collection, has two themes—the human side of the ranger and the vastness of nature. And the two mingle, as in actuality they must; man roused intellectually and emotionally by his contact with nature in her grandeur, and that grandeur as seen through the eyes of man. This epitaph illustrates these commingled themes. It is of the place and the scene. The Eastern poet, working by the lamp, could not do it. It springs from the great West, and from the heart of one long a dweller there.

Lay me on the hill-top, close to the sky;
Among the lava rocks let me lie,
Where I've lain in my blanket on the ground;
The big, brown empty desert all around,
And heard the coyote's crazy howl and cry.
There is the place I want to lie.
I shall not see the slow and lonesome moon;
But still there will be moonlight; still there will be noon.
I shall not hear the furious hoofs, the neigh
Of the wild stallions in their play.
Asleep on the hill-top, next to the sky;
There is the place I want to lie.

It is useful to have native verse come from those parts of the country where the course of civilization is rapidly changing former habits and earlier ideas and attitudes, and even affecting, however gradually, the face of nature herself. Charles Erskine Scott Wood has made a contribution to the poetry of a period.

Fifty Poems. By Lord Dunsany. 56 pp. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $1.50.

In the half-hundred short poems by Lord Dunsany there is a touch of genuineness that is most pleasing and to no small degree offsets the lack of strong poetic fervor. Lord Dunsany has long been known as a playwright. To write drama that shall hold the stage demands on the part of the dramatist a scarcely definable something that may best be characterized as an instinct for humanity. The playwright touches the string of the human harp and it responds without knowing exactly why. This is what Lord Dunsany does in his "Fifty Poems." The reader finds a response evoked within him.

Lord Dunsany has not confined his muse to the boundaries of England and Ireland, and the piece captioned "Under Mount Monadnock" will come nearest to American readers.

Like a flame the maple blazes with the oak leaves;
All in windless weather the huge apples fall.
Sunset and twilight: birches haunt the evening,
Walking in the wild wood slender and tall.

High above the splendor mightily Monadnock
Sleeps in starry spaces, dreaming of his reign,
Long since a monarch holy to the Indians,
Waiting for his people to come home again.

In thy starry spaces be at ease, Monadnock,
Many a busy city leaves no stone or track:
All our speed and progress have Egypt for a warning;
Over mossy girders the old folk come back.

The Collected Poems of Gerald Gould. 256 pp. New York: Brewer & Warsen (formerly Payson & Clarke, Ltd.) $3.

It is a pleasure to have collected into a single volume the work of that gifted poet, Gerald Gould. Born in Yorkshire, educated at Oxford, sometime university lecturer and of late years engaged in the practice of journalism (as they say in his country), Mr. Gould is English through and through, steeped in the high tradition of English poetry and fired with the high resolve to carry on that tradition.

There is in this volume more of packed-in beauty than has come between covers in many a day; there is verse that is well-nigh flawless in its perfection; there is true emotion, delicate perception, and everywhere flashes of that light not on land or on sea which signifies beyond peradventure the presence of the true poet. So widely is Gould's poetry already known that, at the risk of quoting the already familiar, the reviewer cannot, nevertheless, omit a piece at least so short as "The Search."

O searching hands and questing feet
And love and longing still denied,
There is not any hour complete
Nor any season satisfied!
The running winds of springtime call
For culmination and repose,
And Autumn, letting roses fall,
Calls for the Spring that brings the rose!

Those not yet acquainted with the work of this major contemporary poet, perhaps eventually to be reckoned among England's major lyricists of whatever period, should not let this volume pass unheeded.

Hemlock Wall. By Frances M. Frost. The Yale Series of Younger Poets. 36 pp. New Haven: Yale University Press. $1.25.

Writing with a rare combination of conciseness and color, Frances Frost succeeds in packing much thought and significance into a small space and at the same time leaving the reader with the sense of having been in the presence of something exquisitely refined and delicately beautiful. This is well illustrated by the poem called, with gentle irony, "Carnal."

Brain that color shuttled through
One day will be quiet,
Glacial darkness enter in
Where was ache and riot;

Heart that shook its prison bars,
Though yet confined, be still,
Blind to twilight-fingers drawn
Across the wooded hill;

Feet that followed underbrush
Early year and late,
Be set forever on a road
Narrow, dark and straight;

And sun-brown flesh go down to lie
Gleamless, beauty-bare,
Till bladed hand again shall grasp
The blue and amber air.

Miss Frost seems to be of the stuff of which poets are made. And this is something quite different from mere ability to versify, using the stuff of which poems are made.

THE OTHER HALF
by CHARLES FRANCIS COE

HERE'S how they live
. . . between killings!

This morning's paper reports last night's "ride", yesterday's bombing, corruption, booze-running, racketeering. You read and you wonder. How can they get away with it? What went on before . . . during . . . after? How does The Other Half live?

THE OTHER HALF is a novel with bombshell disclosures that will triple the interest of every newspaper you read. Here is the millionaire "gangdustrialist", at work and at play, living, loving, killing. Here is the newspaperman who knew too much for his own good; the crime investigation-committee made fools and tools by the criminals themselves; the country estate, illumined by flood lights and equipped like an arsenal. The home life of a man who mocks all home life! The debauches of a money-drunk Nero of the mobs!

THE OTHER HALF will leave you wide-eyed and dry-lipped, but it will give you your first authentic, unsentimentalized understanding of America's biggest problem. Drama, sardonic humor and action every minute, it is a novel that will make a national sensation!

News and Views of Literary London

LONDON.

SCARCELY a week passes without a mention of some new biography finding its way into this letter. So prolific, however, are our publishers in this field that these sporadic references constantly need supplementing by grouped notes of new and forthcoming memoirs. To start with collected essays, we have recently had M. E. M. Walker's "Pioneers of Public Health" (Oliver), consisting of twenty-one biographical studies and ranging from Sydenham to Gorgas. Keith Feiling's "Sketches in Nineteenth Century Biography" (Longmans) will begin with Pitt and continue through the Lake Poets and Newman to Disraeli and Curzon. A posthumous volume of Dr. J. Horace Round's "Family Origins and Other Studies" (Constable) contains both constructive and destructive work. The destructive includes pungent criticism of the alleged genealogy of certain well-known families.

Among separate lives, Elizabeth Haldane's "Mrs. Gaskell" (Hodder) promises to be especially attractive, for it will contain some hitherto unpublished letters relating to Charlotte Brontë and Florence Nightingale. Sidney Dark has completed a monograph on "Robert Louis Stevenson: the Troubled Covenanter" (Hodder). Father G. F. Lahey's memoir of "Gerard Manley Hopkins" (Oxford Press) is an excellent introduction to the poetical work of his subject. Ernest Newman declared the other day that musical biography had as yet "hardly emerged out of the nursery stage," but he made an exception in favor of Professor C. S. Terry, who had set before us "the highest ideal of thoroughness and scrupulousness," bringing the methods of historical science in general to bear upon the unearthing of facts. Professor Terry's latest book, "John Christian Bach" (Oxford Press) is more than a biography, for it presents a complete picture of the musical life of London in the middle of the eighteenth century. A sister art will be presented in Gordon Craig's "Henry Irving," promised by Dent for October. Subject and author will be well matched in the life which Clough Williams-Ellis has undertaken to write of Sir Laurence Weaver, who did so much to promote the application of the arts to everyday life.

EXTRACTS from an unpublished journal kept by young Penn while in Ireland under his father's displeasure will be a feature of M. L. Brailsford's "The Making of William Penn" (Longmans). "The Lion of the North" (Hodder), by Sir George MacMunn, will record the career of Gustavus Adolphus. The next volume in the Curiosities of Politics Series will be a study by G. F. Malcolm Smith of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, a typical representative of the old diplomacy. J. A. Spender has written for Cassell's a life of Sir Robert Hudson, whose work for the Red Cross in the World War entitled him to remembrance. Denis Gwynn's "Edward Martyn and the Irish Revival" (Cape) will tell the story of the first President of Sinn Fein. The life of "J. George Adami" (Constable), by his widow, is a memorial of a many-sided and charming personality. Adami was for twenty-two years Professor of Pathology at McGill. "The Friend of Shelley" (Cobden-Sanderson), by Harold J. Massingham, depicts that enigmatic character, Edward John Trelawny.

Colonel G. L. P. Henderson's "Complete Course of Practical Flying" (Hamilton) was published on the day he was killed in the Kent air disaster. . . . The latest literary fake is a spurious war diary of the Prince of Wales, which is being hawked around London publishing offices. . . . "For Joan of Arc" (Sheed) consists of essays by nine members of the French Academy to demonstrate to Englishmen what Joan now means to France. . . . Successful short-story writers, according to Michael Joseph, have the art of becoming intimate with their readers in the first few lines. The reader feels that he is being told a story, not being forced to listen to it.

IN "The Metres of English Poetry" (Methuen) Enid Homer traces the development of the whole range of metres and metrical forms. Its elucidation of the technics of blank verse is especially valuable. . . . The relations between the scientific and the esthetic criticism of Shakespeare are discussed by Professor Lascelles Abercrombie in "A Plea for the Liberty of Interpreting" (Milford). . . . Professor Caroline F. E. Spurgeon's "Leading Motives in the Imagery of Shakespeare's Tragedies" (Milford) is an original and suggestive contribution to Shakespeare literature. . . . In preparing an edition of Sir Walter Scott's letters, W. M. Parker has been collating the originals with Lockhart's "Life" and finds that the sense of a phrase or sentence has often been transformed by careless and inaccurate transcription. . . . "Novels and Novelists" (Constable) is a collection of literary criticisms by the late Katherine Mansfield which appeared in the Athenaeum in 1919-20.

"The Village Book" (Cape), by Henry Williamson, consists of essays and sketches reflecting the life of the Devon countryside through Winter and Spring. Its author is at work on a sequel, "The Laboring Life," covering the Summer and Fall. . . . "The French at Home" (Methuen) is by Philip Carr, the Paris correspondent of The Manchester Guardian and The Observer. . . . "Sligo" (Wishart), by Jack B. Yeats, is a collection of word-pictures illustrating the life of the day in an Irish small town.

HERBERT W. HORWILL.

Bontempelli, Italian Romanticist

ROME.

A YEAR has passed since readers of Massimo Bontempelli enjoyed the thrilling surprise of his new romance, later to be judged "the best romance for 1929" by the Committee of Thirty, and which consequently received the five thousand lire prize (about $250). The book was called "The Son of Two Mothers" (Il figlio di due madri) and its appearance gave birth to many hopes, some of which were voiced by Ugo Ojetti in the Pegaso review, of which he is the editor. In an article (Pegaso, November, 1929) Ugo Ojetti declared that the success of the romance was to be found in the progress made by the author toward a more humane form of art, an art offering a stronger appeal to human sentiment. From an art which was scintillating, cold, grotesque and impassive, consisting mainly of the play of ideas and in cerebral situations, Bontempelli ventured a step nearer the world of men in his new story. His plot is always unreal, and it is only because of the author's skillful manipulations that the reader is made to accept it as true. The story, however, is based upon the greatest of human affections: maternal love. It marked the "thaw," as Ojetti puts it, or at least so it seemed; in any case, his enthusiasm, and that of readers, was centred in the hope that the thaw would be succeeded by a happy and fruitful Spring in which both author and reader would find themselves sharing the joys and sorrows created by the union of imagination, feeling and thought in so able a writer as Massimo Bontempelli.

BONTEMPELLI has his own ideas on art and literature, and as a writer he tries to remain as true as possible to these ideas. As if in answer to the general expectations, and to the above mentioned article by Ugo Ojetti, he has recently revealed some of these ideas regarding "heart" or sentiment in literature.

> Oftentimes absence of the heart is nothing else but ascendency towards the sublime. To obtain effects called "heart appeal" is easy enough: all that is necessary is to put into the scene a bit of sobbing humanity and pretend that one is really touched by it. To aspire to the sublime is much more risky; if one does not get there, one falls to earth and is dashed to pieces.

It seems to me that Bontempelli, for the sake of argument, has failed to mention two things: first, that it is, after all, hardly necessary to "put a bit of sobbing humanity" in the scene in order to move the reader in an artistic sense; and second, that it is possible to aspire to the sublime even in the treatment of human sentiments, which, if I am not mistaken, are still the principal reasons for which humanity lives and struggles. At any rate, it is quite clear that Bontempelli's theory is: aspire to the sublime without discomfiting the "heart." The most recent practical demonstration of this thesis is offered in Bontempelli's recent novel, just out, called "Life and Death of Adria and Her Sons" (Vita e Morte di Adria e dei suoi figli) (Bompiana, publisher, Milan, 1930, 12 lire).

ADRIA is a woman who has abstained from human passions in order to dedicate herself to the cult of her own beauty. She "is too beautiful a woman," says Bontempelli, to lower herself by participating in the sentiments of love, doubt, sorrow and joy, even, which rule over the hearts of her kinsfolk. The cold, absolute and perfect beauty of her body must not suffer from distractions. Such beauty has the power to radiate its cold influence, so Adria's husband becomes a brother to her, and a desperate lover turns mad. In consequence of this coldness the husband and the two sons finally die. Death bearing in this case an aspect of liberation, as is fitting in view of such an inhuman, egotistic exaltation of beauty.

It is, therefore, the romance of a female Narcissus who, however, has not sufficient courage to carry the adventure out to the end that Bontempelli has written. As soon as Adria sees that her beauty gives signs of fading, she first retires from the world and then sacrifices herself for her beauty by burning to death in her own house. The author hastens to inform us that one must not seek the "heart" appeal in his romance, and to this we would add that one should not seek logic in it either. As a matter of fact, this work by Bontempelli is a brilliant literary exercise, written with a liveliness that makes interesting reading.

Cunninghame-Graham's Moroccan Visit

MOGREB-EL-ACKSA. A Journey in Morocco. By R. B. Cunninghame-Graham. Introduction by Edward Garnett. New York: The Viking Press. 358 pp. $3.50.

THIS is the first edition to be printed in America of a volume of travels which appeared in England at the end of the last century. It has the distinction of having been warmly praised by the late Joseph Conrad in 1898 and by Edward Garnett in a preface printed herewith. In 1898 it was, as Mr. Garnett tells us, "both too unorthodox and too witty for the serious British taste." Mr. Cunninghame-Graham entertained the then heretical opinion that the white man and his burden were not altogether what they were cracked up to be and that the lesser breeds might live as dignified a life and get as much fun out of it as the white man himself. He took a number of flings at adventurers on undeveloped shores, at missionaries and even at members of Parliament. But the truth is that these satirical observations seem a bit thin nowadays, even a bit sophomoric.

"The few," as Mr. Garnett says, hailed the book "as an original masterpiece." It can hardly be called that now. Mr. Cunninghame-Graham's style, as here represented, is an excellent English style, but at times one is aware that the author is conscious of the fact. His habit of introducing Arabian, Spanish, Moroccan or Argentinian words and phrases and then explaining their meaning in footnotes is somewhat irritating. However, if we forget that our author is a stylist and a satirist and treat him as an observant and adventurous traveler in an age of the world much more remote than a mere comparison of dates would indicate, we get along very nicely. Mr. Cunninghame-Graham made a voyage to Mogador and thence set out to visit the forbidden city of Taradant, on the south side of the Atlas Mountains, and inland from Agadir—where a famous "incident" once occurred. Wearing Moorish clothing and endeavoring to pass himself off as a Cherif or descendant of the Prophet, Mr. Cunninghame-Graham succeeded in getting as far as the realm of the Kaid of Kintafi, on the southern slopes of the Atlas range, before he was laid by the heels. Here he spent some days in not altogether unproductive inactivity and then returned to Mogador by way of Morocco City.

The journey was charged with some danger, for though a disguised white man was not likely to be killed by the constituted authorities he was never safe from the fanatical population of the region. Thus the incidents of the book have an interest of their own and Mr. Cunninghame-Graham, being gifted with a cool head, a traveler's eye and a gift of words, set them down in most readable form. He is especially good in his accounts of personalities and customs, and when one has finished one has apparently an excellent idea of what Southern Morocco was like before the motor bus and the airplane arrived. The book is no "Bible in Spain" or "Arabia Deserta." But it is worth preserving, even after thirty-two eventful years.

Notes on Rare Books

A LATE contributor to the knotty question of the priority of first editions of the same book published in different countries is Mr. Oliver Brett. His essay, which appears in the July number of Life and Letters, is called "A Warning to Collectors." It sounds ominous, although it is undoubtedly proferred in a spirit of kindness. "There are some who maintain that the first edition follows the flag," he says, "and that if the author is English it is the first edition published in England that counts. In my opinion such a position is not tenable." This pronouncement is followed by the usual supporting examples: Shelley's "Adonais," published at Pisa in 1821, eight years before its first appearance in England; the second series of Lamb's "Elia" with which Cary of Philadelphia in 1828 anticipated the English edition by five years; and the American editions of Meredith's "Evan Harrington," 1860, of Bernard Shaw's "Dramatic Opinions," 1906, and of James Joyce's "Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man," 1916.

Now these are all cases, so far as we know, of deliberate, conscious publication abroad, determined upon by the author or publisher or both, for some special reason. Mr. Joyce's "Portrait of the Artist," for instance, failed to find an English publisher, so the manuscript was sent to America. To consider any but the Huebsch editon as possible collector's choice seems wrong in the premises. Editions of this kind have nothing to do with publishing accidents, with the common variety of English books, intended for simultaneous publication in London and New York, but actually completed here first. Nor are they to be classed with those arbitrary attempts on the part of publishers to boost the sale of the foreign edition by producing it ahead of its native rival. This practice has become so extensive of late that the atmosphere of collecting could readily be reduced to chaos if it involved a wholesale attempt to gather the earliest editions from the standpoint of time only.

MR. BRETT has gone to some pains to compile a table of dates to show how in nine instances the New York editions of the late D. H. Lawrence preceded those of London; and how the same condition maintained with regard to fourteen of the books of John Galsworthy. He might have spared himself the trouble. In the case of Lawrence, the difference between the two editions is sometimes a year or more, a phenomenon accountable by his residence and publishing in this country, or by his deliberately sending manuscripts to his American publisher. The earlier—New York—editions are the ones sought after by collectors, and rightly so. But examining the dates of Mr. Galsworthy's works, the time difference is narrowed in the extreme, there being only two instances where it amounts to so much as four months. In most cases it is only a matter of a few days. It is all one to Mr. Brett. He urges in all seriousness the collecting of the New York editions and he explodes this bombshell: "The London edition of 'The Forsyte Saga,' published two months after the New York edition, has fetched as much as £20 in the open market. Yet it is clearly a second edition, worth only a few shillings." The use of the phrase "second edition" is itself most unfortunate, and it will certainly not help to relieve a situation already unnecessarily confused by the arbitrary use of terms.

WE feel that Mr. Brett's dogmatic assertions are too dangerous to be ignored, especially in such a field as book collecting, where there is no official guidebook, where the atmosphere is one of nervous uncertainty, and where there is an all too ready disposition to accept the latest and most plausible sounding dicta. It is so utterly wrong to lay down hard and fast rules. The best we know for determining which of two editions of the same book to collect is to follow the date on the title page. But this is not even a very good rule, and sometimes the dates in both editions are the same. Too many special elements enter into the subject for fuller discussion here, and, after all, each case will be decided on its individual merits. One thing is certain, however. Despite the edict of Mr. Brett collectors will not scrap their first English editions of Mr. Galsworthy, they will not drop the hundred-dollar (or is it 150?) English "The Forsyte Saga" for the fifteen-dollar (or is it twenty-five?) American equivalent. And on the other hand, they will require little prompting from him to keep their first American editions of Lawrence's "Women in Love," or Mr. Shaw's "Dramatic Opinions."

It is a perfectly useful service to publish the facts regarding the exact dates of publication. These things should be known and tested. Collectors are likely to err in ignorance and it is good to have their information corrected. But their mentors who seek to guide them in the direction of pure logic miss the point entirely. It is not the bibliographical fact that dominates the collector and determines his choice, but a feeling for what is the "right" first edition for him, a feeling that rather defies analysis. It is hopeless for advisers to attempt to divert this feeling toward any accidental or forced first edition in a country other than that of the author's origin. The ultimate arbiters in these matters are the collectors themselves.

The Simon Report

the substance of the first volume, "Survey." What are the "Recommendations" which Sir John Simon and his six distinguished colleagues have been moved to make?

To begin with, they openly criticize, even deplore, one element in the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms of 1919: namely, the provision that the whole field should be reviewed ten years later—as it happened, by their own committee. They say, with entire justice, that this promised, or threatened, revision stamped the whole scheme as provisional; that, so stamped, it could not possibly have a fair trial; that, in fact, it did not get a fair trial. They go on to express the conviction that this time-provision should on no account be inserted in any legislation based on their investigation and report; that, on the contrary, a quite indefinite period should be allowed for natural growth, which would probably follow different lines in the different provinces.

Having thus cleared the ground, they recommend that the system of Legislatures and Ministers for the nine provinces should be continued, but that the division of authority indicated by the word dyarchy should be abolished. Instead, practically all departments in each province should be turned over to the Legislatures, with their Ministries, and that every effort should be made to create and strengthen a sense of responsibility in a united Cabinet, the Ministers acting as a unit and held responsible as a unit, in accordance with the system at present followed in Britain, whose Cabinet is wholly different from the President's Cabinet at Washington. In general, one may say that the prescriptions for the advance of India are altogether British in spirit and generally also in form. There is very little original creative imagination.

If the recommendations of the report were carried out we should have nine provinces, each with its elected Legislature and Ministry, but, effectively, all power would remain, as at present, in British hands. There would be even less change in the central government, which would also remain predominantly British, as would the army, charged with the defense of India as an integral part of the British Empire. The report calls the grouping of the nine provinces and certain other areas a "federation," but the reality is that the bond of union implied by the report is still the British Army. There is large provision for local self-government, though the scheme might be criticised as too uniform, in view of the immense underlying diversities; but there is no doubt whatever that, if the ideas of Sir John Simon's commission are followed, the authority of Britain over India will remain undiminished.

Fouché, Whom Napoleon Called "The Perfect Traitor"

Stefan Zweig "Blows the Soul" Into His Portrait of the French Revolution's Arch-Villain

JOSEPH FOUCHE. The Portrait of a Politician. By Stefan Zweig. Translated from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. 327 pp. With six illustrations. New York: Viking Press.

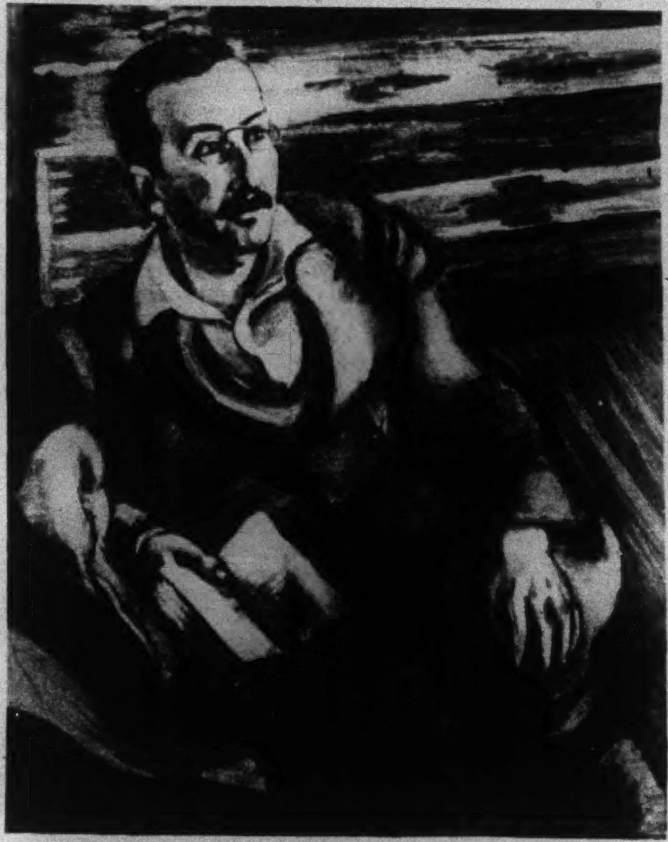
By ALEXANDER NAZAROFF

ONE opens this book with a great deal of interest. Its author, Stefan Zweig, a well-known Austrian writer, has won for himself, during these last years, a well-deserved reputation as a biographic essayist, or, to use a modern word, "portrayer." And it has been but natural for one who has read the powerful and penetrating pages of his "Adepts in Self-Portraiture: Casanova, Stendhal, Tolstoy," or of his "Three Masters: Balzac, Dickens, Dostoyevsky" to await with impatience this new book of his. In Joseph Fouché our author has assuredly found a subject worthy of his talent. Indeed, in the flaming portrait gallery of the chief leaders of the great French Revolution, Fouché is one of the most interesting figures: he is the gallery's great villain—the scoundrel who served all régimes and survived them all by betraying each one of them at the most auspicious moment; who began as a ruthless Jacobin shooting hundreds of "counter-revolutionaries" at Lyon and who ended by becoming the multi-millionaire Duc d'Otranto.

It is true that it is not easy to write about Fouché. As though preserving post-mortem his unsurpassed talent of a Minister of Police and superspy, watching everybody and knowing all secrets, and yet remaining unseen by any one, he has succeeded in keeping in the shadow even from history. Letters and autobiographic writings which he left are comparatively very few; while other revolutionary leaders talked their heads off, he remained silent. Yet the difficulty thereby engendered is not insurmountable: Documents yield enough to enable a biographer as talented as Herr Zweig to clothe this elusive figure in blood and flesh—both physically and psychologically. This is all the more true because Louis Madelin, whose excellent two-volume work on Fouché served Herr Zweig as the main source of his material, did a vast amount of preliminary archive digging.

Has Herr Zweig succeeded in his enterprise? Has he justified one's expectations? Let it be said forthwith that, unfortunately, one cannot answer these questions with an unqualified "Yes." One rather feels like saying upon closing the book, "Yes—and no."

The beginning of the biography is excellent. It is interesting to see how Fouché, the modest priestly schoolmaster of the old régime, shut in quiet closes and bending over scholastic writings, drops his ecclesiastic clothes, becomes a member of the revolutionary National Assembly, grows, together with this Assembly, more and more radical with every day and votes for the execution of King Louis XVI. Moreover, our author is certainly right when he asserts that Fouché went even further than most of his hot-headed colleagues, the Jacobins; he was not only a political revolutionary, but also a Communist who foreshadowed the advent of the Marxist philosophy by sixty years. Indeed, on being sent as Proconsul to quell the counter-revolutionary movement at Lyon, the ex-priest published there instructions in which he clearly stated the principle that "wealth" is an "instrument of enslaving" and that "everything beyond what a citizen absolutely needs * * * is an obvious and gratuitous violation of the rights of the people." Nor were these only words. While daily ordering the execution of a hundred or so victims, who, tied together in one solid pack, were shot from a cannon, Fouché, on the other hand, carried on regular requisitioning. Table napkins, shirts, spoons, shoes, and so on, were taken away (together with money, of course) from "les mauvais riches" and heaped in the municipal building. Indeed, as one reads it, one visualizes an almost exact replica of Kiev or Kharkov in 1919; there is, after all, so little new under the sun.

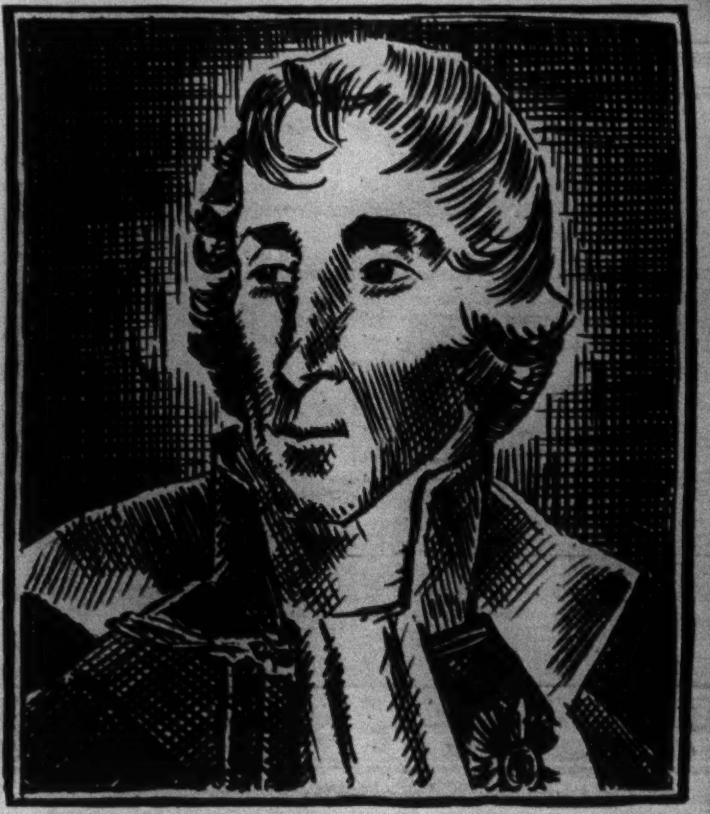


Stefan Zweig.

From the Painting by Henri Le Fauconnier.

Yet, Herr Zweig tells us that the real Fouché celebrated in history was born only later—after the Ninth of Thermidor and under the régime of the Directory. Here he dropped not only his revolutionary convictions (which, perhaps, were to a certain extent sincere), but, generally speaking, all morals and convictions whatsoever. He had discovered his real passion—thirst for power—and his real vocation—political intrigue. At this point, Herr Zweig draws in his flexible, powerful style an excellent portrait of his hero. He shows us how this unfailingly calm, self-controlled man, so pale, sickly looking and unprepossessing, becomes the Minister of the Police of the Directory, and, holding in his thin, grasping fingers the invisible threads that rule human destinies, betrays the Directory to Napoleon. All this he is careful to do in such a fashion that, should Napoleon fail, he could then pose as the savior of the Directory. The intrigues of this tireless political "gambler-in-chief" are always double-edged. Herr Zweig goes on to tell how, having become indispensable to Napoleon by his absolute control of all the subterraneean political groups of Paris from Jacobins to royalists, Fouché exasperates the Corsican by his constant snake-like readiness to bite. ("I have known in my life only one really perfect traitor, Fouché," Napoleon complained at St. Helena.) Finally, after the "hundred days," Fouché betrays Napoleon to Louis XVIII. Herr Zweig quotes an interesting passage from Lamartine referring to Fouché's rôle in these last months of Napoleon's rule:

> Among all those who still survived from the days of the convention [Lamartine wrote], he [Fouché], alone showed no signs of wear and tear, and he alone retained undiminished courage. Though hampered by his delicate position between tyranny, which was reviving, and liberty, which was eager to revive; and on the other hand, between Napoleon, who was sacrificing France to his private interests, and France, which was unwilling to be bled to death for the sake of one single individual — Fouché intimidated the Emperor, cajoled the republicans, tranquilized France, made significant gestures to Europe, looked smilingly toward Louis XVIII, negotiated with the court, corresponded by signs with Monsieur de Talleyrand and was able to keep everything trembling in the balance.



Joseph Fouché.

Indeed, such was the mastery of Fouché's intrigues that at moments it almost transformed him into a statesman.

Herr Zweig has fully succeeded in portraying Fouché, in making him intimately understandable to the reader, in "blowing the soul into him"—and this, no doubt, is the chief purpose of a portrayer. Yet our author's narrative also has defects, and rather serious ones. The book is not merely, as the subtitle reads, "The Portrait of a Politician." It also purports to be Fouché's full biography; in any case, it follows strictly the chronological lines of biographic narrative, and not the free lines of a "characteristic" or an "essay." Along with excellent passages of portraiture it contains long pages of narrative of the events of Fouché's life. It is these pages that often leave a great deal to be desired. Although lengthy they are sometimes extremely watery and unsubstantial; it begins to seem to the reader that, as though in haste, the author does not take the trouble to tell the facts so that they would speak for themselves, but tries instead to get away with words; and his phrases, usually so charged with power, cease to limn and become merely verbose, pretentious and sometimes banal. These lapses certainly never occurred in "Adepts in Self-Portraiture." For instance, Herr Zweig devotes a great deal of space to "the duel between Fouché and Robespierre," to that masterly intrigue of the Ninth of Thermidor of which Fouché was the chief engineer and by which he succeeded in overthrowing "the Incorruptible," thus radically altering the whole course of the French Revolution. What a masterpiece could an author like Herr Zweig make of this "duel"! Yet by piling generalization upon generalization, by repeating, time and again, in every imaginable synonym, that, struggling for his life, "Fouché intrigued," and by failing to describe the actual course of his intrigues, his relations with Barras, Tallien, Collot d' Herbois, and so on, Herr Zweig ruins the effect. Nor is this the only example of the kind.

A Backward Glance at Some American Artists

CONFESSIONS IN ART. By Harrison S. Morris. With Illustrations and Index. 295 pp. New York: Sears Publishing Company. $3.50.

WITH the advent of post-war mechanized art in America, which, strangely enough, was chiefly derived from the less industrialized countries of Europe, our appreciation—our knowledge even—of a once noble tradition of American painting has steadily declined; so much so that, today, it has practically become solely the province of study for the art-historian, or, at best, only appreciated by the few remaining "academicians." The present craving for the new and the bizarre, and the uncritical haste with which every succeeding fad is acclaimed, and the prevalent impatience with everything so-called "old" have obscured our vision and warped our critical faculty toward virtually every artistic creation in the plastic arts done in the past on this side of the Atlantic. Indeed, we have almost forgotten that there ever was an American art tradition, which was carried on with honesty and conviction by men who were as sincere in their art as they were colorful in their personalities—men like Whistler, Sargent, Chase, Eakins, St. Gaudens, Homer and Thayer, to mention only a few.

It is of their character and human peculiarities, more than with their art and craft, that the author deals in his present volume, "Confessions in Art." Nor are the great architects, like Charles McKim and Stanford White, forgotten in these recollections. And due recognition is given to some of the early patrons and benefactors of the arts, such as Andrew Carnegie and John Wanamaker. With the publishers, it may fairly be said that "no such intimate reminiscences of our great American painters has appeared in a quarter of a century." Their visions and aspirations, their achievements and disappointments, their joys and sorrows—these and many other little things bound up with the lives of these men are brought out.

The author, in one capacity or other, has been intimately connected with art and artists from 1892, when he became the managing director of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, to the present day. During this period he has come in close personal contact with practically every great name that figured prominently in American art.

In a free, conversational style the author gives us picture after picture of these great men and women who played such a prominent part in the artistic growth of this country. He succeeds not only in etching their individual characters, sometimes in delicate and sometimes in bold relief, but in recreating the very atmosphere of the periods in which they lived and worked. Moreover, Mr. Morris has brought together in this book some enlightening correspondence between these artists and himself. Of unique value and extreme interest, there are many letters published here for the first time from Thayer, some dealing with painting, and others with his famous treatise on the "protective coloration of the animal kingdom" and his verbal battles on this subject with the naturalists. This is only one of the many engaging episodes that Mr. Morris brings before the reader.

Though the author makes no pretention to exhaustive analysis of these artists' work, there is nevertheless a deep appreciation of their efforts and achievements. He is never unkind or niggardly in his gentle reproach and good-natured humor toward them. He sees their virtues as well as their foibles, and his critical judgment is never marred by pettiness or bias.

Mr. Morris has given us a charming collection of reminiscences which should be of interest not only to the art student, but to the intelligent layman as well.

AMERICA THE DREAM. By Katherine Lee Bates. 210 pp. New York: Thomas Y. Crowell Company. $2.50.

SELECTED POEMS OF KATHERINE LEE BATES. Edited by Marion Pelton Guild. 221 pp. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company. $2.50.

THE poetry of Katherine Lee Bates has long held an honored place in this country. Forty years a teacher at Wellesley College, Miss Bates has made her influence felt the nation over. Besides being a scholar, Miss Bates ever took a deep and abiding interest in her students. Her reading of life was searching, and it was serene. Her love of country was no less constant than her love of humanity, and her hymn "America the Beautiful" has become one of the standard patriotic pieces of the land.

Of the two volumes at hand, the poems brought together under the title "America the Dream" are for the first time collected under a common title. The author has not in this collection—many pieces of which saw magazine publication—striven to do a connected poem. But all the poems are governed by a central theme. Thus in a loose sense of the word, "America the Dream" might be said to be a patriotic epic. There is a prefatory poem of which the following is the final stanza.

O dear my country, beautiful and dear,
Ultimate dream of Time.
By all thy millions longing to revere
A pure, august, authentic commonweal,
Climb to the light, imperiled Pioneer
Of brotherhood among the nations, seal
Our faith with thy sublime.

The poems fall into several groups. First comes "The Discoverers," which is followed by "The Forgotten," "The Colonists," "The Revolution," "The Young Republic," "The World War" and "The Path of Brotherhood." The poems are richly varied, but always is the treatment lofty and the execution dignified.

It is unnecessary more than to glance at the "Selected Poems" of Miss Bates, which have been chosen with care by their editor. To show the catholicity and untrammeled understanding of the Wellesley teacher and poet, this quatrain on Swinburne may well be noted:

Sea-wind and wave should chant thy requiem,
The harmonic surges toll thy passing bell;
For thou, hushed Poet, wert akin to them;
Thy songs alone their music parallel.

It would be difficult to imagine two poets more unlike than Swinburne and Katherine Lee Bates; yet the New England Victorian could appreciate where the English Victorian could not.

It is not possible to say how time will deal with the work of this woman. Miss Bates was not an imperial poetic voice. But as was said of another American, her native air was the sweeter for the song.

FORTY-NINE POEMS BY W. H. DAVIES. Selected and illustrated by Jacynth Parsons. With Preface by the Author. 56 pp. New York: Jonathan Cape & Harrison Smith. $2.50.

The purpose of this little book is not to display the poet, W. H. Davies, for all of the poems have been printed before, but to display the illustrations by Jacynth Parsons. In his delightfully whimsical preface Mr. Davies says of his collaborator: "This young artist is serious in her efforts, and has a true understanding of my work. Not only that, but with the confidence of her young years, she has taken nearly all my best lyrics for her drawings."

And what an opportunity the verse of W. H. Davies gives an artist capable of catching the imaginative flashes of this lightly winging poet! As alert as the robin he is so fond of writing about, as quick to seize a (poetic) morsel, as swift in his flight, Davies brings instant enjoyment to those for whom pure fancy has delights. Although Mr. Davies has warned that this book is Miss Parsons's and not his the reviewer cannot forego adding at least part of the lines on "The Ox," so much in the style of that gentle eighteenth century poet Collins, and yet so individually Davies.

Why should I pause, poor beast, to praise
Thy back so red, thy sides so light?
And on thy brow those curls in which
Thy mournful eyes take no delight?

See you that Robin by himself,
Perched on that leafless apple branch?
His breast like one red apple left—
The last, and best of all—by chance?

If I do but give heed to him,
He will come daily to my door;
And 'tis the will of God, not man,
When Robin Redbreast comes no more.

THE TROPHIES. With Other Sonnets. By Jose-Maria de Heredia. Translated by John Meyers O'Hara and John Hervey. 241 pp. New York: The John Day Company. $3.50.

Although born of Spanish ancestry in the island of Cuba, José-Maria de Heredia, whose works are for the first time now translated into English, wrote in French, and eventually became a French citizen. He was regarded by contemporaries as possessed of a mastery of the language of France such as few natives could boast, and by leading critics of France as one of the country's great poets. The poet, who was born in 1842, died in 1905. "The Trophies" was published in 1894, thirteen years after Rossetti's "The House of Life" sequence. This is important, for de Heredia with "The Trophies" marks the height of the great sonnet-writing tide which was soon to ebb, not again to start to rise for three or more decades.

John O'Hara and John Hervey, who have made the present translation, have done an exceptionally brilliant piece of work. In their preface they give as the ultimate triumph of the originals the perfection of tonality achieved. A similar perfection of tonality distinguishes the translations. No one sonnet exceeds in flawlessness any other, and choice is excluded. This one, "Rising Tide," has been picked at random

The sun is like a beacon's steady flare,
From Raz to Penmarch slopes in midst recline,
Alone, against the wind, in errant line,
The gulls on beaten wing the tempest dare.
Billows of green with furious onslaught fare,
Wave upon wave with foaming manes that shine;
They break in thunder and their seething brine
Lends the far reefs the tossing plumes they wear.
And I drift with the current of my thought,
Wasting myself in dreams, with hope, regret,
Of which alone the bitter lees remain;
The while, fraternal from the sea is caught,
The same remonstrance man is lifting yet,
A protest to the gods, forever vain.

"The Trophies" is not a closely knit sequence, and as a whole has not the profundity of "The House of Life." Perhaps the sonnet tide had already begun to turn. But José-Maria de Heredia must rank as a great poet and a great sonneteer. And to find him at last in translation is fortune indeed.

SELECTED POEMS. By William Alexander Percy. Preface by Llewellyn Jones. 253 pp. New Haven: The Yale University Press. $3.

It appears to be the fashion nowadays for working poets to have their collected works and selections from their works published while they are still in the flesh. Such honors used to be withheld until a subsequent time. Yet the new fashion is not without merit, especially since it enables a reader whose leisure is limited to gain a better general view of an author than he could otherwise obtain.

The selection from the volumes by William Alexander Percy includes several of that poet's longer pieces as well as a generous collection of the lyrics. Mr. Percy, as readers know from his books that have appeared, is a man of erudition who has turned that erudition to account in his versified work. The dignity and deeper significance of his thought is everywhere apparent. In "Sappho in Levkas" there is beauty, profundity, capable versification and effective imagery. "In April Once," a lyric drama woven about the children's crusade that was undertaken in the thirteenth century, is both excellent poetry and effective drama. William Alexander Percy was well-advised in issuing a selection from his works.

YANKEE BALLADS. By M. A. De Wolfe Howe. Illustrations by Philip Kappel. 45 pp. Cambridge, Mass.: Washburn & Thomas. $2.

There is no reason why the history of New England should not supply ballad material—the history of every other country has supplied such material. And M. A. De Wolfe

THAT restless soul, Paul Morand, has written a preface to the French edition of the "Babbitt" of another restless soul, Sinclair Lewis. Like Babbitt, says Morand, "Lewis sees the horror of the Middle West, but he cannot escape from it. He can neither live with nor without it. To all the European palazzi and châteaux, he prefers a little bungalow in Zenith on Floral Heights—where never a flower grows. He does not live on the Côte d'Azur like Edith Wharton, he does not become an English citizen like Henry James, he does not bathe with Jean Cocteau in the Mediterranean like Glenway Wescott." Harcourt Brace suggests that Morand has been reading Matthew Josephson's "Portrait of the American as Artist."

Velma Moeschler has written a book called "Virginia Cookery" that any one who has so much as tasted a Smithfield ham may be interested in. It is divided into ten sections, including the "everyday and party breakfast; home and bridge luncheon; dinners for home, company and special occasion; suppers, early and late and the outdoor picnic." The recipes follow Virginia tradition. The book may be procured from The Meiringen, 23 Church Avenue, West, Roanoke, Va., for $2, 10 cents postpaid.

Anne W. Armstrong, author of "This Day and Time," published by Knopf, objects that the characters in her novel about the Tennessee hills should not be called "poor whites." "The people of whom I write are poor enough in all conscience," she says, "but there is a distinction. The term 'poor white,' like the term 'white trash,' originated in slave-holding regions of the South to designate the lowest class of the white population. The term still lingers in the Southern lowlands, but it is hardly applicable to the mountaineers. I see no reason, either, why they should be referred to as 'hill people.' This is distinctly an 'outland' term."

Harry Emerson Fosdick, who contributes to the symposium, "Ventures in Belief," which has just been published by Scribner's, predicts that the church of the future will probably not have a single form of worship, but a variety of forms, to be used simultaneously, alternately, or selectively. The forms, he thinks, will range from the liturgical, the musical, preaching, discussion and dramatic symbolism to the "unprogrammed quiet" of the Quakers.

Willard Connelly, author of "Brawny Wycherly," has gone to Dublin to work on a biography of Richard Steele, who lived in the Irish capital when a boy. The work will take Mr. Connelly eventually to Wales, the country in which Steele spent his latter years.

Scribner's reports that Ernest Hemingway is now in Wyoming at work on a book on bull fighting.

The price of Robert Coates's "The Outlaw Years," published by the Macaulay Company, is $3, and not $2, as was incorrectly reported in THE BOOK REVIEW for Aug. 3.

Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow has written a book for children called "The Painted Pig," which will be published shortly by Knopf. The story was inspired, says Mrs. Morrow, by her stay in Mexico City with her Ambassador husband. One of the celebrities of the Mexican capital is Count René d'Harnoncourt, whose collection of native toys is famous throughout the country. Mrs. Morrow urged him to write a story about his toys, but instead he made a number of sketches of the gay birds and beasts among them. Mrs. Morrow then wrote the story herself, picking out one painted pig for subject, and d'Harnoncourt has supplied the illustrations. The children who come into the story were drawn from those of Mrs. Morrow's neighbors. These neighbors lived across the street from the Morrow week-end adobe house in Cuernavaca.

Peggy Wood, who has been playing in London in "Bitter Sweet," has just finished a book about herself and the theatre. It is called Actors—and People," and will be published by Appleton in the Fall. The title does not imply that Miss Wood considers actors sub-human.

Floyd L. Darrow, author of "Builders of Empire" (Longmans, Green & Co.), a series of biographies of our leaders in agriculture, industry, finance, science, aviation, and so on, written for boys and girls, is spending the Summer lecturing in Chautauqua.

Brentano's has arranged to supply plenty of reading for transatlantic travelers. This is done by the new expedient of maintaining books-stalls on the piers of leading steamship companies, ready to make up bon voyage boxes of the newest publications. The experiment of selling books on the piers was tried out recently at the sailings of the Aquitania and the Caronia. The book-stalls are portable, so they can be shifted from dock to dock. Most of the books will undoubtedly be sold to outgoing passengers, or to friends anxious to make them a departing present, but Brentano's hopes that detective thrillers will be bought by those returning voyagers who are seeking to alleviate the tedium of waiting for the customs men to get through plowing up their baggage.

Fulton Oursler, author of "The Great Jasper," a novel about an astrologer which will see the light of day in September, has gone to London to confer with Anthony Abbot, American crime expert, who has been studying police methods on the Continent.

Anne Douglas Sedgwick, author of "The Little French Girl," is returning to America for the first time in twenty years. She plans to spend some weeks on the north shore of Massachusetts. Her next novel, "Philippa," will be published by Houghton, Mifflin Company this Fall.

Robert W. Chambers's new book, "The Rake and the Hussy," covers the War of 1812. It takes in the events around New Orleans, but does not confine itself to these events, for it shifts to the court of the English Prince Regent and to the decks of an American privateer, and then goes on to include a background of Indian uprisings. In general it gets over a lot of territory.

"The Well of Loneliness" has been reissued in a $2 edition by Covici, Friede. The new edition differs from the original only in binding.

Coningsby Dawson is spending the Summer on his ranch high in the Canadian Rockies of British Columbia, which he used for the setting of many of the scenes in his latest novel, "Fugitives From Passion." He is miles away from railroads and telephones and is able to work undisturbed except when an occasional bear takes a notion to visit the tiny cabin in which he does his writing. But bears are not nearly so annoying as human beings might be, for they never beg for autographs or ask the author to read manuscripts and use his influence to get them published. Mr. Dawson's next book, "The Auctioning of Mary Angel," is one of the new dollar books published by Doubleday, Doran & Co.

Longmans, Green & Co.'s second juvenile competition, in which a prize of $2,000 is offered for the best book-length story for boys or girls from 12 to 16, closes on Sept. 30. The publishers reserve the right to accept on regular terms any manuscripts which do not win the prize but are, nevertheless, considered worthy of publication. Five manuscripts submitted in last year's competition were accepted, and all five of them were accepted by book clubs—three by the Junior Literary Guild and two by the Children's Book Club.

WORLD'S WORK for August contains two interesting character sketches, one by Augusta W. Hinshaw of William Allen White of The Emporia Gazette and the other by Helena Huntington Smith, who writes about Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth. The Hinshaw article tells how Mr. White stepped off the local train in Emporia, Kan., in the Spring of 1895 with a dollar and a quarter in his pocket and five years' newspaper experience behind him. A capacity to borrow, however, enabled Mr. White to get a hold on the purchase price—$3,000—of the then shaky Gazette. His notes were endorsed by the local politicians, who, Miss Hinshaw tells us, felt they had "made White their mouthpiece." But Mr. White was merely stooping to conquer, for, after his editorial, "What's the Matter With Kansas?" written during the free silver battle of 1896, he became so famous that a book of short stories from his pen sold and sold, and enabled him to pay off his backers. Mr. White's career since then has been as independent as they come.

Miss Smith testifies to the charm of Mrs. Longworth, she who was once Princess Alice. One devastating remark of Mrs. Longworth's is quoted: "So-and-So would rather be tight than be President." That some of Mrs. Longworth's charm is of the irrational sort—perhaps that is why it is charming—is not contradicted by Miss Smith.

Harry Salpeter introduces himself as "The Boswell of New York" to readers of the July issue of The Bookman. During the past few years Mr. Salpeter has had the fortune, or the misfortune, to interview approximately one hundred authors, and what he has to say about them constitutes a manual to the manners of the artist. His catches range from "gentlemen as cultivated as Willard Huntington Wright and Thomas Beer * * * to Jim Tully, a hard-boiled professional sentimentalist who could hardly keep the edge of boastfulness from his manner, as much as to say: 'Look at me, boys, I was a tramp yesterday; now my income is fifty thousand a year.' " Glenway Wescott is a "Wisconsin farm boy who deliberately acquired an English accent. * * * He has the pride of the man who feels his artistic self-sufficiency a bit too much perhaps." Louis Bromfield is "the young man who knows women." Of John Dos Passos Mr. Salpeter says: "His desire has something in it of the Communist revolution and Henry David Thoreau." Ring Lardner told Mr. Salpeter, in a voice that expressed little interest, "Where do they get that stuff about me being a satirist? I just listen." "That American author who looks most like a poet is a social philosopher who bears the name of Lewis Mumford." "Elizabeth Madox Roberts was almost hypersensitively diffident and reticent; Julia Peterkin—whose 'Scarlet Sister Mary' won the Pulitzer Prize last year—most kindly and motherly seeming; Sarah Gertrude Millin, who came for a visit from Johannesburg, South Africa, seemed like a little girl lost in a big city. * * *" The Abbé Dimnet, author of "The Art of Thinking," tried to "squeeze into fifteen minutes an hour's equivalent of publicity." As for Gene Tunney, Mr. Salpeter says the fighter's ignorance of literature was, at the time of a projected interview which never reached fruition, comparable to "my ignorance about boxing."

Besides Mr. Salpeter's light and pleasant indiscretions, the July Bookman contains Norman Foerster's estimate of our "literary historians" (Carl Van Doren, Henry Canby and Stuart Sherman), and a paper on Lytton Strachey in which Louis Kronenberger, the author, holds that "the historian and biographer in Lytton Strachey suffer from the weakness of Mr. Strachey, the stylist." Seward Collins, the editor, continues his broadsword strokes at the vertebrae of his contemporaries in a second instalment of "Criticism in America."

Ernest Hemingway has turned to Wyoming for the setting of his latest short story, printed in Scribner's Magazine for August. Like so many others of Mr. Hemingway's tales, this story, "Wine of Wyoming," shows a profound feeling for the values of loyalty and friendship, perhaps the two words of the sort that have, unlike "glory" and "patriotism," not been pumped dry of meaning for the author of "A Farewell to Arms."

Of interest also in July Scribner's is Lewis Mumford's "The Drama of the Machines." "Whatever the politics of a country may be," writes Mr. Mumford, "the machine * * * is a Communist. As the machine conquers one department after another of production, it obliterates the distinctions of caste and financial status. There can be no functional difference between a good machine design for a factory worker's home and that for a professional man's; in so far as money differences are still permitted to count for anything, they can alter only the scale of things, not the kind." Mr. Mumford is not particularly worried about this razing of distinctions, for, as he says, the surviving desire for exclusiveness and originality in a machine age must often take the useless and unesthetic form of "irrelevant moldings and tricky shapes for the hood" of a motor car, while in bathrooms it results "in the introduction of period styles to supplant strong modern forms, and in the conversion of admirable water faucets into swans' necks, or some similar absurdity." In typewriters and fountain pens the desire for originality "comes forth as mottled color effects which break the fine surfaces of these objects with no esthetic gain."

In the Summer issue of The Hound and Horn Louis Zukofsky writes on the "Five of Hearts" interlude in the career of Henry Adams. The "Five of Hearts," Mr. Zukofsky tells us, were Clarence King, the geologist; John Hay and his wife and the Adamses. Adams and Hay lived in adjoining houses built by H. H. Richardson on La Fayette Square in Washington, and "nowhere in the United States was there then, or has there since been, such a salon as theirs (the Adamses)." Mr. Zukofsky writes very skeletally and evidently with an idea of letting simple chronology do the work of Adams the historian, and Adams the novelist who wrote "Democracy."

New Books for Children

By ANNE T. EATON

The Boys and Sally Down on a Plantation. By Rose B. Knox. Illustrated by Manning DeV. Lee. 276 pp. New York: Doubleday, Doran & Co., Inc. $2.

WHEN we try to think of books for children dealing with American life we find our list is very brief. "Little Women," different as conditions are now from what they were when the book was written, still presents, we like to think, something that is characteristic of America. For New England we have also Sarah Orne Jewett's "Betty Leicester," Mrs. Wiggin's "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," Mrs. Snedeker's "Downright Dencey." Rhea Wells in "An American Farm" has given us an account of everyday life on a Tennessee farm, as seen through the eyes of a boy, set down with a remarkable power of recollection and the minute observation of an artist. Now Miss Rose B. Knox has given us in "The Boys and Sally" a volume that ought to be a permanent addition to the list.

Sally and her younger brother go to visit their uncle and aunt at White Hills in the South. By means of the story, which has plot, interest and humor, the characteristic life of a plantation not long after the war is vividly described. Sally herself—impulsive, warm-hearted, loyal little Sally, who rode everything in sight from the horse given her by her uncle to Cleopatra the calf, Sally, who slipped away to watch the darkies' wrestling match at the barbecue, explaining to her horrified aunt, "I just don't believe I want to be a little lady when I come to think of it. They have an awful pokey time. Course I'll mind Thomas when he tells me, Aunty, if you say so—only I'll sure dodge him next time"—is as real and delightful a child character as any that has appeared in a child's book for many a long day. Van, the little brother, whose rabbit trap made for his uncle's Christmas present, would, according to that uncle, "so overcome the rabbit with surprise that any one could pick him up," is also real and lovable.

Sally's letters to her mother are written with such zest and unconscious humor that one enjoys them as one would enjoy actual letters, and her allusions to what she has read—"Great Expectations," "The Prisoner of Chillon," Dickens's "Child's History of England"—have a spontaneous enthusiasm that may set other children to reading. The chapters "A Little Girl Lost" and "Ol' Man Trouble" provide adventure enough to satisfy any 10 to 12-year-old reader, whether boy or girl. The glimpse of mountain life that we get through Richard's account of his early years is accurate, while, except for Uncle Remus, one can hardly think of another book for children in which the plantation darkies are so well portrayed. There are bits of description of flowers, birds and seasons, sunny afternoons, twilight and moonlight nights that are lovely in themselves and convey to the reader something of the charm and beauty of the South. The illustrations, while fairly adequate, lack the loving detail and artistic quality of those made by Mr. Wells for "An American Farm."

When I Was Very Young. By A. A. Milne. Illustrations by Ernest Shepard. 26 pp. New York: The Fountain Press. $10.

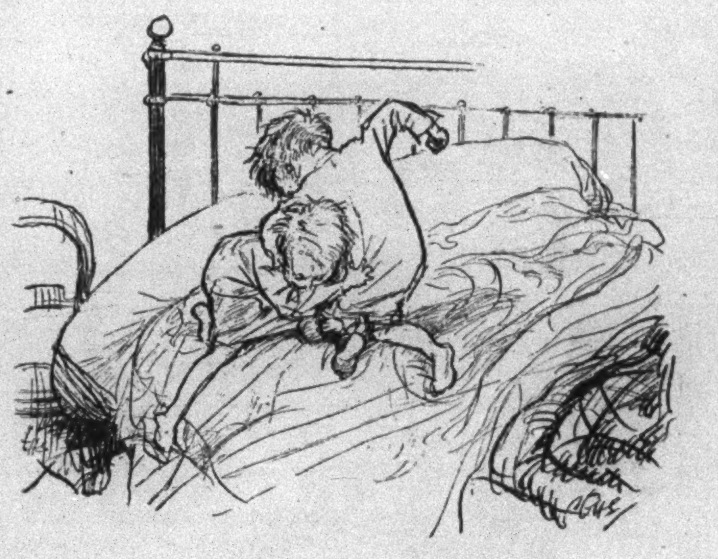
In this small and exquisitely printed little volume lovers of "When We Were Very Young" and "Winnie the Pooh" will enjoy A. A. Milne's brief sketch of himself and his brother John as small boys; their efforts to decide on a profession, their first appearance on the stage in amateur theatricals, the contribution to a school paper founded by "a boy named Harmsworth," to which a young science master, "a young man called Wells—H. G. Wells" was another contributor, and other youthful experiences. Mr. Shepard has, as usual, supplied a humorous and appropriate accompaniment to the text.

When I Was A Girl: The Stories of Five Famous Women as Told by Themselves. Collected by Helen Ferris. Illustrated by Curtiss Sprague. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.50.

In collecting in this one volume the chapters from five autobiographies which deal with the early life of five women as interesting and as different as Mme. Schumann-Heink, Janet Scudder, Marie Curie, Jane Addams and Mme. Sugimoto, Miss Ferris has done something for which we may well be grateful. There could hardly be better reading for girls from 12 to 16 than these accounts, told in their own words, of five other girls, who with a fine courage and persistence succeeded in overcoming the obstacle in their way.



From One of the Drawings by Ernest H. Shepard for "When I Was Very Young."

Young people enjoy biography, but seldom read it of their own accord and without an introduction of some sort made by an older person. The well-chosen chapters in this book will serve as such an introduction and encourage its readers to make further excursions into the field of biographies and autobiographies on their own initiative.

Navarre of the North. By Esther Birdsall Darling. Illustrated by Charles Livingston Bull. 268 pp. New York: Doubleday, Doran & Co., Inc. $2.

The story of an Eskimo wolf dog who is rescued by young Paul Barrau from the cruelty of Black Mart, one of the ne'er-do-wells of Nome. Navarre, as Paul calls him, proves to be a descendant of the famous Baldy of Nome, and under Paul's training and affection develops into a remarkable sled dog who wins the All-Alaska Sweepstakes, saves his master's life on more than one occasion and finally is sent overseas during the war. In France Paul and Navarre together heroically rescue a wounded officer, and for this Navarre is decorated with the Croix de Guerre. The story is based on actual events. The author, who is a partner in the Allen and Darling Kennel, writes with the enthusiasm of a dog lover. Navarre and the other dogs seem very real and Paul is well drawn. There is courage and loyalty in the book without sentimentality. For boys and girls 10 to 16.

The Tale of Tom Tiddler, With Rhymes of London Town. By Eleanor Farjeon. With Twenty-seven Illustrations in Line by Norman Tealby. 244 pp. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $2.

Tom Tiddler was born, so the opening sentence tells us, in a hollow oak in a buttercup and daisy field. When he was 10 years old he saw three little girls in the field picking up gold and silver. So he had company at last until the three little girls were taken prisoner by Gogmagog the Giant, when, accompanied by Jerry the Goat and Simon the Owl to help and advise him, Tom sets forth to their rescue. One remarkable adventure leads to another, each one explaining the name of a London street or lane with the altogether convincing logic of the fairy tale. Naturally a Moor in white and crimson, with golden shoes, would be chained to a wall at Moor's Gate, lavender bushes grow on Lavender Hill, while Wormwood Scrubs clean the sprigged petticoat that was stolen in Petticoat Lane and the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street mends it, and so on, until the Giant is safely locked in Leadenhall with the key made by the smith of Smithfield, and Tom and the little girls have once more the freedom of Tom Tiddler's Ground to pick up gold and silver. A delightful, fanciful story, which may be read for its own sake by children and which will, at the same time, delight all lovers of London of any age, for whom the very names of the streets have a certain magic. Children will appreciate the humor and the dramatic quality and element of surprise which, without effort, runs through the book. It can be read to children of 6 and 7, and readers of all ages who like a combination of imagination, fantasy and nonsense will thoroughly enjoy it. There is a rhyme for every chapter and the imaginative and humorous illustrations are quite in the key of the book.

Hahtibee the Elephant. By Charles E. Slaughter. Illustrated by Ferdinand H. Horvath. 159 pp. New York: Alfred A. Knopf. $2.

This is an excellent animal story by one who knows both animals and India. Hahtibee, when only 6 or 8 months old, is captured with his mother in an elephant roundup. As he grows older he is trained to work on a large tea plantation, becoming the wisest and most capable of all the elephants and the pride of his devoted mahout, who is responsible for his education. A tiger hunt in which he is wounded leads him to run away to the jungle. After several months, however, he returns to the tea garden, recognizes and is recognized by his old masters, and saves them from the attack of a mad elephant. We leave him at the end of the book contentedly resuming his old life. The author writes of animals with the sympathy of one who knows and enjoys them. Children will delight in the details of Hahtibee's life and education in the tea garden and later experiences in the jungle, especially the visit to the salt lick, where all the animals find sanctuary. The book is well written and extremely readable. The drawings by Ferdinand H. Horvath deserve special mention. Drawn with humor and sympathy, they have not only accuracy but real beauty for boys and girls of 10 to 13.

Bread'' there are traces of the careful, detailed writing of the English novelist, and there are hintz of Mary Robert Rhinehart's methods of mentioning a finished episode and explaining later how it all happened.

The giant in this case is genius, grim and cruel and greedy, feeding on the flesh and blood of the man who possesses him as well as on those who come in contact with that man. The title is suggested by the old nursery rhyme, ''Fee, fo, fi, fum, I smell the blood of a Mortal Man. Be he alive or be he dead I'll grind his bones to make my bread.'' It is Vernon Deyre who possesses this genius, a young man of aristocratic stock on his father's side and sturdy bourgeois stock on his mother's. He inherits some of his father's weaknesses as well as his artistic tastes, but he also has in him the driving power of his mother's family, a power that kindles the spark of his talent into the high flame of creative musical genius. As he reachés maturity Vernon is torn between three great desires—the desire to create a new music, the desire to live a contented though prosaic life with the girl he loves, and the innate desire to uphold the traditions of his ancestors and to possess Abbots Puissants, the family estate. It is to the first of these forces that he ultimately succumbs,

It would be unfair to end this review without a word for the character drawing. Each figure is welll conceived, human and true.

ROMANCE IN HUNGARY

THE WOMAN IN THE SHADOW. By Louis Joseph Vance. 317 pp. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. $2.

THE WOMAN IN THE SHADOW'' contains the usual ingredients of a popular romance; melodrama and young love. Its character portrayal is not graphic and the eventual plot is forced by the ancient means of mistaken identity and strange coincidence.

The story is concerned with Gisella, an American girl adopted by a Hungarian Prince, and her part in the struggle between the proletariat and the aristocracy of Hungary. Gisella and her lover endured many perilous days before they reached the hermitage of Sobri, an old man who proved to be as friendly as he was eccentric. Their method of outwitting the Reds is ingeniously contrived by the author. Perhaps a reader might believe a blind man would fall in love with an intimate friend without realizing who she was.

Mr. Vance has an unfortunate way of narrating off-stage. Instead of allowing us to see the burning of the chateau or the miraculous escape of Gisella, we are indirectly informed of these happenings in retrospect.

A BUSINESS GIRL

BLACK SHEEP. By Jessie Payne. 318 pp. Philadelphia: Macrae Smith Company. $2.

BLACK SHEEP'' is a conventional story of those eager young women who have forsaken the paths of domesticity to fight a man's battle in the new business and professional ''rackets.'' Girded with their female wiles, they bravely tilt their lances against each other and their common enemy to win—well, a man. For when the shouting is over and the smoke of battle has cleared away it must be pretty generally agreed that love, not material success, was what these fair warriors were really fighting for.

At least that is the impression one gets from this book. Marne Lewis, who is liberally endowed with charm, brains and ideals, left her newspaper job to enter the publicity business with Larry Underhill, who was already married ''but not working at it.'' The couple pooled their energy and ingenuity in the task of putting over their publicity campaigns, and Marne laid plans for a shining future with her debonaire captain. But the well-meaning Larry was weak, and first his procrastination and finally his affair with another woman brought to Marne disillusionment and almost disaster. Throughout this affair, and another which followed, Peter Lane, also unhappily married, stood sadly in the offing, too decent to tell Marne that he loved her. His sadness and kindness and wisdom are a little too unconvincing,

SLAVES OF IMPULSE

ALL the stage sets used in the old dime paper-back novels are dragged forth and used in this gaudy, artificial story of a wealthy physician who married a poor, beautiful girl. His young wife, who has married him for his money and social position, falls in love with a house painter and, taking her little daughter, elopes with him to a village in another State. Although the physician employs many detectives, travels himself all over the country, he cannot find his wife or child. The wife turns into a patient, noble woman, suffering in silence her lover's transformation into a drunkard. The daughter grows up, disappears; the doctor, still on the trail, finds the village in which his wife is living and now devotes his time to searching for his daughter who, it develops, is dead but not without souvenir—an illegitimate child. The man who wronged her turns out to be her mother's lover. He makes his escape before anything so factual as the machinery of justice is brought to bear upon him.

Two British Soldiers

THE CONGREVES, FATHER AND SON: GENERAL SIR WALTER NORRIS CONGREVE, V. C. BREVET MAJOR WILLIAM LA TOUCHE CONGREVE, V. C. By Lieut. Col. L. H. Thornton, C. M. G., D. S. O., and Parmela Fraser. With a foreword by the Duke of Connaught. Illustrated. 337 pp. London: John Murray. 15s. net.

By G. W. HARRIS

THIS book is a beautiful and fitting tribute to the memory of two exceptionally brave and distinguished English soldiers, father and son, each of whom, serving in the same regiment famous in British annals, the Rifle Brigade, won the coveted Victoria Cross—a record hardly paralleled in English family and military history. The tribute is both beautiful and fitting because it comprises, simply written, straightforward accounts of their lives, together with extracts from their diaries and letters and quoted testimonials from some of the men with whom they served; the whole set forth in an unostentatious manner that one must believe would have pleased the Congreves themselves, could they have lived to read it. For, according to all testimony, each of these men, besides being a great soldier who died in his country's service, was an English gentleman in the truest and noblest sense of the word—simple-hearted, unselfish, courteous, as well as loyal and courageous.

Walter Norris Congreve was born in 1862, and came of that old and famous English family to which William Congreve, the dramatist, belonged and of which Dr. Samuel Johnson said that it was "of so great antiquity that it claims a place among the few that extend their line beyond the Norman conquest." There were many soldiers in the family, in the course of the 700 years it is known to have lived in England, and Walter Congreve's grandfather and father both held commissions for a time. He was schooled at Harrow and Oxford, but left the university at the end of his second year to join the regular army and entered the R. M. C., Sandhurst. On leaving there in 1885 he went out to India as a second lieutenant in the Rifle Brigade. In 1890 he returned to England and married Cecilia, daughter of the late Captain C. B. la Touche, who had so distinguished himself during the Indian mutiny in 1857 that he had been recommended for the Victoria Cross. Instead, he received only the thanks of the government.

> It is most unfortunate [says Colonel Thornton] that the appreciation of her Majesty's Government did not take a more material form, for had Lieutenant la Touche received the high distinction for which he was recommended, Lady Congreve would have enjoyed the unique distinction of being the daughter of one holder of the Victoria Cross, the wife of another, and the mother of a third.

Walter Congreve's opportunity came with the outbreak of the Boer War in October, 1899, when he immediately went to South Africa. He was now a Captain. In the Battle of Colenso, on Dec. 15, he was wounded, but not until his "conspicuous gallantry displayed in the attempt to carry away the guns" had won for him the Victoria Cross. On the following Christmas Day he noted in his diary: that there was "a great dinner at 12 noon, plum pudding and champagne! Doctor congratulated me on V. C., ditto a gunner, but I shall believe it when I see it. The possibility even is pleasant."

When he had recovered from his wound, he was appointed Adjutant of Kitchener's Horse. A month later, after the capture of Cronje, Lord Roberts made him a Brigade Major. Next he became Lord Kitchener's private secretary and assistant military secretary. After the war he returned to England and accepted the post of Military Secretary to the Duke of Connaught, then Commander-in-Chief in Ireland. In 1905 he returned to the Rifle Brigade, as a Colonel, and in 1909 was appointed Commandant of the School of Musketry at Hythe.

> Early in July, 1914 (Colonel Thornton writes) Congreve, in talking to a friend, remarked that he was not likely to achieve anything more important in the army than the command of an infantry brigade. Little can he have dreamed that within the next ten years he would become a full General and A. D. C. General to the King.

Throughout the World War he saw hard service in France, and his promotion was rapid. After the Aisne, Troyon, Etaples, Hazebrouck, he was made a Major General in February, 1915, and in May became Commander of the Sixth Division. In the Autumn of the same year he was in command of an Army Corps (70,000 men) with the temporary rank of Lieutenant General. He was severely wounded at Vimy (June, 1917), losing his left hand. While invalided home he was created a K. C. B. As soon as he was able he got back into the thick of the fighting in France, where he remained until the Armistice. After the war he held high command in Palestine and Egypt directly under Lord Allenby until 1923. Two years later he was appointed Governor of Malta, where he died at the end of February, 1927. In conclusion the author says:

> In him the British Empire lost a great public servant. He excelled, as an old friend has remarked, in being normal. He was a most perfect gentleman, with complete courage and common sense and of unswerving loyalty. In the punctilious performance of "the trivial round, the common task," he set a wonderful example to the ordinary man in doing ordinary things extraordinarily well. Withal a man of a large mind, utterly incapable of pettiness in any shape or form. Well might one who knew him intimately exclaim, on being told that his death would leave a gap: "It doesn't leave a gap—that is one in a row. It is a peak that is left empty."

This man's eldest son, William la Touche Congreve, familiarly known to all his friends and associates as "Billy," was only 25 when he was killed in the first Battle of the Somme (July 20, 1916). Yet he had reached the rank of Brevet Major and had been recommended for the command of a brigade. He received the M. C. for his gallantry at Hooge in 1915, the D. S. O. in 1916 for his single-handed capture of seventy-two Germans and a posthumous V. C. was awarded for his continuous acts of gallantry and endurance in the Battle of the Somme. He was the first in the great war to whom all three decorations were awarded and France also honored him with the Légion d'Honneur. Field Marshal Sir Henry Wilson declared of him that "Billy's was the finest record of the war."

Seven weeks before his death he went to London on a ten days' leave and married Pamela, daughter of Cyril Maude (now the Hon. Mrs. William Fraser). She has written a brief memoir of him which is all the more touching for its restraint and which she prefaces with a sonnet by H. V. Macnaghten, "Billy's" old schoolmaster at Eton—a sonnet so fine that it deserves inclusion in some future "Golden Treasury"—

Dream not of him that he is safe, being dead.
He sought no safety, living free from fear;
Nor count him happy that the day is here
Which sets a garland on the victor's head.
Say not of him that never tears were shed
For brighter promise, certitude more clear
Of that supremacy which men hold dear;
Say rather, others followed where he led.

Say that with earnest eyes and will untiring
He sets another battle in array,
Always the same glad confidence inspiring,
Ever the foremost on the perilous way,
No other guerdon of the night desiring
Than fronting danger at the dawn of day.

Books on the Roman Question

> eign Pope. No man can know the measures by which God will preserve the independence of His Church. We can await the future with confidence, certain that the Divine Providence will preserve the 'spiritual authority of Rome until the awful day when Christ Himself will take the place of His Vicar.

The foregoing sentiment colors, but not unnaturally, this very entertaining digest of the history of the Papacy from its pagan and Jewish origins until the present day. If non-Catholics may be inclined to censure the author for what they imagine are omissions they can find nothing tangible which will offend their intelligence in what he commits to his pages. It must be remembered that in all ages the enemies of the Church and the Papacy have been better documented than the objects of their attacks, and that no Pope suffered more from this injustice than Alexander VI. Because of it and the legends and gossip inspired by it few have the patience to try to understand the political project of both the Pope and his son Caesar, for a united Italy free from foreign domination and a universal Church immune to the intrigues of trans-Alpine monarchs. The mere failure of their project had almost as great an influence on the Peninsula for the next three centuries as did the French Revolution and the Napoleonic invasions for one century.

The episode in the history of the Church, its triumph and fall in the Middle Ages and the first century of the Renaissance, which Signor Bagnani expounds in scarcely fourteen pages, Professor Flick demonstrates through 871. Professor Flick, former Professor of European History at Syracuse University, has been gathering material for years through correspondence with Professors Nippold of Jena, Loofs of Halle, Hauck of Leipzig and Harnack of Berlin and visits to the Royal Library of Berlin, the Vatican Library, the National Library at Paris and the British Museum. And yet so well has Signor Bagnani sifted his material and codified his evidence that their conclusions are frequently identical. A whole chapter in Flick may often be fixed in the memory by a single sentence in Bagnani. By weighing the latter's postulates with the former's authorities and arguments covering the thirteenth and fifteenth centuries a delightful preoccupation is offered the student. A suggestion may only be given here:

The historical stage on which the drama of the decline of the temporal and spiritual authority and power of the Church was to be played—from the "Babylonian Captivity" through the Reformation—had a vast setting. At the end of the thirteenth century the ecclesiastical empire of Rome was the widest in territory, the largest in administration that had ever been obtained by any Pontiff. When Boniface VIII was elected in 1294, to quote Professor Flick, > the Medieval Church had attained the extreme limits of its power. Its dogma had been elaborated and accepted, its canon law had been developed and generally enforced, its hierarchical machinery for governmental purposes had been completed and was in full operation. The complete sway of the papal monarchy over the Church had been universally recognized and the right of the Pope to interfere in the affairs of the European States had been established.

And it may be added that, in secular events, the empire had been crushed and a new nationalism had arisen in France. Signor Bagnani writes:

> The conflict between Boniface VIII and Philip IV of France was the first conflict of the universal Church with the new nationalism, and the defeat of the Church was sudden and complete. Neither the Pope nor the King are figures capable of evoking much personal sympathy; in the actual controversy the Pope was perhaps less completely in the wrong than his antagonist, yet the tactics which he adopted, the tactics of his predecessors, at once revealed the weakness of his position. Had the empire been vigorous it might have curbed the ambition of the French sovereign.

In introducing his narrative dealing with the same subject Professor Flick gives copious biographical notes on the protagonists, and then writes:

> The inauguration of Boniface VIII looked propitious, but troublous times were ahead. He found the papacy at the height of its power; he died leaving it humbled and weak. His ideals were as lofty as those of Hildebrand; his ambitious pretensions to authority as great as those of Innocent III. He stood confidently on the ground tilled by the former and sowed by the latter, but his harvest was a failure. The causes for the decline of papal power during his pontificate are quite clear and easily explained.

Then with a well-annotated text covering forty pages he proceeds to explain them and practicaly arrives at Signor Bagnani's identical conclusion. The authors are less in unison, however, on their conceptions of the causes which led to the Reformation. The Italian historian writes:

> It is a great mistake to consider the Reformation as a consequence of the corruption and abuses in the Church. The Church had been corrupt before and has been corrupt since; in every age there have been rigorists who, with more or less reason, have denounced the corruption of the Church and the clergy. * * *

Luther, he adds might have "stood out as the champion of all oppression" and have "raised the standard of human freedom," and so one might "extend even to him that respectful admiration with which one regards Zwingli as he awaits death in the front rank of the Zurich battle array."

> But Luther hedged; and finally, while indulging in vain and hypocritical platitudes about justice, oppression and violence, threw in his lot with the princes and placed the moral force of the Reformation at the service of despotism. * * * The union of Protestantism and autocracy was celebrated by the massacre of 150,000 peasants, and ten years later the Protestant powers completed their work by exterminating the Anabaptists and restoring Münster to its prince-bishop. It was possible to serve both God and Mammon.

> the name given to the period of ecclesiastical history from 1378 [the end of the "Babylonian Captivity"] to 1417—an epoch of nearly forty years—during which there was a serious disagreement in Western Europe about the true headship of the Church. For thirty-two years there were two rival claimants to the papal throne—one at Rome, the other at Avignon—each one claiming to be the divinely appointed and constitutionally chosen successor of St. Peter; each with his own college of cardinals and extensive papal court; each with loyal supporters among the States and peoples of Europe; each sending his appointees to every vacant office in the Church; each attempting to raise large sums of money from all Christendom to meet his heavy expenses; and each fulminating bulls against the other as usurper and anti-Christ with all the harsh epithets found in the rich ecclesiastical dictionary of that day.

To Professor Flick the German Reformation becomes merely a historical episode, necessary and inevitable, in the advancement of civilization, and although a protest against papal Christianity, nevertheless, was rather a basis for that institution's renaissance than a step in its decay. Naturally, the two authors are further apart in dealing with the so-called Reformation in England and with Henry VIII, who, while repudiating the secular authority of Popes revived the liturgy of the ancient Apostolic Church, but neither "protested" nor "reformed."

To Signor Bagnani the Great Western Schism was as incidental to the history of the Church as in the eyes of Professor Flick the Reformation was in the history of the world. Neither see eye-to-eye. The former jeers at the "presumption" of Protestants to make the Bible a vehicle of popular contemplation and conduct, and draws a distinction between the theological equipment of "the scholars and humanists" who "were the real reformers," and that of those who produced the Reformation, or, in his words, the Revolution. He ascribes the "saving" of the Church to "the spiritual and still more the political circumstances of the time"—elements which, in the eyes of the New York historian, account for the very "Revolution" of which the Italian historian complains. Probably the revival of learning of that age, in its classical, theological, philosophical, and material aspects, was measurably responsible for both.

It is possible, even probable, that the State historian of New York has produced the most comprehensive, well-balanced, and best documented work ever written on the subject. His documents reveal with conspicuous lucidity the political, social and economic, as well as the executive, judicial and legislative, aspects of the administration of the Church, both at Rome and at Avignon. His masterly method of coordination, demonstration and argument is well connotated by the scheme of his tables of contents.

A FRENCH DIAGNOSIS OF AMERICA

"Pertinax" Visits Us, Feels Our Pulse, Measures Our Blood Pressure and Decides That Ours Is a "Malady of Youth" Which Is but a Passsing Phase of a Rapidly Growing Civilization

Andre Geraud, "Pertinax" of French journalism, an expert on international affairs, recently toured the United States. He writes his impressions in the article which follows.

By ANDRE GERAUD ("Pertinax")

THE new book by Georges Duhamel, "Scenes From the Life of the Future," has fallen into my hands just as I return from the United States. Never has a more vehement statement for the prosecution been launched against American civilization. It is a useful book for a traveler who is drawing up an inventory of his impressions, still altogether fresh, and of his reflections, still shifting and uncertain. The traveler is aided in his work of synthesis, for this book includes everything that can be said against the United States.

Do I agree, or do I not agree, with Georges Duhamel, and if not, why?

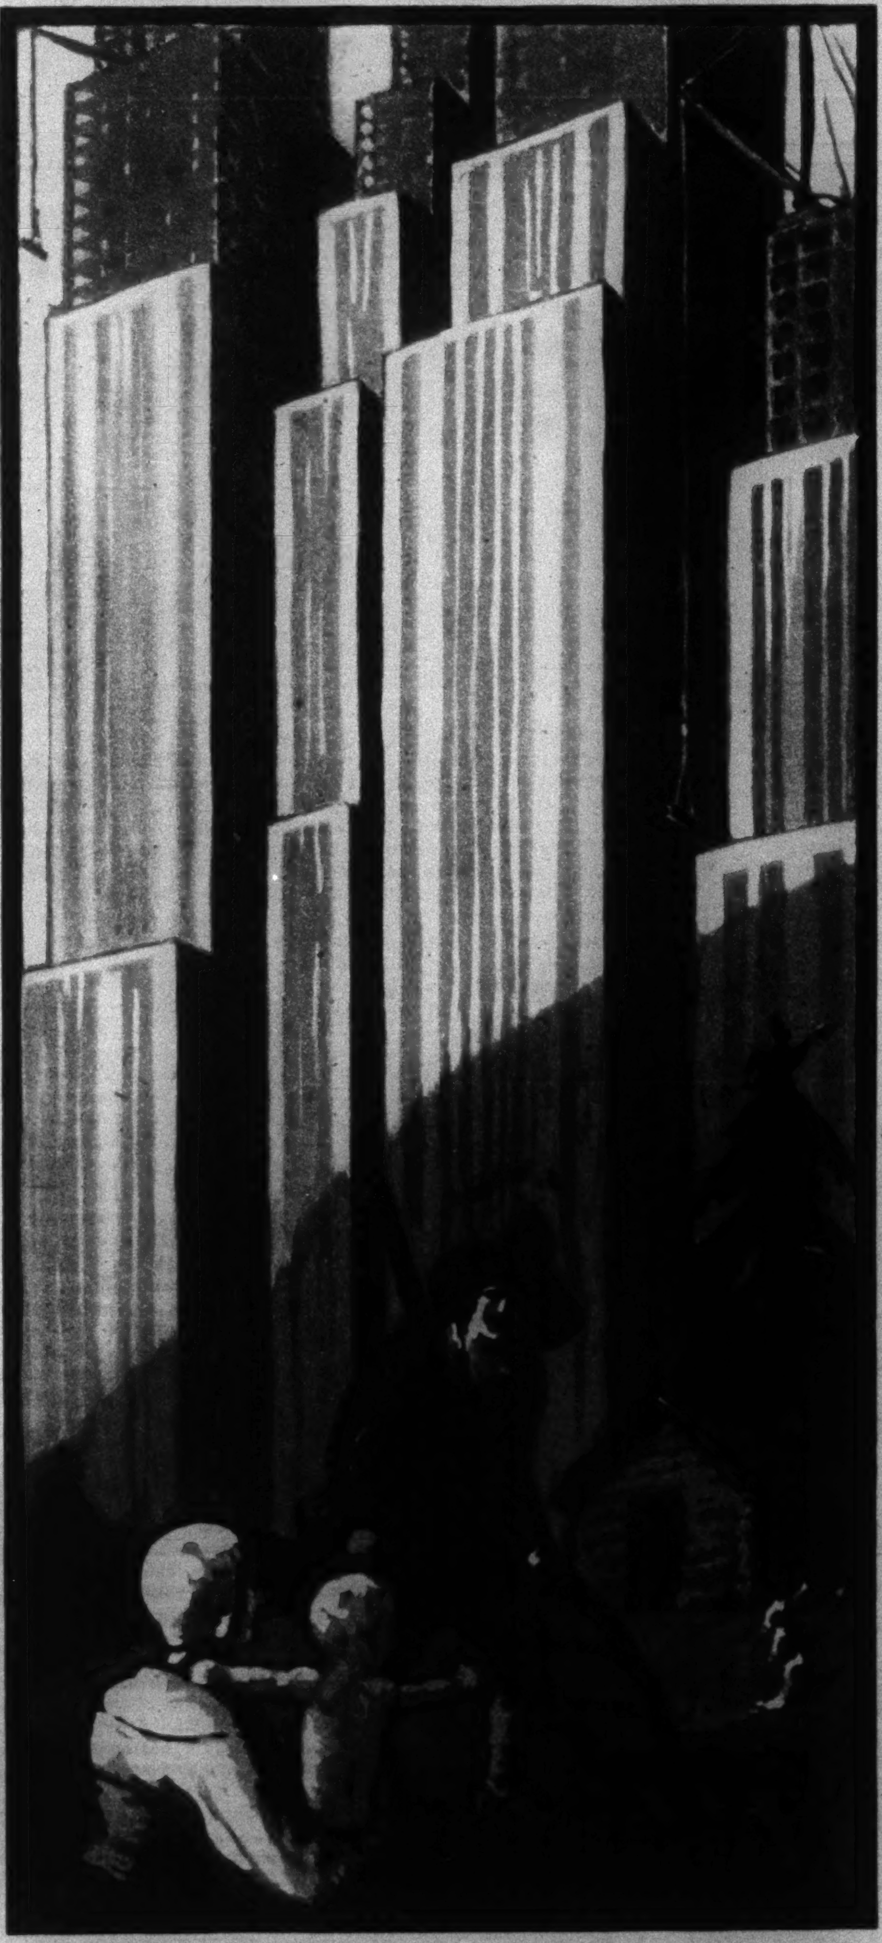
To him the United States stands for all that can be given by a material civilization carried very far but divorced from what he calls moral civilization, that is, the most intense and the freest life of the spirit. Between material civilization and moral civilization, the war of 1914 marked a first separation. The triumph of American materialism, which visibly spreads itself over the planet and teaches others, deepened the abyss.

The author sets forth in detail all those things on the other side of the ocean which offended and depressed him, the heir of an old race, and an old spiritual tradition—100,000,000 men striving for industrial and commercial productions, accustoming themselves to millions of machines, measuring their well-being by purely material standards, driving forward like a brute force, losing little by little in the process those individual traits which normally bring it about that no two men resemble each other exactly, and having nothing to show by way of culture and idealism but some conventional phrases and sentences. On the whole, a society already senile and decadent despite its reputation for youth!

To finish the picture, Georges Duhamel adds that the image presented today by the American people will be before long that of all peoples, swept on irresistibly in imitation of them. Thus, what we find on the other side of the Atlantic is the appearance and the future portrait of European decadence. Therefore he boldly entitles his book "Scenes From the Life of the Future."

No, I cannot associate myself with this reasoning nor bind myself to this thesis. Of course there does exist for a Frenchman, and doubtless for a European, an American sadness. In America, for example, a European experiences a feeling without analogy in the Old World—solitude in time. We are so accustomed, when we penetrate into an unknown city, to search out its monuments, to read its annals going back two or three thousand years, and even when we merely go into the country, to stop before an ancient church, to visit a château several centuries old, or to stand in awe before an ancient tomb, that we feel ourselves disconcerted and ill at east amid these conglomerations born but yesterday which almost all make it a point of honor never to save anything of the past, brief at best, and seem even to escape from that with satisfaction.

By reason of this almost complete absence of the witnesses to past ages, perhaps also by reason of the English language—spoken from one end to the other of the great Republic, but which, however peculiar the American accent, however numerous the turns of speech and original expressions, has not the full value of a national language serving no other people—the American community, to our minds, does not detach itself with its traits so clear, so continuous, so constant and so stable as Germans, Italians, Spanish, Russians or British. We have the feeling of having to deal with an unknown quantity which escapes our ordinary concepts, eludes and deceives us.



"It Is the First Society, or Even the First Race, That We Have Seen Born and Growing Up."

To be sure, in books and newspapers of which we avail ourselves is found that philosophic and democratic rationalism of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries which is familiar to us. But we feel very well that this is a vehicle for transporting other things than those we are putting in it. Finally, the extreme development of urban life and the use of machines, carried further than elsewhere, added to the primordial fact that the inhabitants of America have never passed through the stage of a provincial life and a closely confined rural existence, that they have never had manners, customs, ideas, trades and dialects differing from one district to another, and that they have got rid of their European traditions—all these things, to our mind, create what one may call a great human monotony. How little are the types and ways of living differentiated in this new land! In France it is a great pleasure to travel from one department to another; everything changes rapidly—the appearance of men and houses, the ways of self-expression and even the food. In America, for the foreign observer, nothing seems to vary. That is the American sadness, as the Frenchman may experience it. Doubtless Georges Duhamel has begun with these premises.

But, on the other hand, the charm of America cannot be mistaken. It is the first society, or even the first race, that we have seen born and growing up. The others were formed too far back in the mists of history for our eyes to be able to reach them. Is a Rome of the West arising? Or are we in the presence of a gigantic bubble? Will it bring to us an entirely new form, or will it mold itself in types already realized? The uncertainty of the speculation renders the spectacle absorbing. In the meantime how many strong and sometimes cultivated personalities throw off the surrounding servitude with a shrug of the shoulders! What compelling optimism! What collective movements! In the universities like Princeton an élite comparable with the finest youth of Oxford! And at moments what beauty in those high walls of New York and Chicago which form landscapes!

The worst error, doubtless, is to imagine that the New World has said its last word, that it will not evolve out of the forms which we now see. These forms have nothing rigid about them and even the economic and financial structures are not above being brought into question. What signifies the present crisis in which industrial and commercial America is struggling, if not that the philosophy of production and consumption built up since the war has, up to a certain point, been thrown out of joint and that certain fundamental principles perhaps require revision and correction?

"We must destroy everything and rebuild," a banker said to me. The history of America is not ending, it is beginning. Perhaps in time America will gain that enrichment of the human spirit which comes from great diversity of experience and gives the prize to the unfortunate—that enrichment which its too narrow, too uniform and too rapid fortune has thus

Little ways to lighten housework with Patapar

Cook vegetables in their own juices . . .

Place prepared vegetables on a sheet of moistened Patapar. Add seasonings (butter, salt, pepper, etc.) Tie up corners to form a bag and place in ordinary pot of boiling water. The seasonings cook right into the food. Delicious!

Three in one pot . .

Rinse and hang up to dry . . .

Remember, Patapar is insoluble. Don't throw a good sheet away. You can use it again and again.

ON this page you will note several ways in which Patapar helps lighten housework. It really is a wonderful help around the kitchen.

Are you discouraged with the problem of keeping lettuce fresh? Try this. Clean the lettuce in the cool of the morning. Wrap it in a moistened sheet of Patapar, and place in the refrigerator. The Patapar will keep it moist, delicate, fresh all day. When you are ready to serve it, the lettuce will be clean, crisp and cold.

Patapar is also most useful as a working surface. Just spread it out on the kitchen table. Prepare your meats, salads, cakes, pastries, on it. Then lift the sheet by the corner. Tip the waste into the refuse can, rinse the Patapar off, and your cleaning up is finished. No scrubbing of the kitchen table.

On picnics too, Patapar is a regular pal. It is splendid for wrapping luncheons, especially the salads, cold meats, pickles, butter, and all moist foods. Full sized sheets serve as table covers. Smaller pieces may be used as doilies.

Buy a package of Patapar tomorrow and see how quickly it becomes an indispensable help around the kitchen. Ask at your favorite grocery, delicatessen, meat, drug, house-furnishing, or department store.

Patapar comes ten large sheets to the package. Costs only 35c a package (40c Denver to Pacific Coast and in Canada). In each package you will discover a 24-page illustrated booklet telling all about its many uses.

Foods keep fresh when wrapped in Patapar . . .

Anne Pierce, widely known food expert, tells you, in this booklet, many ways to make housework easier with Patapar. It comes free in every package.

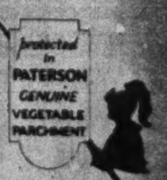
At the better shops foods are being wrapped in Paterson Vegetable Parchment

Retail meat dealers are discovering the advantages of Paterson Vegetable Parchment as a wrapping sheet. Like Patapar it is insoluble. Grease or moisture have no effect on it. When you open a package of steak wrapped this way you will find that the Paterson Vegetable Parchment peels away cleanly in one piece. That is why the food comes to you so fresh, so pure, so appetizing.

Ask your butcher, grocer, or delicatessen merchant to use this better wrapper. He will give you this service if he knows you appreciate the difference.

This keymark will guide you to the best-protected foods



Over a thousand packers and retailers of meats, fish, vegetables, butter and ice cream are showing this keymark on their wrappers. This is their signal to let you know how perfectly their foods are protected. Be on the lookout for the keymark on the wrappers of the products you buy. It will guide you instantly to the best protected foods.

far refused to give it. Let us never forget that it is scarcely fifteen years since European emigrants were still pressing in floods into the American melting pot. How could a mixture so recently formed display all its substance, bring to light all its possibilities? How many ages were needed for the French mixture to attain to the full vigor of national history, to give birth to a nation endowed with definite characteristics? America is probably only at her first chapter.

When one goes to the bottom of things, one discovers at final accounting that the American people, in our eyes, err through the excessive mechanization of life—a mechanization which reduces enthusiasm, depth, savor and distinction. Let it be said en passant that it remains to be proved that the loss suffered by the élite does not find its compensation in the relief and the enlargement of the destiny of the greatest number. One may not agree to the satisfaction of this compensation, one may argue that a type of civilization producing great intellects, great artists, princes of the spirit, is preferable to a type of civilization which sacrifices these summits to the establishment of a general high average of material well-being. But that is not the question. Whether one approves or does not approve of this evolution of society, the question is to know whether America is especially responsible for it. Well, one cannot seriously allege that her methods and organization are isolated phenomena in the universe. Everywhere mass production is being established and proving itself and gigantic cities are growing up.

The only originality of the United States lies in the small resistance of individuals because among Americans individuals have not been formed in the mold of a slow rural and provincial growth, because they have all been cut on a few models and these always the same. But the Old World is swept along by the same currents as the New; some parts of it, such as Russia, breaking with their traditions more rapidly than the others and rushing more quickly down the slope. One hardly knows how to mention them—here an invention, there an imitation. And we can scarcely guess either what will be the last stages of this great change of which we are complaining or which civilization, American or European, will endure the test with the more success. In any case it is amusing to see Socialists and socializers denouncing America as the instigator of a movement which on their old stamping ground they never cease to precipitate with all their might so that, in sum, the "Scenes of the Life of the Future" of M. Duhamel might also be called, in certain respects, "Scenes From the Socialist Life."

DURING my sojourn in the United States certain signs of youth and strength—currently interpreted among us as signs of disillusionment and decadence — impressed me keenly. Some were relative to the financial and economic crisis. The others to the business called prohibition and all that has followed it.

The financial and economic crisis is often represented by French and English as putting at stake the very foundations of the prosperity of the United States. That something of envy and jealousy is manifest in this view cannot be doubted. When one great nation has dazzled the others by the spectacle of its superior riches, when it has turned them upside down, embarrassed and annoyed them by the action of its diplomacy, voices are easily raised when that nation shows weakness or faintness to cry out the words of Isaiah:

In truth, the America of 1930 possesses the same elements of prosperity as the America of 1928 and the first half of 1929; there is no need to enumerate them for American readers. What is it, then, that has broken down since nine months ago? Simply a great illusion—the illusion that the progressive increase of wealth registered in the period 1924-1929 would continue in the same rhythm, that the bold expectations of the companies paying out dividends increased 17.2 per cent on the average in the years 1922-29, that the still bolder expectations of the speculators, agreeing to pay for stocks on the basis of calculated profits over a period of five or ten years without any regard for ordinary limits, would be justified in the end. There is the dream, that is shattered or impaired.
